On December 15, 2011, Fitch Ratings ("Fitch") downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Fitch's decision to lower its "support floor" for systemically important U.S. financial institutions On November 29, 2011, Standard & Poor's Ratings Services ("S&P") downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of S&P's implementation of revised methodologies for determining Banking Industry Country Risk Assessments and bank ratings On September 21, 2011, Moody's Investors Service, Inc ("Moody's") downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Moody's lowering the amount of uplift for potential U S government support it incorporates into ratings. On February 15, 2012, Moody's placed Bank of America's long-term debt ratings on review for possible downgrade as part of their review of financial institutions with global capital markets operations Any adjustment to Bank of America's (and consequently, our) ratings will be determined based on Moody's review; however, the agency offered guidance that downgrades to Bank of America's ratings, if any, would likely be limited to one notch

Currently, Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks expressed by the rating agencies are as follows Baa1/P-2 (negative) by Moody's, A-/A-2 (negative) by S&P; and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch The rating agencies could make further adjustments to Bank of America's (and consequently, our) credit ratings at any time and there can be no assurance that additional downgrades will not occur

Under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements, in the event of a downgrade of our credit ratings or certain subsidiaries' credit ratings, counterparties to those agreements may require us or certain subsidiaries to provide additional collateral, terminate these contracts or agreements, or provide other remedies.

For information regarding the risks associated with adverse changes in our credit ratings, see "Executive Overview - Other Events - Transactions with Affiliates", "Funding and Liquidity - Credit Ratings", Note 6 to the Consolidated Financial Statements, and Item 1A "Risk Factors" of this Annual Report on Form 10-K

Retirement of Certain Debt Instruments

As credit spreads for many financial institutions, including Merrill Lynch, have widened during the past year due to uncertainty and volatility in the global financial markets, the fair value of debt previously issued by financial institutions has decreased. This uncertainty in the market, evidenced by, among other things, volatility in credit spreads, makes it economically advantageous to consider purchasing and retiring certain of our outstanding debt instruments. In 2012, we completed a tender offer to purchase and retire certain subordinated notes for approximately $1 2 billion in cash and will consider additional purchases in the future depending upon prevailing market conditions, liquidity and other factors. If the purchase of any debt instruments are at an amount less than the carrying value, such purchases would be accretive to earnings

European Union Sovereign Credit Risks

Certain European countries, including Greece, Ireland, Italy, Portugal and Spain, continue to experience varying degrees of financial stress Uncertainty in the progress of debt restructuring negotiations and the lack of a clear resolution to the crisis has led to continued volatility in European as well as global financial markets, and if the situation worsens, may further adversely affect these markets. In December 2011, the European Central Bank (the "ECB") announced initiatives to address European bank liquidity and funding concerns by providing low-cost, three-year loans to banks, and expanding collateral eligibility While reducing systemic risk, there remains considerable uncertainty as to future developments regarding the European debt crisis In early 2012, S&P, Fitch and Moody's downgraded the credit ratings of several European countries, and S&P downgraded the credit rating of the European Financial Stability Facility (the "EFSF"), adding to concerns about investor appetite for continued support in stabilizing the affected countries. Our total sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to Greece, Italy, Ireland, Portugal and Spain was $2 7 billion at December 31, 2011. Our total net sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to these countries was $1 1 billion at December 31, 2011, after taking into account net credit default protection. At December 31, 2011, the fair value of net credit default protection purchased was $1.6 billion. Losses could still result because our credit protection contracts pay out only under certain scenarios. For further discussion of our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures in Europe, see Item 7A "Quantitative and Qualitative Disclosures About Market Risk - Credit Risk Management" and for more information about the risks associated with our non-sovereign exposures in Europe, see Item 1A. "Risk Factors"

Project New BAC

Project New BAC is a two-phase, enterprise-wide initiative to simplify and streamline workflows and processes, align businesses and expenses more closely with Bank of America's overall strategic plan and operating principles, and increase revenues Phase 1 evaluations, which were completed in September 2011, focused on Bank of America's consumer businesses and related support, technology and operations functions. Phase 2 evaluations began in October 2011 and are focused on businesses and related support, technology and operations functions not subject to evaluation in Phase 1. Phase 2 evaluations are expected to continue through April 2012.

Implementation of Phase 1 recommendations began in late 2011. Reductions in the areas subject to evaluation for Phase 2 have not yet been fully identified, and accordingly, potential cost savings are currently uncertain, however, they are expected to be lower than Phase 1. All aspects of New BAC are expected to be implemented by the end of 2014.

When reductions in employment levels associated with the implementation of New BAC are probable of occurring and the amounts can be reasonably estimated, the associated severance costs will be recognized. There were no material expenses related to New BAC recorded in the year ended December 31, 2011.

For further information about the risks associated with New BAC, see Item 1A. "Risk Factors"

U.K. Corporate Income Tax Rate Change

On July 19, 2011, the U K. 2011 Finance Bill was enacted, which reduced the corporate income tax rate As a result of the reduction, we recorded a charge of $774 million due to the remeasurement of our U K. net deferred tax assets. For additional information, see "Results of Operations - Year Ended December 31, 2011 Compared With Year Ended December 31, 2010."

U.K. Bank Levy

The U K government bank levy legislation was enacted on July 19, 2011 The rate on banks operating in the U K has been set at 7 5 basis points ("bps") for short-term liabilities and 3 75 bps for long-term liabilities for 2011 and will increase to 8 8 bps for short-term liabilities and 4 4 bps for long-term liabilities beginning in 2012 The cost of the bank levy was approximately $53 million for 2011, which is non-deductible for U K. tax purposes.

Financial Reform Act

The Financial Reform Act, which was signed into law on July 21, 2010, enacts sweeping financial regulatory reform and has altered and will continue to alter the way in which we conduct certain businesses, increase our costs and reduce our revenues Many aspects of the Financial Reform Act remain subject to final rulemaking and will take effect over several years, making it difficult to anticipate the precise impact on Merrill Lynch, our customers or the financial services industry

Limitations on Proprietary Trading

On October 11, 2011, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (the "Federal Reserve"), the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (the "OCC"), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (the "FDIC") and the SEC, representing four of the five regulatory agencies charged with promulgating regulations implementing limitations on proprietary trading as well as the sponsorship of or investment in hedge funds and private equity funds (the "Volcker Rule") established by the Financial Reform Act, released for comment proposed implementing regulations On January 11, 2012, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (the "CFTC"), the fifth agency, released for comment its proposed regulations under the Volcker Rule The proposed regulations include clarifications to the definition of proprietary trading and distinctions between permitted and prohibited activities. The comment period for the first regulations proposed ended on February 13, 2012 and the comment period for the CFTC regulations will end in March 2012 However, in light of the complexity of the proposed regulations and the large volume of comments received (the proposal requested comments on over 1,300 questions on 400 different topics), it is not possible to predict the content of the final regulations or when they will be issued

The statutory provisions of the Volcker Rule will become effective on July 21, 2012, whether or not the final regulations are adopted, and it gives certain financial institutions two years from the effective date, with opportunities for additional extensions, to bring activities and investments into compliance Although we exited our stand-alone proprietary trading business as of June 30, 2011 in anticipation of the Volcker Rule and further to our initiative to optimize our balance sheet, the ultimate impact of the Volcker Rule on us remains uncertain However, based upon the content of the proposed regulations, it is possible that the implementation of the Volcker Rule could limit or restrict our remaining trading activities Implementation of the Volcker Rule could also limit or restrict our ability to sponsor and hold ownership interests in hedge funds, private equity funds and other subsidiary operations, increase our operational and compliance costs, reduce our trading revenues and adversely affect our results of operations. For additional information about our trading business, see "Results of Operations - Year Ended December 31, 2011 Compared With Year Ended December 31, 2010."

Derivatives

The Financial Reform Act includes measures to broaden the scope of derivative instruments subject to regulation by requiring clearing and exchange trading of certain derivatives, imposing new capital, margin, reporting, registration and business conduct requirements for certain market participants, and imposing position limits on certain OTC derivatives The Financial Reform Act required regulators to promulgate the rulemakings necessary to implement these regulations by July 16, 2011 However, the rulemaking process was not completed as of this date, and is not expected to conclude until well into 2012 Further, the regulators granted temporary relief from certain requirements that would have taken effect on July 16, 2011 absent any rulemaking The SEC temporary relief is effective until final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The CFTC temporary relief is effective until the earlier of July 16, 2012 or the date on which final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The ultimate impact of these derivatives regulations, and the time it will take to comply, continues to remain uncertain. The final regulations will impose additional operational and compliance costs on us and may require us to restructure certain businesses, thereby negatively impacting our revenues and results of operations.

The Financial Reform Act will continue to have a significant and negative impact on our earnings through revenue reductions, higher costs and new restrictions, as well as reductions to available capital The ultimate impact of the Financial Reform Act on our businesses and results of operations will depend on regulatory interpretation and rulemaking, as well as the success of any of our actions to mitigate the negative earnings impact of certain provisions

Transactions with Affiliates

The terms of certain of our OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements provide that upon the occurrence of certain specified events, such as a change in our credit ratings, we may be required to provide additional collateral or to provide other remedies, or our counterparties may have the right to terminate or otherwise diminish our rights under these contracts or agreements Following the recent downgrade of our and other non-bank affiliates' credit ratings, we have engaged in discussions with certain derivative and other counterparties regarding their rights under these agreements. In response to counterparties' inquiries and requests, we have discussed and in some cases substituted derivative contracts and other trading agreements, including naming our affiliate, Bank of America, N A ("BANA") as the new counterparty Our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements to meet counterparties' requests may be subject to certain limitations, including counterparty willingness, regulatory limitations on naming BANA as the new counterparty, and the type or amount of collateral required. It is possible that such limitations on our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements, including naming BANA as the new counterparty, could adversely affect our results of operations

Other Matters

Bank of America and Merrill Lynch have established guidelines and policies for managing capital across their respective subsidiaries The guidance for our subsidiaries with regulatory capital requirements, including branch operations of banking subsidiaries, requires each entity to maintain satisfactory capital levels In the U K , the Financial Services Authority (the "FSA") has issued proposed rules requiring the submission of significant information about certain U.K. incorporated subsidiaries (including information on intra-group dependencies and legal entity separation) to allow the FSA to develop resolution plans. As a result of the FSA review, we could be required to take certain actions over the next several years, which could impose operational costs and potentially could result in the restructuring of certain businesses and subsidiaries

Consolidated Results of Operations

Our net loss for the year ended December 31, 2011 was $1.7 billion compared with net earnings of $3.8 billion for the year ended December 31, 2010. Net revenues for 2011 were $24.3 billion compared with $27.8 billion in 2010.

Principal transactions revenues include both realized and unrealized gains and losses on trading assets and trading liabilities and investment securities classified as trading. Principal transactions revenues were $5.9 billion for the year ended December 31, 2011 compared with $7.1 billion for the year ended December 31, 2010. The decrease primarily reflected lower trading revenues across most of our businesses as compared with the prior year, primarily in our mortgage, credit and rates and currencies businesses, as well as a decline in proprietary trading revenues due to the exit of our stand-alone proprietary trading business. Market conditions were generally difficult throughout 2011 as a result of concerns over global and U.S. economic conditions, regulatory uncertainty and the implications of the European sovereign debt crisis. Such conditions contributed to heightened market volatility and increased risk aversion among investors. Revenues from mortgage products declined as a result of losses due to the difficult market conditions that existed during the year ended December 31, 2011, as well as from credit valuation adjustments related to financial guarantors. Revenues from credit products decreased and reflected the more difficult trading environment in 2011, including widening credit spreads, significant levels of volatility in the credit markets and decreased liquidity and client activity as a result of the European sovereign debt crisis. Revenues from rates and currency products declined and were also impacted by the difficult market conditions that existed during the year, including the European sovereign debt crisis and continued concerns about the economic recovery in the U.S. and globally. In addition, as discussed below, principal transaction revenues from proprietary trading declined by $0.8 billion due to the exit of our stand-alone proprietary trading business as of June 30, 2011. These declines in principal transactions revenues were partially offset by an increase in revenue associated with the valuation of certain of our liabilities. In the year ended December 31, 2011, we recorded net gains of $2.0 billion due to the impact of the widening of Merrill Lynch's credit spreads on the carrying value of certain of our long-term debt liabilities, primarily structured notes, as compared with net losses of $0.1 billion from such long-term debt liabilities recorded in the year ended December 31, 2010 due to the narrowing of our credit spreads. In addition, we recorded revenues of $0.5 billion in the year ended December 31, 2011 due to valuation adjustments associated with the consideration of our own creditworthiness in the fair value of certain derivative liabilities, an increase of $0.4 billion from the prior year as our credit spreads widened during 2011.

Included in principal transactions revenues are net revenues associated with activities we have identified as "proprietary trading," which was conducted separately from our customer trading activities. Our stand-alone proprietary trading operations engaged in trading activities in a variety of products, including stocks, bonds, currencies and commodities. In response to developments relating to the Volcker Rule, we have exited our stand-alone proprietary trading business as of June 30, 2011. The revenues from these operations for the year ended December 31, 2011 were $442 million, of which $418 million were included within principal transactions revenues. The revenues from these operations for the year ended December 31, 2010 were $1.4 billion, of which $1.2 billion were included within principal transactions revenues. The remainder of the revenues for these operations were primarily recorded within net interest revenues. See also "Executive Overview - Other Events - Financial Reform Act - Limitations on Proprietary Trading."

Net interest income (expense) is a function of (i) the level and mix of total assets and liabilities, including trading assets, deposits, financing and lending transactions, and trading strategies associated with our businesses, and (ii) the prevailing level, term structure and volatility of interest rates. Net interest income (expense) is an integral component of trading activity. In assessing the profitability of our client facilitation and trading activities, we view principal transactions and net interest income (expense) in the aggregate as net trading revenues. Changes in the composition of trading inventories and hedge positions can cause the mix of principal transactions and net interest income (expense) to fluctuate from period to period. Net interest expense was $782 million for the year ended December 31, 2011 as compared with net interest expense of $318 million in the year ended December 31, 2010. The increase in net interest expense was primarily due to lower net interest revenues generated from our trading activities, partially offset by lower financing costs.

Commissions revenues primarily arise from agency transactions in listed and OTC equity securities and commodities and options. Commissions revenues also include distribution fees for promoting and distributing mutual funds. Commissions revenues were $5.7 billion for the year ended December 31, 2011, a decrease of 1% from the prior year. The decline reflected marginally lower revenues from both our global markets and global wealth management businesses.

Managed account and other fee-based revenues primarily consist of asset-priced portfolio service fees earned from the administration of separately managed and other investment accounts for retail investors, annual account fees, and certain other account-related fees. Managed account and other fee-based revenues were $5.2 billion for the year ended December 31, 2011, an increase of 15% from the prior year period. The increase was driven by higher fee-based revenues from our global wealth management activities, reflecting higher levels of fee-based assets from which such revenues are generated as well as increased revenues from fees on new accounts and asset management fees. The increase in fee-based assets was due to both strong client flows into long-term products and market appreciation.

Investment banking revenues include (i) origination revenues representing fees earned from the underwriting of debt, equity and equity-linked securities, as well as loan syndication and commitment fees and (ii) advisory services revenues including merger and acquisition and other investment banking advisory fees Total investment banking revenues were $5 2 billion for the year ended December 31, 2011, a decrease of 3% from the prior year Underwriting revenues decreased 8% to $4 0 billion, largely driven by lower fees from debt capital markets, particularly in leveraged finance Revenues from equity issuances also declined due to difficult market conditions
Revenues from advisory services increased 22% to $1 2 billion Investment banking revenues from transactions involving Bank of America were $322 million in the year ended December 31, 2011 and $212 million in the year ended December 31, 2010

In 2012, our sales and trading revenue and investment banking fees may continue to be adversely affected by lower client activity and challenging market conditions as a result of, among other things, the European sovereign debt crisis, uncertainty regarding the outcome of the evolving domestic regulatory landscape, our credit ratings and market volatility

Earnings from equity method investments include our pro rata share of income and losses associated with investments accounted for under the equity method of accounting. Earnings from equity method investments were $347 million for the year ended December 31, 2011 compared with $898 million for the year ended December 31, 2010 The decrease reflected lower revenues from certain equity method investments, primarily BlackRock, Inc ("BlackRock") In November 2010, we sold a substantial portion of our investment in BlackRock, which reduced our economic interest in BlackRock from approximately 34% to approximately 7%. As a result of this transaction, we no longer accounted for our investment in BlackRock under the equity method Earnings from equity method investments in 2010 included a gain of $90 million associated with this sale Refer to Note 8 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for further information on equity method investments

Intercompany service fee revenues from Bank of America include revenues associated with the provision of certain shared business activities with Bank of America Intercompany service fee revenues from Bank of America were $925 million in the year ended December 31, 2011 compared with $279 million in the prior year The increase was driven by higher fees earned from Bank of America in connection with certain shared brokerage and trading activities

Other revenues include gains and losses on investment securities, including certain available-for-sale securities, gains and losses on private equity investments, and gains and losses on loans and other miscellaneous items Other revenues were $1 8 billion in the year ended December 31, 2011 as compared with $4 3 billion in the year ended December 31, 2010 The decrease included lower gains from certain private equity and other investments, as well as lower gains associated with the sale of certain available-for-sale securities In addition, the results for 2010 included a gain of approximately $600 million associated with the sale of Bloomberg Inc notes to Bank of America These decreases were partially offset by a pre-tax gain of $377 million resulting from the June 2011 sale of our remaining investment in BlackRock

Compensation and benefits expenses were $15 8 billion in the year ended December 31, 2011, an increase of 5% from the prior year period The increase included higher amortization expense associated with stock-based compensation awards, including awards granted to retirement-eligible employees, as compared with the prior year. Salary and other compensation costs also increased, which was related to investments in infrastructure These increases were partially offset by lower incentive-based compensation expense as compared with the prior year, reflecting a decline in net revenues (adjusted for net revenues associated with the impact of changes in our credit spreads on the valuation of certain of our long-term debt and derivative liabilities) The increase was also partially offset by a charge for an incremental U K employer payroll tax that was recorded in 2010 In April 2010, the U K. enacted into law a one-time employer payroll tax on bonuses awarded to employees of applicable banking entities between December 9, 2009 and April 5, 2010 The impact of this tax was approximately $330 million and was included in our compensation and benefits expense for the year ended December 31, 2010

Non-compensation expenses were $13 2 billion in the year ended December 31, 2011 compared with $8 9 billion in the prior year period Non-compensation expenses in 2011 included a $2 7 billion provision for representations and warranties See "Off-Balance Sheet Exposures - Representations and Warranties" for further information Communications and technology expenses were $1.8 billion, a decrease of 11% primarily due to lower costs for technology equipment and systems consulting Brokerage, clearing and exchange fees were $1 1 billion, an increase of 10%, due primarily to higher brokerage and other fees associated with the global markets business. Advertising and market development expenses were $500 million, an increase of 13%, due primarily to higher travel and entertainment and marketing and promotional costs Intercompany service fee expenses from Bank of America were $2.3 billion in the year ended December 31, 2011 compared with $0 5 billion in the prior year Beginning in 2011, Bank of America and Merrill Lynch integrated their methodologies for allocating expenses associated with shared services to their subsidiaries As a result of this integration, during 2011 Merrill Lynch incurred a higher level of intercompany service fees from Bank of America as compared with the prior year Other expenses were $2.3 billion, a decrease of 8% from the prior year The decrease included lower expense associated with non-controlling interests of certain principal investments as well as a prior year loss of $190 million associated with a real estate private equity fund that we deconsolidated during the fourth quarter of 2010, partially offset by higher litigation-related expenses.

The income tax benefit for the year ended December 31, 2011 was $2.9 billion compared with an income tax expense of $147 million for the year ended December 31, 2010, resulting in effective tax rates of 62.8% and 3.8%, respectively. The 2011 effective tax rate was higher than for 2010 as the impact of net tax benefit items described below increased the income tax benefit recorded on the 2011 pre-tax loss whereas for 2010 net tax benefits decreased tax expense recorded on pre-tax income

The income tax rate for 2011 was driven by a $1 0 billion release of the remaining valuation allowance provided for capital loss carryforward tax benefits and a benefit of $593 million for planned realization of previously unrecognized deferred tax assets related to the tax basis in certain subsidiaries These benefits were partially offset by the $774 million charge due to the U K. corporate income tax rate reduction discussed below and by a $258 million charge to establish a valuation allowance for a portion of certain non-U.S. deferred tax assets

The 2010 income tax rate was driven by a $1 7 billion release of a valuation allowance provided for capital loss carryforward tax benefits and recurring tax preference items, partially offset by a $386 million charge for a one percent reduction to the U K. tax rate enacted during 2010

On July 19, 2011, the U.K. 2011 Finance Bill was enacted, which reduced the U.K. corporate income tax rate by one percent to 26% beginning on April 1, 2011, and then to 25% effective April 1, 2012 These rate reductions will favorably affect income tax expense on future U K earnings but also required us to remeasure our U K net deferred tax assets using the lower tax rates As noted above, the income tax expense for 2011 included a $774 million charge for the remeasurement If U K corporate income tax rates were to be reduced to 23% by 2014, as suggested in U K Treasury announcements and assuming no change in the deferred tax asset balance, a charge to income tax expense of approximately $400 million for each one percent reduction in the rate would result in each period of enactment (for a total of approximately $800 million)

Off-Balance Sheet Exposures

As a part of our normal operations, we enter into various off-balance sheet arrangements that may require future payments The table and discussion below outline our significant off-balance sheet arrangements, as well as their future expirations, as of December 31, 2011 Refer to Note 14 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for further information

	Expiration
	Maximum Payout	Less than 1 Year	1 - 3 Years	3 - 5 Years	Over 5 Years
Standby liquidity facilities	$ 761	$ 186	$ 555	$ 1	$ 17
Residual value guarantees	320	—	320	—	—
Standby letters of credit and other guarantees	429	280	99	31	19

Standby Liquidity Facilities

We provide standby liquidity facilities primarily to certain unconsolidated municipal bond securitization variable interest entities ("VIEs") In these arrangements, we are required to fund these standby liquidity facilities if certain contingent events take place (e g , a failed remarketing) and in certain cases if the fair value of the assets held by the VIE declines below the stated amount of the liquidity obligation The potential exposure under the facilities is mitigated by economic hedges and/or other contractual arrangements entered into by Merrill Lynch Refer to Note 9 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for further information

Residual Value Guarantees

At December 31, 2011, residual value guarantees of $320 million consist of amounts associated with certain power plant facilities. Payments under these guarantees would only be required if the fair value of such assets declined below their guaranteed value As of December 31, 2011, no payments have been made under these guarantees and the carrying value of the associated liabilities was not material, as Merrill Lynch believes that the estimated fair value of such assets was in excess of their guaranteed value

Standby Letters of Credit

At December 31, 2011, we provided guarantees to certain counterparties in the form of standby letters of credit in the amount of $0 4 billion

Representations and Warranties

In prior years, Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries, including First Franklin Financial Corporation ("First Franklin"), sold pools of first-lien residential mortgage loans and home equity loans as private-label securitizations (in a limited number of these securitizations, monolines insured all or some of the securities), or in the form of whole loans Most of the loans sold in the form of whole loans were subsequently pooled into private-label securitizations sponsored by the third-party buyer of the whole loans In addition, Merrill Lynch and First Franklin securitized first-lien residential mortgage loans generally in the form of mortgage-backed securities guaranteed by the GSEs In connection with these transactions, Merrill Lynch made various representations and warranties Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in the requirement to repurchase mortgage loans or to otherwise make whole or provide other remedies to the GSEs, whole-loan buyers, securitization trusts or monoline insurers (collectively, "repurchases") In such cases, Merrill Lynch would be exposed to any credit loss on the repurchased mortgage loans after accounting for any mortgage insurance or mortgage guaranty payments that it may receive

Subject to the requirements and limitations of the applicable sales and securitization agreements, these representations and warranties can be enforced by the GSEs, the whole-loan buyer, the securitization trustee, or others as governed by the applicable agreement or, in a limited number of first-lien and home equity securitizations where monoline insurers have insured all or some of the securities issued, by the monoline insurer In the case of loans sold to parties other than the GSEs, the contractual liability to repurchase typically arises only if there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or investors in the loan or of the monoline insurer (as applicable) Contracts with the GSEs do not contain equivalent language

For additional information about accounting for representations and warranties and our representations and warranties claims and exposures, see Note 14 to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Merrill Lynch has vigorously contested any request for repurchase when it has concluded that a valid basis for repurchase does not exist and will continue to do so in the future. Merrill Lynch may reach settlements in the future if opportunities arise on terms it believes to be advantageous to Merrill Lynch

Bank of America BNY Mellon Settlement

On June 28, 2011, Bank of America and certain of its non-Merrill Lynch subsidiaries entered into a settlement agreement (subject to final court approval and certain other conditions) with The Bank of New York Mellon ("BNY Mellon"), as trustee, to resolve, among other claims, all outstanding and potential claims related to alleged representations and warranties breaches (including repurchase claims) with respect to the 525 legacy first-lien and five second-lien non-GSE residential mortgage-backed securitization trusts containing loans principally originated between 2004 and 2008 and for which BNY Mellon acts as trustee or indenture trustee (the "BNY Mellon Settlement") As a result of the experience gained by Bank of America and certain of its non-Merrill Lynch affiliates in the BNY Mellon Settlement, Merrill Lynch determined that it had sufficient experience to record a $2 7 billion liability for representations and warranties related to its repurchase exposure on private-label securitizations in the year ended December 31, 2011

There can be no assurance that final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement will be obtained, that all conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be satisfied or, if certain conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement permitting withdrawal are met, that Bank of America and certain of its non-Merrill Lynch subsidiaries will not determine to withdraw from the settlement. If final court approval is not obtained or if Bank of America and such subsidiaries determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement in accordance with its terms, although Merrill Lynch is not a party to the proceedings, our future representations and warranties losses could be substantially different than existing accruals and the estimated range of possible losses over existing accruals described above. Under an order entered by the court in connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement, potentially interested persons had the opportunity to give notice of an intent to object to the settlement (including on the basis that more information was needed) until August 30, 2011 Approximately 44 groups or entities appeared prior to the deadline, two of those groups or entities have subsequently withdrawn from the proceeding and one motion to intervene was denied Certain of these groups or entities filed notices of intent to object, made motions to intervene or both filed notices of intent to object and made motions to intervene.

An investor opposed to the settlement removed the proceeding to federal court. On October 19, 2011, the federal court denied BNY Mellon's motion to remand the proceeding to state court. BNY Mellon, as well as the investors that have intervened in support of the BNY Mellon Settlement, petitioned to appeal the denial of this motion. On November 4, 2011, the district court entered a written order setting a discovery schedule, and discovery is ongoing. On December 27, 2011, the U S Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit accepted the appeal, and stated in an amended scheduling order that, pursuant to statute, it would rule on the appeal by February 27, 2012.

It is not currently possible to predict how many of the parties who have appeared in the court proceeding will ultimately object to the BNY Mellon Settlement, whether the objections will prevent receipt of final court approval or the ultimate outcome of the court approval process, which can include appeals and could take a substantial period of time. In particular, conduct of discovery and the resolution of the objections to the settlement and any appeals could take a substantial period of time and these factors could materially delay the timing of final court approval Accordingly, it is not possible to predict when the court approval process will be completed.

Outstanding Claims

The table below presents outstanding repurchase claims by counterparty at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010.

Outstanding Claims by Counterparty

GSEs	$ 65	$ 59
Monoline	136	48
Others[1]	1,101	517
Total	$ 1,302	$ 624

(1) The majority of these repurchase claims are from whole-loan buyers of subprime loans or trustees of private-label securitization trusts through which First Franklin sold subprime loans

Of the $1 3 billion of outstanding claims as of December 31, 2011, we believe that for $620 million, a valid defect has not been identified which would constitute an actionable breach of representations and warranties The remaining $682 million of claims are in the process of review

In 2011, we received $665 million of new repurchase claims from whole-loan and private-label securitization investors, predominately from private-label securitization trustees received in the fourth quarter of 2011 These claims from private-label securitization trustees are still in the process of being evaluated, although we believe it is likely that some of the claims will meet the required standards When a claim has been denied and there has not been communication with the counterparty for six months, Merrill Lynch views these claims as inactive, however, they remain in the unresolved claims balance until resolution

As presented in the table below, Merrill Lynch paid $58 million during both the year ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 to resolve $62 million and $68 million, respectively, of repurchase claims through repurchase or indemnification payments to investors, resulting in a loss on the related loans at the time of repurchase or indemnification payment of $48 million in both periods Cash paid for loan repurchases includes the unpaid principal balance of the loan plus past due interest The amount of loss for loan repurchases is reduced by the fair value of the underlying loan collateral The repurchase of loans and indemnification payments related to repurchase claims generally resulted from material breaches of representations and warranties related to the loans' material compliance with the applicable underwriting standards, including borrower misrepresentation, credit exceptions without sufficient compensating factors and non-compliance with underwriting procedures, although the actual representations and warranties made in a sales transaction and the resulting repurchase and indemnification activity can vary by transaction or investor A direct relationship between the type of defect that causes the breach of representations and warranties and the severity of the realized loss has not been observed

Liability for Representations and Warranties

The liability for representations and warranties is included in Interest and other payables on the Consolidated Balance Sheets, and the related provision is included in Non-interest expenses on the Consolidated Statements of (Loss) Earnings. The methodology used to estimate the liability for representations and warranties is a function of the representations and warranties given and considers a variety of factors, which include, depending on the counterparty, actual defaults, estimated future defaults, historical loss experience, estimated home prices, other economic conditions, estimated probability that a repurchase claim will be received, consideration of whether presentation thresholds will be met, number of payments made by the borrower prior to default and estimated probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased as well as other relevant facts and circumstances, such as bulk settlements and identity of the counterparty or type of counterparty, with whom a sale was made. The estimate of the liability for representations and warranties is based on currently available information, significant judgment and a number of factors, including those set forth above, that are subject to change. Changes to any one of these factors could significantly impact the estimate of the liability and could have a material adverse impact on our results of operations for any particular period

At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the liability for representations and warranties was $2.8 billion and $213 million, respectively. As noted above, in the year ended December 31, 2011, we recorded a provision for representations and warranties related to our repurchase exposure on private-label securitizations of $2 7 billion.

Estimated Range of Possible Loss for Non-GSEs

We believe it is probable that additional claimants in certain types of securitizations may come forward with credible claims that meet the requirements of the terms of the securitizations As a result of the BNY Mellon Settlement in the second quarter of 2011, we determined that we had sufficient experience to record a liability related to our exposure on certain private-label securitizations. We believe that with the additional $2 7 billion non-GSE representations and warranties provision recorded in the year ended December 31, 2011, we have provided for a substantial portion of our non-GSE representations and warranties exposures.

However, it is reasonably possible that future representations and warranties losses may occur in excess of the amounts recorded for these exposures In addition, the BNY Mellon Settlement did not provide sufficient experience related to certain private-label securitizations sponsored by third-party whole-loan investors As it relates to certain private-label securitizations sponsored by third-party whole-loan investors and certain whole loan sales, it is not possible to determine whether a loss has occurred or is probable and, therefore, no representations and warranties liability has been recorded in connection with these transactions

We currently estimate that the range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31, 2011 could be up to $0 5 billion over existing accruals. This estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties does not represent a probable loss, and is based on currently available information, significant judgment, and a number of assumptions, including those set forth below, that are subject to change

The methodology used to estimate the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding range of possible loss considers a variety of factors including Merrill Lynch's experience related to actual defaults, projected future defaults, historical loss experience, estimated home prices, other economic conditions and the experience of Merrill Lynch's affiliates Among the factors that impact the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss are (1) contractual material adverse effect requirements, (2) the representations and warranties provided, and (3) the requirement to meet certain presentation thresholds The first factor is based on our belief that a non-GSE contractual liability to repurchase a loan generally arises only if the counterparties prove there is a breach of representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or all investors, or the monoline insurer (as applicable), in a securitization trust and, accordingly, we believe that the repurchase claimants must prove that the alleged representations and warranties breach was the cause of the loss The second factor is related to the fact that non-GSE securitizations include different types of representations and warranties than those provided to the GSEs We believe the non-GSE securitizations' representations and warranties are less rigorous and actionable than the explicit provisions of comparable agreements with the GSEs without regard to any variations that may have arisen as a result of dealings with the GSEs The third factor is related to the fact that certain presentation thresholds need to be met in order for any repurchase claim to be asserted on the initiative of investors under the non-GSE agreements. A securitization trustee may investigate or demand repurchase on its own action, and most agreements contain a threshold, for example 25% of the voting rights per trust, that allows investors to declare a servicing event of default under certain circumstances or to request certain action, such as requesting loan files, that the trustee may choose to accept and follow, exempt from liability, provided the trustee is acting in good faith If there is an uncured servicing event of default, and the trustee fails to bring suit during a 60-day period, then, under most agreements, investors may file suit In addition to this, most agreements also allow investors to direct the securitization trustee to investigate loan files or demand the repurchase of loans, if security holders hold a specified percentage, for example, 25%, of the voting rights of each tranche of the outstanding securities.

Although we continue to believe that presentation thresholds are a factor in the determination of probable loss, given the BNY Mellon Settlement, the estimated range of possible loss assumes that the presentation threshold can be met for all of the non-GSE securitization transactions.

In addition, in the case of private-label securitizations, the methodology used to estimate the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding range of possible loss considers the experience resulting from the BNY Mellon Settlement and assumes that the conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be satisfied Since the non-GSE transactions that were included in the BNY Mellon Settlement differ from those that were not included in the BNY Mellon Settlement, Merrill Lynch adjusted the experience implied in the settlement in order to determine the estimated non-GSE representations and warranties liability and corresponding range of possible loss The judgmental adjustments made include consideration of the differences in the mix of products in the securitizations, loan originator, likelihood of claims differences, the differences in the number of payments that the borrower has made prior to default, and the sponsor of the securitization

Future provisions and/or ranges of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties may be significantly impacted if actual experience is different from our assumptions in our predictive models, including, without limitation, those regarding the ultimate resolution of the BNY Mellon Settlement, estimated repurchase rates, economic conditions, home prices, consumer and counterparty behavior, and a variety of judgmental factors Adverse developments with respect to one or more of the assumptions underlying the liability for representations and warranties and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss could result in significant increases to future provisions and/or this range of possible loss estimate For example, if courts were to disagree with our interpretation that the underlying agreements require a claimant to prove that the representations and warranties breach was the cause of the loss, it could significantly impact this estimated range of possible loss. Additionally, if recent court rulings related to monoline litigation, including one related to an affiliate of ours, that have allowed sampling of loan files instead of requiring a loan-by-loan review to determine if a representations and warranties breach has occurred are followed generally by the courts, private-label securitization investors may view litigation as a more attractive alternative as compared to a loan-by-loan review Finally, although Merrill Lynch believes that the representations and warranties typically given in non-GSE transactions are less rigorous and actionable than those given in GSE transactions, Merrill Lynch does not have significant loan-level experience in non-GSE transactions to measure the impact of these differences on the probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased

The liability for obligations under representations and warranties with respect to GSE and non-GSE exposures and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties exposures do not include any losses related to litigation matters disclosed in Note 14 to the Consolidated Financial Statements, nor do they include any potential securities law or fraud claims or potential indemnity or other claims against us. Merrill Lynch is not able to reasonably estimate the amount of any possible loss with respect to any such securities law (except to the extent reflected in the aggregate range of possible loss for litigation and regulatory matters disclosed in Note 14 to the Consolidated Financial Statements), fraud or other claims against us, however, such loss could be material

Experience with Non-GSE Investors

As presented in the table below, Merrill Lynch, including First Franklin, sold loans originated from 2004 to 2008 (primarily subprime and alt-A) with an original principal balance of $132 billion to investors other than the GSEs (although the GSEs are investors in certain private-label securitizations), of which approximately $62 billion in principal has been paid off and $46 billion has defaulted or is severely delinquent (i.e., 180 days or more past due)

at December 31, 2011

As it relates to private-label securitizations, a contractual liability to repurchase mortgage loans generally arises only if counterparties prove there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or all investors in a securitization trust or of the monoline insurer (as applicable) Merrill Lynch believes that the longer a loan performs, the less likely it is that an alleged representations and warranties breach had a material impact on the loan's performance or that a breach even exists Because the majority of the borrowers in this population would have made a significant number of payments if they are not yet 180 days or more past due, we believe that the principal balance at the greatest risk for repurchase claims in this population of private-label securitization investors is a combination of loans that have already defaulted and those that are currently severely delinquent. Additionally, the obligation to repurchase loans also requires that counterparties have the contractual right to demand repurchase of the loans (presentation thresholds) Private-label securitization investors generally do not have the contractual right to demand repurchase of loans directly or the right to access loan files.

While we believe the agreements for private-label securitizations generally contain less rigorous representations and warranties and place higher burdens on investors seeking repurchases than the explicit provisions of the comparable agreements with the GSEs without regard to any variations that may have arisen as a result of dealings with the GSEs, the agreements generally include a representation that underwriting practices were prudent and customary.

The following table details the population of loans originated between 2004 and 2008 and the population of loans sold as whole loans or in non-GSE private-label securitizations by entity together with the defaulted and severely delinquent loans stratified by the number of payments the borrower made prior to default or becoming severely delinquent at December 31, 2011 In connection with these transactions, we provided representations and warranties, and the whole loan investors may retain those rights even when the whole loans were aggregated with other collateral into private-label securitizations sponsored by the whole loan investors. At least 25 payments have been made on approximately 63% of the defaulted and severely delinquent loans. Merrill Lynch believes many of the defaults observed in these securitizations have been, and continue to be, driven by external factors, such as the substantial depreciation in home prices, persistently high unemployment and other negative economic trends, diminishing the likelihood that any loan defect (assuming one exists at all) was the cause of a loan's default. As of December 31, 2011, approximately 35% of the loans sold to non-GSEs that were originated between 2004 and 2008 have defaulted or are severely delinquent.

(1) Excludes transactions sponsored by Merrill Lynch where no representations or warranties were made

Prior to 2011, the majority of the claims that we received were from third-party whole-loan investors In 2011, we received $665 million of new repurchase claims from whole-loan and private-label securitization investors, predominately from private-label securitization trustees received in the fourth quarter of 2011 In addition, there has been an increase in requests for loan files from private-label securitization trustees We believe it is likely that these requests will lead to an increase in repurchase claims from private-label securitization trustees that meet the required standards.

Legal Matters

Merrill Lynch has been named as a defendant in various legal actions, including arbitrations, class actions, and other litigation arising in connection with its activities as a global diversified financial services institution Refer to Note 14 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for further information, including the estimated aggregate range of possible loss

Derivatives

We record all derivative transactions at fair value on our Consolidated Balance Sheets We do not monitor our exposure to derivatives based on the notional amount because that amount is not a relevant indicator of our risk to these contracts, as it is generally not indicative of the amount that we would owe on the contract. Instead, a risk framework is used to define risk tolerances and establish limits to help to ensure that certain risk-related losses occur within acceptable, predefined limits Derivatives that meet the accounting definition of a guarantee and credit derivatives are included in Note 6 to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Involvement with VIEs

We transact with VIEs in a variety of capacities, including those that we help establish as well as those initially established by third parties We utilize VIEs in the ordinary course of business to support our own and our customers' financing and investing needs. Merrill Lynch securitizes loans and debt securities using VIEs as a source of funding and a means of transferring the economic risk of the loans or debt securities to third parties We also administer, structure or invest in or enter into derivatives with other VIEs, including multi-seller conduits, municipal bond trusts, collateralized debt obligations ("CDOs") and other entities, as described in more detail below Our involvement with VIEs can vary and we are required to continuously reassess prior consolidation and disclosure conclusions Refer to Note 1 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for a discussion of our consolidation accounting policy and for information regarding new VIE accounting rules that became effective on January 1, 2010 Types of VIEs with which we have historically transacted include

- Municipal bond securitization VIEs: VIEs that issue medium-term paper, purchase municipal bonds as collateral and purchase a guarantee to enhance the creditworthiness of the collateral
- Asset-backed securities VIEs: VIEs that issue different classes of debt, from super senior to subordinated, and equity and purchase assets as collateral, including residential mortgages, commercial mortgages, auto leases and credit card receivables
- CDOs: VIEs that issue different classes of debt, from super senior to subordinated, and equity and purchase securities, including asset-backed securities collateralized by residential mortgages, commercial mortgages, auto leases and credit card receivables as well as corporate bonds.
- Synthetic CDOs: VIEs that issue different classes of debt, from super senior to subordinated, and equity, purchase high-grade assets as collateral and enter into a portfolio of credit default swaps to synthetically create the credit risk of the issued debt.
- Credit-linked note VIEs: VIEs that issue notes linked to the credit risk of a company, purchase high-grade assets as collateral and enter into credit default swaps to synthetically create the credit risk to pay the return on the notes
- Trust preferred security VIEs: These VIEs hold junior subordinated debt issued by ML & Co or our subsidiaries, and issue preferred stock on substantially the same terms as the junior subordinated debt to third party investors We also provide a parent guarantee, on a junior subordinated basis, of the distributions and other payments on the preferred stock to the extent that the VIEs have funds legally available The debt we issue into the VIE is classified as long-term borrowings on our Consolidated Balance Sheets The ML & Co parent guarantees of its own subsidiaries are not required to be recorded in the Consolidated Financial Statements

Contractual Obligations

We have contractual obligations to make future payments of debt, lease and other agreements. Additionally, in the normal course of business, we enter into contractual arrangements whereby we commit to future purchases of products or services from unaffiliated parties Other obligations include our contractual funding obligations related to our employee benefit plans See Notes 12, 14 and 15 to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

FUNDING AND LIQUIDITY

Funding

We fund our assets primarily with a mix of secured and unsecured liabilities through a globally coordinated funding strategy with Bank of America We fund a portion of our trading assets with secured liabilities, including repurchase agreements, securities loaned and other short-term secured borrowings, which are less sensitive to our credit ratings due to the underlying collateral. Refer to Note 12 to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information regarding our borrowings.

Beginning late in the third quarter of 2009, in connection with the update or renewal of certain Merrill Lynch international securities offering programs, Bank of America agreed to guarantee debt securities, warrants and/or certificates issued by certain subsidiaries of ML & Co on a going forward basis. All existing ML & Co guarantees of securities issued by those same Merrill Lynch subsidiaries under various international securities offering programs will remain in full force and effect as long as those securities are outstanding, and Bank of America has not assumed any of those prior ML & Co guarantees or otherwise guaranteed such securities. There were approximately $5.2 billion of securities guaranteed by Bank of America at December 31, 2011 In addition, Bank of America has guaranteed the performance of Merrill Lynch on certain derivative transactions The aggregate amount of such derivative liabilities was approximately $0 6 billion at December 31, 2011

Following the completion of Bank of America's acquisition of Merrill Lynch, ML & Co became a subsidiary of Bank of America and established intercompany lending and borrowing arrangements to facilitate centralized liquidity management. Included in these intercompany agreements is a $75 billion one-year revolving unsecured line of credit that allows ML & Co. to borrow funds from Bank of America at a spread to the London Interbank Offered Rate ("LIBOR") that is reset periodically and is consistent with other intercompany agreements This credit line was renewed effective January 1, 2012 with a maturity date of January 1, 2013 The credit line will automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding January 1st unless Bank of America provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date The agreement does not contain any financial or other covenants There were no outstanding borrowings against the line of credit at December 31, 2011.

In addition to the $75 billion unsecured line of credit, a $25 billion 364-day revolving unsecured line of credit that allows ML & Co to borrow funds from Bank of America was established on February 15, 2011 Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The agreement does not contain any financial or other covenants. The line of credit matures on February 12, 2013 There were no outstanding borrowings against the line of credit at December 31, 2011.

Following the merger of BAS into MLPF&S, Bank of America agreed to guarantee the short-term, senior unsecured obligations issued by MLPF&S under its short-term master note program on a going forward basis During 2011, Merrill Lynch decided to reduce short-term unsecured obligations At December 31, 2011, there were no longer any borrowings outstanding under this program.

Also in connection with the merger of BAS into MLPF&S, MLPF&S either assumed or established the following agreements:

- MLPF&S assumed an approximately $1.5 billion subordinated loan agreement with Bank of America, which bears interest based on a spread to LIBOR, and has a scheduled maturity date of December 31, 2013. The loan agreement contains a provision that automatically extends the loan's maturity by one year unless Bank of America provides 13 months written notice not to extend prior to the scheduled maturity date.

- MLPF&S assumed a $7 billion revolving subordinated line of credit with Bank of America. The subordinated line of credit bears interest based on a spread to LIBOR, and has a scheduled maturity date of October 1, 2013 The revolving subordinated line of credit contains a provision that automatically extends the maturity by one year unless Bank of America provides 13 months written notice not to extend prior to the scheduled maturity date At December 31, 2011, $1 1 billion was outstanding on the subordinated line of credit

- On November 1, 2010, a $4 billion one-year revolving unsecured line of credit that allows MLPF&S to borrow funds from Bank of America was established Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The credit line will mature on November 1, 2012 and may automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding November 1st unless Bank of America provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date At December 31, 2011, there were no borrowings outstanding on the line of credit

- On February 22, 2011, a $15 billion 364-day revolving unsecured line of credit that allows MLPF&S to borrow funds from Bank of America was established Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The line of credit matures on February 19, 2013 At December 31, 2011, approximately $1 5 billion was outstanding on the line of credit.

Bank of America and Merrill Lynch have entered into certain intercompany lending and borrowing arrangements to facilitate centralized liquidity management Included in these arrangements is a $50 billion extendible one-year revolving credit facility that allows Bank of America to borrow funds from Merrill Lynch at a spread to LIBOR that is reset periodically and is consistent with other intercompany agreements The credit facility matures on January 1, 2013 and will automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding January 1st unless Merrill Lynch provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date. There were no amounts outstanding at December 31, 2011 and approximately $6 1 billion outstanding at December 31, 2010 under this credit facility In addition, in October 2011, Merrill Lynch entered into a short-term revolving credit facility that will allow Bank of America to borrow up to an additional $25 billion Interest on borrowings under the credit facility is based on prevailing short-term market rates At December 31, 2011, approximately $3 7 billion was outstanding under this credit facility

Credit Ratings

Our borrowing costs and ability to raise funds are directly impacted by our credit ratings In addition, credit ratings may be important to customers or counterparties when we compete in certain markets and when we seek to engage in certain transactions, including OTC derivatives Thus, it is our objective to maintain high-quality credit ratings.

Credit ratings and outlooks are opinions on our creditworthiness and that of our obligations or securities, including long-term debt, short-term borrowings and other securities, including asset securitizations Following the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, the primary credit rating agencies have indicated that the major drivers of Merrill Lynch's credit ratings are Bank of America's credit ratings Bank of America's credit ratings are subject to ongoing review by the rating agencies, which consider a number of factors, including Bank of America's financial strength, performance, prospects and operations as well as factors not under Bank of America's control

Other factors that influence Bank of America's and our credit ratings include changes to the rating agencies' methodologies for our industry or certain security types, the rating agencies' assessment of the general operating environment for financial services companies, our mortgage exposures, our relative positions in the markets in which we compete, reputation, liquidity position, diversity of funding sources, funding costs, the level and volatility of earnings, corporate governance and risk management policies, capital position, capital management practices and current or future regulatory and legislative initiatives

Each of the three primary rating agencies, Moody's, S&P and Fitch, downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co 's ratings in late 2011. They have each also indicated that, as a systemically important financial institution, Bank of America's (and consequently ML & Co.'s) credit ratings currently reflect their expectation that, if necessary, Bank of America would receive significant support from the U S government. They have indicated that they will continue to assess this view of support as financial services regulations and legislation evolve On December 15, 2011, Fitch downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Fitch's decision to lower its "support floor" for systemically important U S financial institutions. This downgrade resolves the Rating Watch Negative that Fitch placed on Bank of America's and ML & Co 's ratings on October 22, 2010 On November 29, 2011, S&P downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co.'s long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of S&P's implementation of revised methodologies for determining Banking Industry Country Risk Assessments and bank ratings. On September 21, 2011, Moody's downgraded Bank of America's and ML & Co.'s long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Moody's lowering the amount of uplift for potential U S government support it incorporates into ratings On February 15, 2012, Moody's placed Bank of America's long-term debt ratings on review for possible downgrade as part of their review of financial institutions with global capital markets operations Any adjustment to Bank of America's (and consequently, our) ratings will be determined based on Moody's review, however, the agency offered guidance that downgrades to Bank of America's ratings, if any, would likely be limited to one notch. The rating agencies could make further adjustments to Bank of America's (and consequently, our) ratings at any time and provide no assurances that they will maintain our ratings at current levels.

Currently, Bank of America's and ML & Co 's long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks expressed by the rating agencies are as follows: Baa1/P-2 (negative) by Moody's, A-/A-2 (negative) by S&P; and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch. MLPF&S's long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks are A/A-1 (negative) by S&P and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch. Merrill Lynch International, a U K.-based registered investment firm and subsidiary of ML & Co., has a long-term/short-term senior debt rating and outlook of A/A-1 (negative) by S&P. Merrill Lynch International Bank Limited, an Ireland-based bank subsidiary of ML & Co., has a long-term/short-term senior debt rating and outlook of A/F1 (stable) by Fitch.

A further reduction in certain of our credit ratings may have a material adverse effect on our liquidity, access to credit markets, the related cost of funds, our businesses and on certain trading revenues, particularly in those businesses where counterparty creditworthiness is critical. In addition, under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements, the counterparties to those agreements may require us to provide additional collateral, or to terminate these contracts or agreements, which could cause us to sustain losses and/or adversely impact our liquidity. If Bank of America's or ML & Co's short-term credit ratings, or those of our bank or broker-dealer subsidiaries, were downgraded by one or more levels, the potential loss of access to short-term funding sources such as repurchase agreement financing, and the effect on our incremental cost of funds and earnings could be material.

At December 31, 2011, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch, the amount of additional collateral contractually required by derivative contracts and other trading agreements would have been approximately $0.4 billion. If the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by a second incremental notch, approximately $0.3 billion in additional collateral would have been required

Also, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch, the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31, 2011 was $0 5 billion, against which $0.3 billion of collateral had been posted Further, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by a second incremental notch, the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by the counterparties as of December 31, 2011 was an incremental $3 5 billion, against which $3.4 billion of collateral had been posted.

While certain potential impacts are contractual and quantifiable, the full consequences of a credit ratings downgrade to a financial institution are inherently uncertain, as they depend upon numerous dynamic, complex and interrelated factors and assumptions, including whether any downgrade of a firm's long-term credit ratings precipitates downgrades to its short-term credit ratings, and assumptions about the potential behaviors of various customers, investors and counterparties

During the third quarter of 2011, Moody's and S&P placed the sovereign rating of the U S on review for possibility of a default on the government's debt obligations because of a failure to increase the debt limit. On August 2, 2011, Moody's affirmed its Aaa rating and revised its outlook to negative On August 5, 2011, S&P downgraded the long-term sovereign credit rating of the U S to AA+, and affirmed the short-term sovereign credit rating, the outlook is negative On November 28, 2011, Fitch affirmed its AAA long-term rating of the U S , but changed the outlook from stable to negative On the same day, Fitch affirmed its F1+ short-term rating of the U S All three rating agencies have indicated that they will continue to assess fiscal projections and consolidation measures, as well as the medium-term economic outlook for the U S

Item 7A. Quantitative and Qualitative Disclosures About Market Risk

Market Risk Management

Merrill Lynch defines market risk as the potential change in value of financial instruments caused by fluctuations in interest rates, exchange rates, equity and commodity prices, credit spreads, and related risks

Control and Governance Structure

On January 1, 2009, pursuant to the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch adopted Bank of America's risk management and governance practices to maintain consistent risk measurement and disciplined risk taking. Bank of America's risk management structure as applicable to Merrill Lynch is described below.

The Global Markets Risk Committee ("GRC"), chaired by the Global Markets Risk Executive, has been designated by the Asset, Liability and Market Risk Committee ("ALMRC") as the primary governance authority for global markets risk management including trading risk management The GRC's focus is to take a forward-looking view of the primary credit and market risks impacting Bank of America's Global Banking and Markets business (which includes Merrill Lynch's sales and trading businesses) and prioritize those that need a proactive risk mitigation strategy. Market risks that impact businesses outside of the Global Banking and Markets business are monitored and governed by their respective governance authorities

The GRC monitors significant daily revenues and losses by business and the primary drivers of the revenues or losses Thresholds are in place for each of our businesses in order to determine if the revenue or loss is considered to be significant for that business. If any of the thresholds are exceeded, an explanation of the variance is provided to the GRC The thresholds are developed in coordination with the respective risk managers to highlight those revenues or losses that exceed what is considered to be normal daily income statement volatility.

Value-at-Risk ("VaR")

To evaluate risk in our trading activities, we focus on the actual and potential volatility of individual positions as well as portfolios VaR is a key statistic used to measure market risk. In order to manage day-to-day risks, VaR is subject to trading limits both for our overall trading portfolio and within individual businesses All limit excesses are communicated to management for review.

A VaR model simulates the value of a portfolio under a range of hypothetical scenarios in order to generate a distribution of potential gains and losses. VaR represents the worst loss the portfolio is expected to experience based on historical trends with a given level of confidence and depends on the volatility of the positions in the portfolio and on how strongly their risks are correlated. Within any VaR model, there are significant and numerous assumptions that will differ from company to company. In addition, the accuracy of a VaR model depends on the availability and quality of historical data for each of the positions in the portfolio. A VaR model may require additional modeling assumptions for new products that do not have extensive historical price data or for illiquid positions for which accurate daily prices are not consistently available

A VaR model is an effective tool in estimating ranges of potential gains and losses on our trading portfolios There are, however, many limitations inherent in a VaR model as it utilizes historical results over a defined time period to estimate future performance. Historical results may not always be indicative of future results and changes in market conditions or in the composition of the underlying portfolio could have a material impact on the accuracy of the VaR model. In order for the VaR model to reflect current market conditions, we update the historical data underlying our VaR model on a bi-weekly basis and regularly review the assumptions underlying the model Our VaR model utilizes three years of historical data. This time period was chosen to ensure that the VaR reflects both a broad range of market movements as well as being sensitive to recent changes in market volatility.

We continually review, evaluate and enhance our VaR model to ensure that it reflects the material risks in our trading portfolio Nevertheless, due to the limitations previously discussed, we have historically used the VaR model as only one of the components in managing our trading risk and also use other techniques such as stress testing and desk level limits Periods of extreme market stress influence the reliability of these techniques to various degrees

The accompanying table presents year-end, average, high and low daily trading VaR for the year ended December 31, 2011, as well as a comparison to the year-end VaR as of December 31, 2010

The decrease in average VaR during 2011 was primarily due to risk reductions during the year across the major asset classes.

Credit Risk Management

Counterparty Credit Risk

Credit risk is the risk of loss arising from the inability or failure of a borrower or counterparty to meet its obligations Credit risk can also arise from operational failures that result in an erroneous advance, commitment or investment of funds. Merrill Lynch defines the credit exposure to a borrower or counterparty as the loss potential arising from all product classifications, including loans, derivatives, assets held-for-sale and unfunded lending commitments, which include loan commitments, letters of credit and financial guarantees. Derivative positions are recorded at fair value and assets held-for-sale are recorded at either the lower of cost or fair value Certain loans and unfunded commitments are accounted for under the fair value option election. Credit risk for these categories of assets is not accounted for as part of the allowance for credit losses but as part of the fair value adjustments recorded in earnings. For derivative positions, our credit risk is measured as the net cost in the event the counterparties with contracts in a gain position to us fail to perform under the terms of those contracts We use the current mark-to-market value to represent credit exposure without giving consideration to future mark-to-market changes The credit risk amounts take into consideration the effects of legally enforceable master netting agreements and cash collateral Our consumer and commercial credit extension and review procedures take into account funded and unfunded credit exposures

We manage credit risk based on the risk profile of the borrower or counterparty, repayment sources, the nature of underlying collateral, and other support given current events, conditions and expectations

Commercial Portfolio

Credit risk management for the commercial portfolio begins with an assessment of the credit risk profile of the borrower or counterparty based on an analysis of its financial position As part of the overall credit risk assessment, our commercial credit exposures are assigned a risk rating and are subject to approval based on defined credit approval standards Subsequent to loan origination, risk ratings are monitored on an ongoing basis, and if necessary, adjusted to reflect changes in the financial condition, cash flow, risk profile or outlook of a borrower or counterparty In making credit decisions, we consider risk rating, collateral, country, industry and single name concentration limits while also balancing the total borrower or counterparty relationship Our business and risk management personnel use a variety of tools to continuously monitor the ability of a borrower or counterparty to perform under its obligations We use risk rating aggregations to measure and evaluate concentrations within portfolios In addition, risk ratings are a factor in determining the level of assigned economic capital and the allowance for credit losses.

Commercial credit risk is evaluated and managed with the goal that concentrations of credit exposure do not result in undesirable levels of risk We review, measure and manage concentrations of credit exposure by industry, product, geography, customer relationship and loan size We also review, measure and manage commercial real estate loans by geographic location and property type In addition, within our international portfolio, we evaluate exposures by region and by country. We also utilize syndications of exposure to third parties, loan sales, hedging and other risk mitigation techniques to manage the size and risk profile of the commercial credit portfolio

We account for certain large corporate loans and loan commitments (including issued but unfunded letters of credit which are considered utilized for credit risk management purposes) that exceed our single name credit risk concentration guidelines under the fair value option. Lending commitments, both funded and unfunded, are actively managed and monitored, and as appropriate, credit risk for these lending relationships may be mitigated through the use of credit derivatives, with our credit view and market perspectives determining the size and timing of the hedging activity. In addition, we purchase credit protection to cover the funded portion as well as the unfunded portion of certain other credit exposures. To lessen the cost of obtaining our desired credit protection levels, credit exposure may be added within an industry, borrower or counterparty group by selling protection. These credit derivatives do not meet the requirements for treatment as accounting hedges. They are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in earnings

Consumer Portfolio

Credit risk management for the consumer portfolio begins with initial underwriting and continues throughout a borrower's credit cycle Statistical techniques in conjunction with experiential judgment are used in all aspects of portfolio management including underwriting, product pricing, risk appetite, setting credit limits, and establishing operating processes and metrics to quantify and balance risks and returns. Statistical models are built using detailed behavioral information from external sources such as credit bureaus and/or internal historical experience. These models are a component of our consumer credit risk management process and are used in part to help make both new and existing credit decisions and portfolio management strategies, including authorizations and line management, collection practices and strategies, determination of the allowance for loan losses, and economic capital allocations for credit risk.

European Exposures

Certain European countries, including Greece, Ireland, Italy, Portugal and Spain, continue to experience varying degrees of financial stress Risks from the continued debt crisis in Europe could continue to disrupt the financial markets which could have a detrimental impact on global economic conditions and sovereign and non-sovereign debt in these countries Uncertainty in the progress of debt restructuring negotiations and the lack of a clear resolution to the crisis has led to continued volatility in European as well as global financial markets. In December 2011, the ECB announced initiatives to address European bank liquidity and funding concerns by providing low-cost, three-year loans to banks, and expanding collateral eligibility. In early 2012, S&P, Fitch and Moody's

downgraded the credit ratings of several European countries, and S&P downgraded the credit rating of the EFSF, adding to concerns about investor appetite for continued support in stabilizing the affected countries

(1) Derivative assets are carried at fair value and have been reduced by the amount of cash collateral applied of $945 million at December 31, 2011. At December 31, 2011, there was $59 million of other marketable securities collateralizing derivative assets

(2) Includes $369 million of reverse repurchase agreements, which are presented based on the domicile of the counterparty consistent with Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council reporting requirements. Cross-border resale agreements where the underlying collateral is U.S. Treasury Securities are excluded from this presentation. Securities exposures are reduced by hedges and short positions on a single name basis to, but not less than $0.

(3) Represents the fair value of credit default protection purchased, including ($979) million in net credit default protection and other short positions, and ($642) million in additional credit default protection to hedge derivative assets.

(4) Represents country exposure less the fair value of hedges and credit default protection.

We hedge certain of our selected European country exposure with credit default swaps ("CDS"). The majority of our CDS contracts are with highly-rated financial institutions primarily outside of the Eurozone and we work to limit or eliminate correlated CDS. Due to our engagement in market-making activities, our CDS portfolio contains contracts with various maturities to a diverse set of counterparties.

In addition to our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures, a significant deterioration of the European debt crisis could result in material reductions in the value of sovereign debt and other asset classes, disruptions in capital markets, widening of credit spreads, loss of investor confidence in the financial services industry, a slowdown in global economic activity and other adverse developments. For additional information on the debt crisis in Europe, see Item 1A. "Risk Factors".

Losses could still result even if there is credit default protection purchased because the purchased credit protection contracts only pay out under certain scenarios and thus not all losses may be covered by the credit protection contracts. The effectiveness of our CDS protection as a hedge of these risks is influenced by a number of factors, including the contractual terms of the CDS. Generally, only the occurrence of a credit event as defined by the CDS terms (which may include, among other events, the failure to pay by, or restructuring of, the reference entity) results in a payment under the purchased credit protection contracts. The determination as to whether a credit event has occurred is made by the relevant International Swaps and Derivatives Association, Inc. ("ISDA") Determination Committee (comprised of various ISDA member firms) based on the terms of the CDS and facts and circumstances for the event. Accordingly, uncertainties exist as to whether any particular strategy or policy action for addressing the European debt crisis would constitute a credit event under the CDS. A voluntary restructuring may not trigger a credit event under CDS terms and consequently may not trigger a payment under the CDS contract.

Derivatives

We enter into ISDA master netting agreements or their equivalent ("master netting agreements") with almost all of our derivative counterparties. Master netting agreements provide protection in bankruptcy in certain circumstances and, in some cases, enable receivables and payables with the same counterparty to be offset for risk management purposes. Master netting agreements are generally negotiated bilaterally and can require complex terms. While we make reasonable efforts to execute such agreements, it is possible that a counterparty may be unwilling to sign such an agreement and, as a result, would subject us to additional credit risk. The enforceability of master netting agreements under bankruptcy laws in certain countries or in certain industries is not free from doubt, and receivables and payables with counterparties in these countries or industries are accordingly recorded on a gross basis.

To reduce the risk of loss, we require collateral, principally cash and U.S. government and agency securities, on certain derivative transactions. From an economic standpoint, we evaluate risk exposures net of related collateral that meets specified standards. In addition to obtaining collateral, we attempt to mitigate counterparty default risk on derivatives whenever possible by entering into transactions with provisions that enable us to terminate or reset the terms of our derivative contracts.

Item 8. Financial Statements and Supplementary Data

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM

To the Board of Directors and Stockholder of Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc.:

In our opinion, the accompanying consolidated balance sheets and the related consolidated statements of (loss) earnings, comprehensive (loss) income, changes in stockholder's equity and cash flows present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. and its subsidiaries (the "Company") at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, and the results of their operations and their cash flows for each of the three years in the period ended December 31, 2011 in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. Also in our opinion, the Company maintained, in all material respects, effective internal control over financial reporting as of December 31, 2011, based on criteria established in Internal Control - Integrated Framework issued by the Committee of Sponsoring Organizations of the Treadway Commission (COSO). The Company's management is responsible for these financial statements, for maintaining effective internal control over financial reporting and for its assessment of the effectiveness of internal control over financial reporting, included in the Report on Internal Control over Financial Reporting appearing under Item 9A. Our responsibility is to express opinions on these financial statements and on the Company's internal control over financial reporting based on our integrated audits. We conducted our audits in accordance with the standards of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (United States). Those standards require that we plan and perform the audits to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement and whether effective internal control over financial reporting was maintained in all material respects. Our audits of the financial statements included examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements, assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, and evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. Our audit of internal control over financial reporting included obtaining an understanding of internal control over financial reporting, assessing the risk that a material weakness exists, and testing and evaluating the design and operating effectiveness of internal control based on the assessed risk. Our audits also included performing such other procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinions.

A company's internal control over financial reporting is a process designed to provide reasonable assurance regarding the reliability of financial reporting and the preparation of financial statements for external purposes in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. A company's internal control over financial reporting includes those policies and procedures that (i) pertain to the maintenance of records that, in reasonable detail, accurately and fairly reflect the transactions and dispositions of the assets of the company, (ii) provide reasonable assurance that transactions are recorded as necessary to permit preparation of financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, and that receipts and expenditures of the company are being made only in accordance with authorizations of management and directors of the company, and (iii) provide reasonable assurance regarding prevention or timely detection of unauthorized acquisition, use, or disposition of the company's assets that could have a material effect on the financial statements.

Because of its inherent limitations, internal control over financial reporting may not prevent or detect misstatements. Also, projections of any evaluation of effectiveness to future periods are subject to the risk that controls may become inadequate because of changes in conditions, or that the degree of compliance with the policies or procedures may deteriorate.

Non-cash investing and financing activities

For the year ended December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch received a non-cash capital contribution of approximately $1.0 billion from Bank of America associated with certain employee stock awards. In addition, as of January 1, 2010, Merrill Lynch consolidated assets and liabilities in connection with the consolidation of certain VIEs. See Note 9. In October 2010, Merrill Lynch's mandatory convertible preferred stock was automatically converted to Bank of America common stock. The redemption was settled through a non-cash intercompany transaction.

In connection with the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch recorded purchase accounting adjustments in the year ended December 31, 2009, which were recorded as non-cash capital contributions. In addition, during 2009 Bank of America contributed the net assets of Banc of America Investment Services, Inc. to Merrill Lynch. See Note 2.

Effective January 1, 2009, Bank of America contributed the net assets of Bank of America Securities Holdings Corporation totaling approximately $3.9 billion to Merrill Lynch. This was recorded as a non-cash capital contribution. See Note 1.

In connection with the sale of Merrill Lynch Bank USA to a subsidiary of Bank of America during 2009, Merrill Lynch received a note receivable as consideration for the net book value of the assets and liabilities transferred to Bank of America. See Note 3.

Note 1. Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Description of Business

Merrill Lynch & Co. Inc. ("ML & Co") and together with its subsidiaries ("Merrill Lynch"), provides investment, financing and other related services to individuals and institutions on a global basis through its broker, dealer, banking and other financial services subsidiaries. On January 1, 2009, ML & Co was acquired by Bank of America Corporation ("Bank of America") in exchange for common and preferred stock with a value of $29.1 billion. ML & Co. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America.

Its principal subsidiaries include

- Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Incorporated ("MLPF&S"), a U.S.-based broker-dealer in securities and futures commission merchant;
- Merrill Lynch International ("MLI"), a United Kingdom ("U.K.")-based regulated investment firm;
- Merrill Lynch Capital Services, Inc., a U.S.-based dealer in interest rate, currency, commodity and credit derivatives,
- Merrill Lynch International Bank Limited ("MLIB"), an Ireland-based bank,
- Merrill Lynch Japan Securities Co., Ltd. ("MLJS"), a Japan-based broker-dealer; and
- Merrill Lynch Derivative Products, AG, a Switzerland-based derivatives dealer

Services provided to clients by Merrill Lynch and other activities include.

- Securities brokerage, trading and underwriting,
- Investment banking, advisory services (including mergers and acquisitions) and other corporate finance activities,
- Wealth management products and services, including financial, retirement and generational planning,
- Investment management and advisory and related record-keeping services;
- Origination, brokerage, dealer, and related activities in swaps, options, forwards, exchange-traded futures, other derivatives, commodities and foreign exchange products,
- Securities clearance, settlement financing services and prime brokerage; and
- Research services on a global basis.

Bank of America Acquisition

On January 1, 2009, Merrill Lynch was acquired by Bank of America through the merger of a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America with and into ML & Co with ML & Co continuing as the surviving corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America. Upon completion of the acquisition, each outstanding share of ML & Co. common stock was converted into 0.8595 shares of Bank of America common stock. As of the completion of the acquisition, ML & Co Series 1 through Series 8 preferred stock were converted into Bank of America preferred stock with substantially identical terms to the corresponding series of Merrill Lynch preferred stock (except for additional voting rights provided to the Bank of America securities). The Merrill Lynch 9.00% Mandatory Convertible Non-Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series 2, and 9.00% Mandatory Convertible Non-Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series 3 that remained issued and outstanding subsequent to the completion of the acquisition were automatically converted into Bank of America common stock on October 15, 2010 in accordance with the terms of these securities (see Note 13).

Merger with Banc of America Securities Holdings Corporation ("BASH")

On November 1, 2010, ML & Co. merged with BASH, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America, with ML &

Co as the surviving corporation in the merger (the "BASH Merger"). In accordance with Accounting Standards Codification ("ASC") 805-10, Business Combinations ("Business Combinations Accounting"), the Consolidated Financial Statements of Merrill Lynch include the historical results of BASH and subsidiaries as if the BASH Merger had occurred on January 1, 2009, the date at which both entities were first under the common control of Bank of America Merrill Lynch has recorded the assets and liabilities acquired in connection with the BASH Merger at their historical carrying values.

As a result of the BASH Merger, Banc of America Securities LLC ("BAS"), a wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiary of BASH, became a wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiary of ML & Co Subsequently, on November 1, 2010, BAS was merged into MLPF&S, a wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiary of ML & Co , with MLPF&S as the surviving corporation in the merger As a result, MLPF&S remained a direct wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiary of ML & Co and an indirect wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiary of Bank of America

Basis of Presentation

The Consolidated Financial Statements include the accounts of Merrill Lynch The Consolidated Financial Statements are presented in accordance with U S. Generally Accepted Accounting Principles ("U S GAAP") Intercompany transactions and balances within Merrill Lynch have been eliminated Transactions and balances with Bank of America have not been eliminated Certain prior-period amounts have been reclassified in order to conform with the current year's presentation

The Consolidated Financial Statements are presented in U S dollars Many non-U S subsidiaries have a functional currency (i e , the currency in which activities are primarily conducted) that is other than the U.S. dollar, often the currency of the country in which a subsidiary is domiciled Subsidiaries' assets and liabilities are translated to U S dollars at year-end exchange rates, while revenues and expenses are translated at average exchange rates during the year Adjustments that result from translating amounts in a subsidiary's functional currency and related hedging, net of related tax effects, are reported in stockholder's equity as a component of accumulated other comprehensive (loss) income All other translation adjustments are included in earnings Merrill Lynch uses derivatives to manage the currency exposure arising from activities in non-U S subsidiaries See the Derivatives section for additional information on accounting for derivatives

Merrill Lynch offers a broad array of products and services to its diverse client base of individuals, small to mid-size businesses, employee benefit plans, corporations, financial institutions, and governments around the world These products and services are offered from a number of locations globally In some cases, the same or similar products and services may be offered to both individual and institutional clients, utilizing the same infrastructure In other cases, a single infrastructure may be used to support multiple products and services offered to clients When Merrill Lynch analyzes its profitability, it does not focus on the profitability of a single product or service Instead, Merrill Lynch views the profitability of businesses offering an array of products and services to various types of clients The profitability of the products and services offered to individuals, small to mid-size businesses, and employee benefit plans is analyzed separately from the profitability of products and services offered to corporations, financial institutions, and governments, regardless of whether there is commonality in products and services infrastructure As such, Merrill Lynch does not separately disclose the costs associated with the products and services sold or general and administrative costs either in total or by product.

When determining the prices for products and services, Merrill Lynch considers multiple factors, including prices being offered in the market for similar products and services, the competitiveness of its pricing compared to competitors, the profitability of its businesses and its overall profitability, as well as the profitability, creditworthiness, and importance of the overall client relationships Shared expenses that are incurred to support products and services and infrastructures are allocated to the businesses based on various methodologies, which may include headcount, square footage, and certain other criteria. Similarly, certain revenues may be shared based upon agreed methodologies When evaluating the profitability of various businesses, Merrill Lynch considers all expenses incurred, including overhead and the costs of shared services, as all are considered integral to the operation of the businesses.

Consolidation Accounting

Merrill Lynch determines whether it is required to consolidate an entity by first evaluating whether the entity qualifies as a voting rights entity ("VRE") or as a variable interest entity ("VIE").

The Consolidated Financial Statements include the accounts of Merrill Lynch, whose subsidiaries are generally controlled through a majority voting interest or a controlling financial interest On January 1, 2010, Merrill Lynch adopted accounting guidance on consolidation of VIEs, which has been deferred for certain investment funds managed on behalf of third parties if Merrill Lynch does not have an obligation to fund losses that could potentially be significant to these funds Any funds meeting the deferral requirements will continue to be evaluated for consolidation in accordance with the prior guidance

VREs — VREs are defined to include entities that have both equity at risk that is sufficient to fund future operations and have equity investors that have a controlling financial interest in the entity through their equity investments In accordance with ASC 810, Consolidation ("Consolidation Accounting"), Merrill Lynch generally consolidates those VREs where it has the majority of the voting rights. For investments in limited partnerships and certain limited liability corporations that Merrill Lynch does not control, Merrill Lynch applies ASC 323, Investments — Equity Method and Joint Ventures ("Equity Method Accounting"), which requires use of the equity method of accounting for investors that have more than a minor influence, which is typically defined as an investment of greater than 3% to 5% of the outstanding equity in the entity For more traditional corporate structures, in accordance with Equity Method Accounting, Merrill Lynch applies the equity method of accounting where it has significant influence over the investee. Significant influence can be evidenced by a significant ownership interest (which is generally defined as a voting interest of 20% to 50%), significant board of director representation, or other contracts and arrangements

VIEs — Those entities that do not meet the VRE criteria are generally analyzed for consolidation as VIEs. A VIE is an entity that lacks equity investors or whose equity investors do not have a controlling financial interest in the entity through their equity investments Merrill Lynch consolidates those VIEs for which it is the primary beneficiary In accordance with Consolidation Accounting guidance, Merrill Lynch is considered the primary beneficiary when it has a controlling financial interest in a VIE. Merrill Lynch has a controlling financial interest when it has both the power to direct the activities of the VIE that most significantly impact the VIE's economic performance and an obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that could potentially be significant to the VIE Merrill Lynch reassesses whether it is the primary beneficiary of a VIE on a quarterly basis The quarterly reassessment process considers whether Merrill Lynch has acquired or divested the power to direct the activities of the VIE through changes in governing documents or other circumstances. The reassessment also considers whether Merrill Lynch has acquired or disposed of a financial interest that could be significant to the VIE, or whether an interest in the VIE has become significant or is no longer significant. The consolidation status of the VIEs with which Merrill Lynch is involved may change as a result of such reassessments.

Securitization Activities

In the normal course of business, Merrill Lynch has securitized commercial and residential mortgage loans; municipal, government, and corporate bonds; and other types of financial assets. Merrill Lynch may retain interests in the securitized financial assets by holding notes or other debt instruments issued by the securitization vehicle. In accordance with ASC 860, Transfers and Servicing ("Financial Transfers and Servicing Accounting"), Merrill Lynch recognizes transfers of financial assets where it relinquishes control as sales to the extent of cash and any other proceeds received

Revenue Recognition

Principal transactions revenue includes both realized and unrealized gains and losses on trading assets and trading liabilities, investment securities classified as trading investments and fair value changes associated with certain structured debt. These instruments are recorded at fair value Fair value is the price that would be received to sell an asset or paid to transfer a liability in an orderly transaction between market participants. Gains and losses on sales are recognized on a trade date basis

Commissions revenues include commissions, mutual fund distribution fees and contingent deferred sales charge revenue, which are all accrued as earned Commissions revenues also include mutual fund redemption fees, which are recognized at the time of redemption Commissions revenues earned from certain customer equity transactions are recorded net of related brokerage, clearing and exchange fees

Managed account and other fee-based revenues primarily consist of asset-priced portfolio service fees earned from the administration of separately managed accounts and other investment accounts for retail investors, annual account fees, and certain other account-related fees

Investment banking revenues include underwriting revenues and fees for merger and acquisition and other advisory services, which are accrued when services for the transactions are substantially completed Underwriting revenues are presented net of transaction-related expenses

Earnings from equity method investments include Merrill Lynch's pro rata share of income and losses associated with investments accounted for under the equity method of accounting

Other revenues include gains (losses) on investment securities, including sales of available-for-sale securities, gains (losses) on private equity investments and other principal investments and gains (losses) on loans and other miscellaneous items

Contractual interest received and paid, and dividends received on trading assets and trading liabilities, excluding derivatives, are recognized on an accrual basis as a component of interest and dividend revenues and interest expense Interest and dividends on investment securities are recognized on an accrual basis as a component of interest and dividend revenues Interest related to loans, notes, and mortgages, securities financing activities and certain short- and long-term borrowings are recorded on an accrual basis as interest revenue or interest expense, as applicable.

Use of Estimates

In presenting the Consolidated Financial Statements, management makes estimates including the following

- Valuations of assets and liabilities requiring fair value estimates,
- The allowance for credit losses,
- Determination of other-than-temporary impairments for available-for-sale investment securities,
- The outcome of litigation;
- Determination of the liability for representations and warranties made in connection with the sales of residential mortgage and home equity loans,
- Determination of whether VIEs should be consolidated,
- The ability to realize deferred tax assets and the recognition and measurement of uncertain tax positions,
- The carrying amount of goodwill and intangible assets,
- The amortization period of intangible assets with definite lives,
- Incentive-based compensation accruals and valuation of share-based payment compensation arrangements, and
- Other matters that affect the reported amounts and disclosure of contingencies in the Consolidated Financial Statements

Estimates, by their nature, are based on judgment and available information. Therefore, actual results could differ from those estimates and could have a material impact on the Consolidated Financial Statements, and it is possible that such changes could occur in the near term. A discussion of certain areas in which estimates are a significant component of the amounts reported in the Consolidated Financial Statements follows

Fair Value Measurement

Merrill Lynch accounts for a significant portion of its financial instruments at fair value or considers fair value in their measurement Merrill Lynch accounts for certain financial assets and liabilities at fair value under various accounting literature, including ASC 320, Investments — Debt and Equity Securities ("Investment Accounting"),

ASC 815, Derivatives and Hedging ("Derivatives Accounting"), and the fair value option election in accordance with ASC 825-10-25, Financial Instruments — Recognition (the "fair value option election") Merrill Lynch also accounts for certain assets at fair value under applicable industry guidance, namely ASC 940, Financial Services — Broker and Dealers ("Broker-Dealer Guide") and ASC 946, Financial Services — Investment Companies ("Investment Company Guide").

ASC 820, Fair Value Measurements and Disclosures ("Fair Value Accounting") defines fair value, establishes a framework for measuring fair value, establishes a fair value hierarchy based on the quality of inputs used to measure fair value and enhances disclosure requirements for fair value measurements

Fair values for over-the-counter ("OTC") derivative financial instruments, principally forwards, options, and swaps, represent the present value of amounts estimated to be received from or paid to a marketplace participant in settlement of these instruments (i.e , the amount Merrill Lynch would expect to receive in a derivative asset assignment or would expect to pay to have a derivative liability assumed) These derivatives are valued using pricing models based on the net present value of estimated future cash flows and directly observed prices from exchange-traded derivatives, other OTC trades, or external pricing services, while taking into account the counterparty's creditworthiness, or Merrill Lynch's own creditworthiness, as appropriate When external pricing services are used, the methods and assumptions used are reviewed by Merrill Lynch Determining the fair value for OTC derivative contracts can require a significant level of estimation and management judgment

New and/or complex instruments may have immature or limited markets. As a result, the pricing models used for valuation often incorporate significant estimates and assumptions that market participants would use in pricing the instrument, which may impact the results of operations reported in the Consolidated Financial Statements. For instance, on long-dated and illiquid contracts extrapolation methods are applied to observed market data in order to estimate inputs and assumptions that are not directly observable. This enables Merrill Lynch to mark to fair value all positions consistently when only a subset of prices are directly observable Values for OTC derivatives are verified using observed information about the costs of hedging the risk and other trades in the market. As the markets for these products develop, Merrill Lynch continually refines its pricing models to correlate more closely to the market price of these instruments. The recognition of significant inception gains and losses that incorporate unobservable inputs is reviewed by management to ensure such gains and losses are derived from observable inputs and/or incorporate reasonable assumptions about the unobservable component, such as implied bid-offer adjustments.

Certain financial instruments recorded at fair value are initially measured using mid-market prices which results in gross long and short positions valued at the same pricing level prior to the application of position netting The resulting net positions are then adjusted to fair value representing the exit price as defined in Fair Value Accounting The significant adjustments include liquidity and counterparty credit risk.

Liquidity

Merrill Lynch makes adjustments to bring a position from a mid-market to a bid or offer price, depending upon the net open position Merrill Lynch values net long positions at bid prices and net short positions at offer prices These adjustments are based upon either observable or implied bid-offer prices

Counterparty Credit Risk

In determining fair value, Merrill Lynch considers both the credit risk of its counterparties, as well as its own creditworthiness. Merrill Lynch attempts to mitigate credit risk to third parties by entering into netting and collateral arrangements. Net counterparty exposure (counterparty positions netted by offsetting transactions and both cash and securities collateral) is then valued for counterparty creditworthiness and this resultant value is incorporated into the fair value of the respective instruments Merrill Lynch generally calculates the credit risk adjustment for derivatives based on observable market credit spreads

Fair Value Accounting also requires that Merrill Lynch consider its own creditworthiness when determining the fair value of certain instruments, including OTC derivative instruments and certain structured notes carried at fair value under the fair value option election (i.e , debit valuation adjustment or "DVA"). Merrill Lynch's DVA is measured in the same manner as third party counterparty credit risk The impact of Merrill Lynch's DVA is incorporated into the fair value of instruments such as OTC derivative contracts even when credit risk is not readily observable in the instrument OTC derivative liabilities are valued based on the net counterparty exposure as described above

Legal and Representation and Warranty Reserves

Merrill Lynch is a party in various actions, some of which involve claims for substantial amounts Amounts are accrued for the financial resolution of claims that have either been asserted or are deemed probable of assertion if, in the opinion of management, it is both probable that a liability has been incurred and the amount of the loss can be reasonably estimated In many cases, it is not possible to determine whether a liability has been incurred or to estimate the ultimate or minimum amount of that liability until the case is close to resolution, in which case no accrual is made until that time Accruals are subject to significant estimation by management, with input from any outside counsel handling the matter

In addition, Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries made various representations and warranties in connection with the sale of residential mortgage and home equity loans Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in the requirement to repurchase mortgage loans or to otherwise make whole or provide other remedies. Refer to Note 14 for further information

Income Taxes

Merrill Lynch provides for income taxes on all transactions that have been recognized in the Consolidated Financial Statements in accordance with ASC 740, Income Taxes ("Income Tax Accounting"). Accordingly, deferred taxes are adjusted to reflect the tax rates at which future taxable amounts will likely be settled or realized The effects of tax rate changes on deferred tax liabilities and deferred tax assets, as well as other changes in income tax laws, are recognized in net earnings in the period during which such changes are enacted. Valuation allowances are established when necessary to reduce deferred tax assets to the amounts that are more-likely-than-not to be realized Pursuant to Income Tax Accounting, Merrill Lynch may consider various sources of evidence in assessing the necessity of valuation allowances to reduce deferred tax assets to amounts more-likely-than-not to be realized, including the following. 1) past and projected earnings, including losses, of Merrill Lynch and Bank of America, as certain tax attributes such as U.S net operating losses ("NOLs"), U S capital loss carryforwards and foreign tax credit carryforwards can be utilized by Bank of America in certain income tax returns, 2) tax carryforward periods, and 3) tax planning strategies and other factors of the legal entities, such as the intercompany tax-allocation policy. Included within Merrill Lynch's net deferred tax assets are carryforward amounts generated in the U S. and the U.K. that are deductible in the future as NOLs. Merrill Lynch has concluded that these deferred tax assets are more-likely-than-not to be fully utilized prior to expiration, based on the projected level of future taxable income of Merrill Lynch and Bank of America, which is relevant due to the intercompany tax-allocation policy. For this purpose, future taxable income was projected based on forecasts, historical earnings after adjusting for the past market disruptions and the anticipated impact of the differences between pre-tax earnings and taxable income

Merrill Lynch recognizes and measures its unrecognized tax benefits in accordance with Income Tax Accounting Merrill Lynch estimates the likelihood, based on their technical merits, that tax positions will be sustained upon examination considering the facts and circumstances and information available at the end of each period Merrill Lynch adjusts the level of unrecognized tax benefits ("UTBs") when there is more information available, or when an event occurs requiring a change In accordance with Bank of America's policy, any new or subsequent change in an unrecognized tax benefit related to a Bank of America state consolidated, combined or unitary return in which Merrill Lynch is a member will generally not be reflected in Merrill Lynch's balance sheet However, upon Bank of America's resolution of the item, any material impact determined to be attributable to Merrill Lynch will be reflected in Merrill Lynch's balance sheet Merrill Lynch accrues income-tax-related interest and penalties, if applicable, within income tax expense

Merrill Lynch's results of operations are included in the U S federal income tax return and certain state income tax returns of Bank of America The method of allocating income tax expense is determined under the intercompany tax allocation policy of Bank of America. This policy specifies that income tax expense will be computed for all Bank of America subsidiaries generally on a separate pro forma return basis, taking into account the tax position of the consolidated group and the pro forma Merrill Lynch group Under this policy, tax benefits associated with NOLs (or other tax attributes) of Merrill Lynch are payable to Merrill Lynch generally upon utilization in Bank of America's tax returns See Note 17 for further discussion of income taxes

Goodwill and Intangible Assets

Goodwill is the cost of an acquired company in excess of the fair value of identifiable net assets at the acquisition date. Goodwill is tested annually (or more frequently under certain conditions) for impairment at the reporting unit level in accordance with ASC 350, Intangibles — Goodwill and Other ("Goodwill and Intangible Assets Accounting")

Intangible assets with definite lives consist primarily of value assigned to customer relationships Intangible assets with definite lives are tested for impairment in accordance with ASC 360, Property, Plant, and Equipment, whenever certain conditions exist which would indicate the carrying amount of such assets may not be recoverable Intangible assets with definitive lives are amortized over their respective estimated useful lives Intangible assets with indefinite lives consist of value assigned to the Merrill Lynch brand and are tested for impairment in accordance with Goodwill and Intangible Assets Accounting. Intangible assets with indefinite lives are not amortized

Merrill Lynch makes certain complex judgments with respect to its goodwill and intangible assets, including assumptions and estimates used to determine fair value Merrill Lynch also makes assumptions and estimates in determining the useful lives of its intangible assets with definite lives Refer to Note 11 for further information.

Balance Sheet

Cash and Cash Equivalents

Merrill Lynch defines cash equivalents as short-term, highly liquid securities, and interest-earning deposits with maturities, when purchased, of 90 days or less, that are not used for trading purposes The amounts recognized for cash and cash equivalents in the Consolidated Balance Sheets approximate fair value.

Cash and Securities Segregated for Regulatory Purposes or Deposited with Clearing Organizations

Merrill Lynch maintains relationships with clients around the world and, as a result, it is subject to various regulatory regimes As a result of its client activities, Merrill Lynch is obligated by rules mandated by its primary regulators, including the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") and the Commodities Futures Trading Commission ("CFTC") in the U S and the Financial Services Authority ("FSA") in the U K. to segregate or set aside cash and/or qualified securities to satisfy these regulations, which have been promulgated to protect customer assets In addition, Merrill Lynch is a member of various clearing organizations at which it maintains cash and/or securities required for the conduct of its day-to-day clearance activities The amounts recognized for cash and securities segregated for regulatory purposes or deposited with clearing organizations in the Consolidated Balance Sheets approximate fair value

Securities Financing Transactions

Merrill Lynch enters into repurchase and resale agreements and securities borrowed and loaned transactions to accommodate customers and earn interest rate spreads (also referred to as "matched-book transactions"), obtain securities for settlement and finance inventory positions Resale and repurchase agreements are generally accounted for as collateralized financing transactions and may be recorded at their contractual amounts plus accrued interest or at fair value under the fair value option election In resale and repurchase agreements, typically the termination date of the agreements is before the maturity date of the underlying security However, in certain situations, Merrill Lynch may enter into agreements where the termination date of the transaction is the same as the maturity date of the underlying security. These transactions are referred to as repo-to-maturity ("RTM") transactions. In accordance with applicable accounting guidance, Merrill Lynch accounts for RTM transactions as sales and purchases when the transferred securities are highly liquid. In instances where securities are considered sold or purchased, Merrill Lynch removes or recognizes the securities from the Consolidated Balance Sheet and, in the case of sales, recognizes a gain or loss in the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch had no outstanding RTM transactions that had been accounted for as sales and an immaterial amount of transactions that had been accounted for as purchases

Resale and repurchase agreements recorded at fair value are generally valued based on pricing models that use inputs with observable levels of price transparency Where the fair value option election has been made, changes in the fair value of resale and repurchase agreements are reflected in principal transactions revenues and the contractual interest coupon is recorded as interest revenue or interest expense, respectively For further information refer to Note 4.

Resale and repurchase agreements recorded at their contractual amounts plus accrued interest approximate fair value, as the fair value of these items is not materially sensitive to shifts in market interest rates because of the short-term nature of these instruments and/or variable interest rates or to credit risk because the resale and repurchase agreements are substantially collateralized

Merrill Lynch may use securities received as collateral for resale agreements to satisfy regulatory requirements such as Rule 15c3-3 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934

Securities borrowed and loaned transactions may be recorded at the amount of cash collateral advanced or received plus accrued interest or at fair value under the fair value option election Securities borrowed transactions require Merrill Lynch to provide the counterparty with collateral in the form of cash, letters of credit, or other securities Merrill Lynch receives collateral in the form of cash or other securities for securities loaned transactions. For these transactions, the fees received or paid by Merrill Lynch are recorded as interest revenue or expense. The carrying value of securities borrowed and loaned transactions recorded at the amount of cash collateral advanced or received approximates fair value as these items are not materially sensitive to shifts in market interest rates because of their short-term nature and/or variable interest rates or to credit risk because securities borrowed and loaned transactions are substantially collateralized.

For securities financing transactions, Merrill Lynch's policy is to obtain possession of collateral with a market value equal to or in excess of the principal amount loaned under the agreements. To ensure that the market value of the underlying collateral remains sufficient, collateral is generally valued daily and Merrill Lynch may require counterparties to deposit additional collateral or may return collateral pledged when appropriate. Securities financing agreements give rise to negligible credit risk as a result of these collateral provisions, and no allowance for loan losses is considered necessary. These instruments therefore are managed based on market risk rather than credit risk

Substantially all securities financing activities are transacted under master agreements that give Merrill Lynch the right, in the event of default, to liquidate collateral held and to offset receivables and payables with the same counterparty Merrill Lynch offsets certain repurchase and resale transactions with the same counterparty on the Consolidated Balance Sheets where it has such a master agreement, that agreement is legally enforceable and the transactions have the same maturity date

All Merrill Lynch-owned securities pledged to counterparties where the counterparty has the right, by contract or custom, to sell or repledge the securities are disclosed parenthetically in trading assets or in investment securities on the Consolidated Balance Sheets.

In transactions where Merrill Lynch acts as the lender in a securities lending agreement and receives securities that can be pledged or sold as collateral, it recognizes an asset on the Consolidated Balance Sheets carried at fair value, representing the securities received (securities received as collateral), and a liability for the same amount, representing the obligation to return those securities (obligation to return securities received as collateral) The amounts on the Consolidated Balance Sheets result from such non-cash transactions

Trading Assets and Liabilities

Merrill Lynch's trading activities consist primarily of securities brokerage and trading, derivatives dealing and brokerage, commodities trading and futures brokerage; and securities financing transactions Trading assets and trading liabilities consist of cash instruments (e g , securities and loans) and derivative instruments Trading assets also include commodities inventory See Note 6 for additional information on derivative instruments.

Trading assets and liabilities are generally recorded on a trade date basis at fair value Included in trading liabilities are securities that Merrill Lynch has sold but did not own and will therefore be obligated to purchase at a future date ("short sales"). Commodities inventory is recorded at the lower of cost or fair value Changes in fair value of trading assets and liabilities (i e , unrealized gains and losses) are recognized as principal transactions revenues in the current period. Realized gains and losses and any related interest amounts are included in principal transactions revenues and interest revenues and expenses, depending on the nature of the instrument.

Derivatives

A derivative is an instrument whose value is derived from an underlying instrument or index, such as interest rates, equity security prices, currencies, commodity prices or credit spreads Derivatives include futures, forwards, swaps, option contracts and other financial instruments with similar characteristics. Derivative contracts often involve future commitments to exchange interest payment streams or currencies based on a notional or contractual amount (e.g., interest rate swaps or currency forwards) or to purchase or sell other financial instruments at specified terms on a specified date (e g., options to buy or sell securities or currencies). Refer to Note 6 for further information

Investment Securities

Investment securities consist of marketable investment securities and non-qualifying investments. Refer to Note 8.

Marketable Investment Securities

ML & Co. and certain of its non-broker-dealer subsidiaries follow the guidance within Investment Accounting for investments in debt and publicly traded equity securities. Merrill Lynch classifies those debt securities that it does not intend to sell as held-to-maturity securities. Held-to-maturity securities are carried at amortized cost unless a decline in value is deemed other-than-temporary, in which case the carrying value is reduced. For Merrill Lynch, the trading classification under Investment Accounting generally includes those securities that are bought and held principally for the purpose of selling them in the near term, securities that are economically hedged, or securities that may contain a bifurcatable embedded derivative as defined in Derivatives Accounting Securities classified as trading are marked to fair value through earnings All other qualifying securities are classified as available-for-sale ("AFS") and are held at fair value with unrealized gains and losses reported in accumulated other comprehensive (loss) income ("OCI")

Realized gains and losses on investment securities are included in current period earnings For purposes of computing realized gains and losses, the cost basis of each investment sold is based on the specific identification method.

Merrill Lynch regularly (at least quarterly) evaluates each held-to-maturity and AFS security whose fair value has declined below amortized cost to assess whether the decline in fair value is other-than-temporary A decline in a debt security's fair value is considered to be other-than-temporary if it is probable that all amounts contractually due will not be collected or Merrill Lynch either plans to sell the security or it is more likely than not that it will be required to sell the security before recovery of its amortized cost. For unrealized losses on debt securities that are deemed other-than-temporary, the credit component of an other-than-temporary impairment is recognized in earnings and the non-credit component is recognized in OCI when Merrill Lynch does not intend to sell the security and it is more likely than not that Merrill Lynch will not be required to sell the security prior to recovery.

Non-Qualifying Investments

Non-qualifying investments are those investments that are not within the scope of Investment Accounting and primarily include private equity investments accounted for at fair value and other equity securities carried at cost or under the equity method of accounting.

Private equity investments that are held for capital appreciation and/or current income are accounted for under the Investment Company Guide and carried at fair value. Additionally, certain private equity investments that are not accounted for under the Investment Company Guide may be carried at fair value under the fair value option election The fair value of private equity investments reflects expected exit values based upon market prices or other valuation methodologies, including market comparables of similar companies and discounted expected cash flows

Merrill Lynch has non-controlling investments in the common shares of corporations and in partnerships that do not fall within the scope of Investment Accounting or the Investment Company Guide Merrill Lynch accounts for these investments using either the cost or the equity method of accounting based on management's ability to influence the investees, or Merrill Lynch may elect the fair value option See the Consolidation Accounting section of this Note for more information

For investments accounted for using the equity method, income is recognized based on Merrill Lynch's share of the earnings or losses of the investee Dividend distributions are generally recorded as reductions in the investment balance Impairment testing is based on the guidance provided in Equity Method Accounting, and the investment is reduced when an impairment is deemed other-than-temporary

For investments accounted for at cost, income is recognized when dividends are received, or the investment is sold Instruments are periodically tested for impairment based on the guidance provided in Investment Accounting, and the cost basis is reduced when an impairment is deemed other-than-temporary

Loans, Notes and Mortgages, Net

Merrill Lynch's lending and related activities include loan originations, syndications and securitizations. Loan originations include corporate and institutional loans, residential and commercial mortgages, asset-backed loans, and other loans to individuals and businesses Merrill Lynch also engages in secondary market loan trading (see the Trading Assets and Liabilities section of this Note) and margin lending. Loans included in loans, notes, and mortgages are classified for accounting purposes as loans held for investment and loans held for sale. Upon completion of the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, certain loans carried by Merrill Lynch were subject to the requirements of ASC 310-30, Loans and Debt Securities Acquired with Deteriorated Credit Quality ("Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting").

Loans held for investment are generally carried at amortized cost, less an allowance for loan losses, which represents Merrill Lynch's estimate of probable losses inherent in its lending activities The fair value option election has been made for certain held-for-investment loans, notes and mortgages Merrill Lynch performs periodic and systematic detailed reviews of its lending portfolios to identify credit risks and to assess overall collectability. These reviews, which are updated on a quarterly basis, consider a variety of factors including, but not limited to, historical loss experience, estimated defaults, delinquencies, economic conditions, credit scores and the fair value of any underlying collateral Provisions for loan losses are included in interest and dividend revenue in the Consolidated Statements of (Loss) Earnings

Merrill Lynch's estimate of loan losses includes judgment about collectability based on available information at the balance sheet date, and the uncertainties inherent in those underlying assumptions While management has based its estimates on the best information available, future adjustments to the allowance for loan losses may be necessary as a result of changes in the economic environment or variances between actual results and the original assumptions

In general, loans that are past due 90 days or more as to principal or interest, or where reasonable doubt exists as to timely collection, including loans that are individually identified as being impaired, are classified as non-performing unless well-secured and in the process of collection Loans, primarily commercial, whose contractual terms have been restructured in a manner which grants a concession to a borrower experiencing financial difficulties are considered troubled debt restructurings ("TDRs") and are classified as non-performing until the loans have performed for an adequate period of time under the restructured agreement Interest accrued but not collected is reversed when a commercial loan is considered non-performing Interest collections on commercial loans for which the ultimate collectability of principal is uncertain are applied as principal reductions, otherwise, such collections are credited to income when received Commercial loans may be restored to performing status when all principal and interest is current and full repayment of the remaining contractual principal and interest is expected, or when the loan otherwise becomes well-secured and is in the process of collection

Loans held for sale are carried at lower of cost or fair value The fair value option election has been made for certain held for sale loans, notes and mortgages Estimation is required in determining these fair values The fair value of loans made in connection with commercial lending activity, consisting mainly of senior debt, is primarily estimated using the market value of publicly issued debt instruments when available or discounted cash flows

Nonrefundable loan origination fees, loan commitment fees, and "draw down" fees received in conjunction with held for investment loans are generally deferred and recognized over the contractual life of the loan as an adjustment to the yield. If, at the outset, or any time during the term of the loan, it becomes probable that the repayment period will be extended, the amortization is recalculated using the expected remaining life of the loan When the loan contract does not provide for a specific maturity date, management's best estimate of the repayment period is used At repayment of the loan, any unrecognized deferred fee is immediately recognized in earnings. If the loan is accounted for as held for sale, the fees received are deferred and recognized as part of the gain or loss on sale in other revenues. If the loan is accounted for under the fair value option election, the fees are included in the determination of the fair value and included in other revenues

Other Receivables and Payables

Customer Receivables and Payables

Customer securities transactions are recorded on a settlement date basis. Receivables from and payables to customers include amounts due on cash and margin transactions, including futures contracts transacted on behalf of Merrill Lynch customers Due to their short-term nature, such amounts approximate fair value Securities owned by customers, including those that collateralize margin or other similar transactions, are not reflected on the Consolidated Balance Sheets.

Customer receivables and broker dealer receivables include margin loan transactions where Merrill Lynch will typically make a loan to a customer in order to finance the customer's purchase of securities. These transactions are conducted through margin accounts In these transactions the customer is required to post collateral in excess of the value of the loan and the collateral must meet marketability criteria Collateral is valued daily and must be maintained over the life of the loan Given that these loans are fully collateralized by marketable securities, credit risk is negligible and reserves for loan losses are only required in rare circumstances

Brokers and Dealers Receivables and Payables

Receivables from brokers and dealers include amounts receivable for securities not delivered by Merrill Lynch to a purchaser by the settlement date ("fails to deliver"), margin deposits and commissions Payables to brokers and dealers include amounts payable for securities not received by Merrill Lynch from a seller by the settlement date ("fails to receive") Brokers and dealers receivables and payables additionally include amounts related to futures contracts on behalf of Merrill Lynch customers as well as net receivables or payables from unsettled trades Due to their short-term nature, the amounts recognized for brokers and dealers receivables and payables approximate fair value

Interest and Other Receivables and Payables

Interest and other receivables include interest receivable on corporate and governmental obligations, customer or other receivables, and stock-borrowed transactions Also included are receivables from income taxes, underwriting and advisory fees, commissions and fees, and other receivables Interest and other payables include interest payable for stock-loaned transactions, and short-term and long-term borrowings Also included are amounts payable for employee compensation and benefits, income taxes, non-trading derivatives, dividends, other reserves, and other payables

Equipment and Facilities

Equipment and facilities consist primarily of technology hardware and software, leasehold improvements, and owned facilities Equipment and facilities are reported at historical cost, net of accumulated depreciation and amortization, except for land, which is reported at historical cost

Depreciation and amortization are computed using the straight-line method Equipment is depreciated over its estimated useful life, while leasehold improvements are amortized over the lesser of the improvement's estimated economic useful life or the term of the lease Maintenance and repair costs are expensed as incurred Depreciation and amortization expense was $422 million, $591 million and $729 million for 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively.

Other Assets

Other assets include deferred tax assets, the excess of the fair value of pension assets over the related benefit obligations, other prepaid expenses, and other deferred charges Refer to Note 15 for further information

In addition, real estate purchased for investment purposes is also included in other assets. Real estate held in this category may be classified as either held and used or held for sale depending on the facts and circumstances Real estate held and used is valued at cost, less depreciation, and real estate held for sale is valued at the lower of cost or fair value, less estimated costs to sell

Deposits

Savings deposits are interest-bearing accounts that have no maturity or expiration date. Certificates of deposit are accounts that have a stipulated maturity and interest rate However, depositors may recover their funds prior to the stated maturity but may pay a penalty to do so In certain cases, Merrill Lynch enters into interest rate swaps to hedge the fair value risk in these deposits. The carrying amount of deposits approximates fair value

Short- and Long-Term Borrowings

Short and long-term borrowings are carried at either the principal amount borrowed, net of unamortized discounts or premiums, adjusted for the effects of fair value hedges or fair value under the fair value option election.

Merrill Lynch issues structured debt instruments that have coupons or repayment terms linked to the performance of debt or equity securities, indices, currencies, or commodities, generally referred to as hybrid debt instruments or structured notes. The contingent payment components of these obligations may meet the definition in Derivatives Accounting of an embedded derivative. Structured notes are generally accounted for under the fair value option election (see Note 4).

Merrill Lynch uses derivatives to manage the interest rate, currency, equity, and other risk exposures of its borrowings See Note 6 for additional information on the accounting for derivatives.

Stock-Based Compensation

Merrill Lynch accounts for stock-based compensation expense in accordance with ASC 718, Compensation — Stock Compensation ("Stock Compensation Accounting"), under which compensation expense for share-based awards that do not require future service are recorded immediately, while those that do require future service are amortized into expense over the relevant service period Further, expected forfeitures of share-based compensation awards for non-retirement-eligible employees are included in determining compensation expense

New Accounting Pronouncements

In April 2011, the Financial Accounting Standards Board (the "FASB") issued new accounting guidance on TDRs, including criteria to determine whether a loan modification represents a concession and whether the debtor is experiencing financial difficulties This new accounting guidance was effective as of September 30, 2011 with retrospective application back to January 1, 2011 The new accounting guidance was not material to Merrill Lynch

In April 2011, the FASB issued new accounting guidance that addresses effective control in repurchase agreements and eliminates the requirement for entities to consider whether the transferor/seller has the ability to repurchase the financial assets in a repurchase agreement This new accounting guidance was effective, on a prospective basis, for new transactions or modifications to existing transactions, on January 1, 2012 The adoption of this guidance will not have a material impact on Merrill Lynch's consolidated financial position or results of operations

In May 2011, the FASB issued amendments to Fair Value Accounting The amendments clarify the application of the highest and best use and valuation premise concepts, preclude the application of blockage factors in the valuation of all financial instruments and include criteria for applying the fair value measurement principles to portfolios of financial instruments The amendments additionally prescribe enhanced financial statement disclosures for Level 3 fair value measurements The new amendments were effective on January 1, 2012 The adoption of this guidance will not have a material impact on Merrill Lynch's consolidated financial position or results of operations

In June 2011, the FASB issued new accounting guidance on the presentation of comprehensive income in financial statements The new guidance requires entities to report components of comprehensive income in either a continuous statement of comprehensive income or two separate but consecutive statements This new accounting guidance is effective for Merrill Lynch for the three months ended March 31, 2012

In September 2011, the FASB issued new accounting guidance that simplifies goodwill impairment testing The new guidance permits entities to make a qualitative assessment of whether it is likely that the fair value of a reporting unit is less than its carrying value before applying the two-step impairment test. If, under this assessment, it is likely that the fair value of a reporting unit is greater than the carrying amount, an entity would not be required to perform the two-step impairment test. Merrill Lynch early adopted the new accounting guidance for the annual goodwill impairment test completed during the three months ended September 30, 2011

In December 2011, the FASB issued new accounting guidance that requires additional disclosures on financial instruments and derivative instruments that are either offset in accordance with existing accounting guidance or are subject to an enforceable master netting arrangement or similar agreement The new requirements do not change the accounting guidance on netting, but rather enhance the disclosures to more clearly show the impact of netting arrangements on a company's financial position. This new accounting guidance will be effective, on a retrospective basis for all comparative periods presented, beginning on January 1, 2013.

Note 2. Transactions with Bank of America

Merrill Lynch has entered into various transactions with Bank of America, primarily to integrate certain activities within either Bank of America or Merrill Lynch. Transactions with Bank of America also include various asset and liability transfers and transactions associated with intercompany sales and trading and financing activities.

Sale of U.S. Banks to Bank of America

During 2009, Merrill Lynch sold Merrill Lynch Bank USA ("MLBUSA") and Merrill Lynch Bank & Trust Co , FSB ("MLBT-FSB") to a subsidiary of Bank of America. In both transactions, Merrill Lynch sold the shares of the respective entity to Bank of America The sale price of each entity was equal to its net book value as of the date of transfer

The MLBUSA sale was completed on July 1, 2009, and the sale of MLBT-FSB was completed on November 2, 2009 After each sale was completed, MLBUSA and MLBT-FSB were merged into Bank of America, N A. ("BANA"), a subsidiary of Bank of America.

Acquisition of Banc of America Investment Services, Inc. ("BAI") from Bank of America

In October 2009, Bank of America contributed the shares of BAI, one of its wholly-owned broker-dealer subsidiaries, to ML & Co. Subsequent to the transfer, BAI was merged into MLPF&S The net amount contributed by Bank of America to ML & Co. was equal to BAI's net book value of approximately $263 million as of the date of transfer. In accordance with Business Combinations Accounting, Merrill Lynch's Consolidated Financial Statements include the results of BAI as if the contribution from Bank of America had occurred on January 1, 2009, the date at which both entities were first under the common control of Bank of America.

Merger with BASH

See Note 1 — "Merger with BASH" for further information on this transaction.

Other Related Party Transactions

Merrill Lynch has entered into various transactions with Bank of America, including transactions in connection with certain sales and trading and financing activities as well as the allocation of certain shared services Details on amounts receivable from and payable to Bank of America as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 are presented below

Receivables from Bank of America are comprised of:

Other payables	1,935	2,746
Long-term borrowings[1]	2,650	2,579

(1) Amounts include $2,578 of subordinated borrowings from Bank of America (see Note 12)

Total net revenues and non-interest expenses related to transactions with Bank of America for the year ended December 31, 2011 were $1 3 billion and $2 5 billion, respectively Net revenues for the year ended December 31, 2011 included $322 million of investment banking revenue from transactions involving Bank of America Total net revenues and non-interest expenses related to transactions with Bank of America for the year ended December 31, 2010 were $906 million and $807 million, respectively Net revenues for the year ended December 31, 2010 included a realized gain of approximately $280 million from the sale of approximately $11 billion of available-for-sale securities, $212 million of investment banking revenue from transactions involving Bank of America, and, as discussed below, a gain of approximately $600 million from the sale of Bloomberg Inc notes receivable to Bank of America Total net revenues and non-interest expenses related to transactions with Bank of America for the year ended December 31, 2009 were $1 5 billion and $739 million, respectively Net revenues for the year ended December 31, 2009 included $644 million of investment banking revenue from transactions involving Bank of America

Total net revenues related to transactions with Bank of America for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009 included intercompany service fee revenues of $925 million, $279 million and $200 million, respectively Total non-interest expenses related to transactions with Bank of America for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009 included intercompany service fee expenses of $2 3 billion, $538 million and $573 million, respectively. Intercompany service fee revenue and service fee expense from Bank of America represents the allocations of certain centralized or shared business activities between Merrill Lynch and Bank of America Such fees are generally determined in accordance with subsidiary transfer pricing agreements The increase in service fee revenue and expense in the year ended December 31, 2011 resulted from the integration of Bank of America's and Merrill Lynch's methodologies for allocating revenues and expenses associated with shared services with their subsidiaries.

A portion of the consideration received from Merrill Lynch's July 2008 sale of its stake in Bloomberg, L P to Bloomberg Inc. was notes issued by Bloomberg Inc , the general partner and owner of substantially all of Bloomberg, L.P The notes represent senior unsecured obligations of Bloomberg Inc In December 2010, Merrill Lynch sold the Bloomberg Inc. notes to Bank of America at fair value and recorded a gain of approximately $600 million

Bank of America and Merrill Lynch have entered into certain intercompany lending and borrowing arrangements to facilitate centralized liquidity management. Included in these arrangements is a $50 billion extendible one-year revolving credit facility that allows Bank of America to borrow funds from Merrill Lynch at a spread to LIBOR that is reset periodically and is consistent with other intercompany agreements The credit facility matures on January 1, 2013 and will automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding January 1st unless Merrill Lynch provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date There were no amounts outstanding at December 31, 2011 and approximately $6 1 billion outstanding at December 31, 2010 under this credit facility. In addition, in October 2011, Merrill Lynch entered into a short-term revolving credit facility that will allow Bank of America to borrow up to an additional $25 billion. Interest on borrowings under the credit facility is based on prevailing short-term market rates. At December 31, 2011, approximately $3 7 billion was outstanding under this credit facility See Note 12 for further information on intercompany financing agreements with Bank of America. In addition, Bank of America has guaranteed the performance of Merrill Lynch on certain derivative transactions (see Note 6) Bank of America has also guaranteed certain debt securities, warrants and/or other certificates and obligations of certain subsidiaries of ML & Co. (see Note 12).

Note 3. Segment and Geographic Information

Segment Information

Pursuant to ASC 280, Segment Reporting, operating segments represent components of an enterprise for which separate financial information is available that is regularly evaluated by the chief operating decision maker in determining how to allocate resources and in assessing performance. The business activities of Merrill Lynch are included within certain of the operating segments of Bank of America. Detailed financial information related to the operations of Merrill Lynch, however, is not provided to Merrill Lynch's chief operating decision maker. As a result, Merrill Lynch does not contain any identifiable operating segments under Segment Reporting, and therefore the financial information of Merrill Lynch is presented as a single segment.

Geographic Information

Merrill Lynch conducts its business activities through offices in the following five regions

- United States,
- Europe, Middle East, and Africa ("EMEA");
- Pacific Rim;
- Latin America, and
- Canada

The principal methodologies used in preparing the geographic information below are as follows:

- Revenues are generally recorded based on the location of the employee generating the revenue, and
- Intercompany transfers are based primarily on service agreements.

The information that follows, in management's judgment, provides a reasonable representation of each region's contribution to the consolidated net revenues

Fair Value Accounting

Fair Value Hierarchy

In accordance with Fair Value Accounting, Merrill Lynch has categorized its financial instruments, based on the priority of the inputs to the valuation technique, into a three-level fair value hierarchy

The fair value hierarchy gives the highest priority to quoted prices in active markets for identical assets or liabilities (Level 1) and the lowest priority to unobservable inputs (Level 3).

Financial assets and liabilities recorded on the Consolidated Balance Sheets are categorized based on the inputs to the valuation techniques as follows

Level 1 Financial assets and liabilities whose values are based on unadjusted quoted prices for identical assets or liabilities in an active market that Merrill Lynch has the ability to access (examples include active exchange-traded equity securities, exchange-traded derivatives, U.S Government securities, and certain other sovereign government obligations)

Level 2 Financial assets and liabilities whose values are based on quoted prices in markets that are not active or model inputs that are observable either directly or indirectly for substantially the full term of the asset or liability Level 2 inputs include the following.

a) Quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities in active markets (examples include restricted stock and U S agency securities),

b) Quoted prices for identical or similar assets or liabilities in non-active markets (examples include corporate and municipal bonds, which can trade infrequently),

c) Pricing models whose inputs are observable for substantially the full term of the asset or liability (examples include most over-the-counter derivatives, including interest rate and currency swaps); and

d) Pricing models whose inputs are derived principally from or corroborated by observable market data through correlation or other means for substantially the full term of the asset or liability (examples include certain residential and commercial mortgage-related assets, including loans, securities and derivatives)

Level 3 Financial assets and liabilities whose values are based on prices or valuation techniques that require inputs that are both unobservable and significant to the overall fair value measurement. These inputs reflect management's view about the assumptions a market participant would use in pricing the asset or liability (examples include certain private equity investments, certain residential and commercial mortgage-related assets and long-dated or complex derivatives)

As required by Fair Value Accounting, when the inputs used to measure fair value fall within different levels of the hierarchy, the level within which the fair value measurement is categorized is based on the lowest level input that is significant to the fair value measurement in its entirety For example, a Level 3 fair value measurement may include inputs that are observable (Level 1 and 2) and unobservable (Level 3) Therefore gains and losses for such assets and liabilities categorized within the Level 3 reconciliation below may include changes in fair value that are attributable to both observable inputs (Levels 1 and 2) and unobservable inputs (Level 3) Further, the following reconciliations do not take into consideration the offsetting effect of Level 1 and 2 financial instruments entered into by Merrill Lynch that economically hedge certain exposures to the Level 3 positions.

A review of fair value hierarchy classifications is conducted on a quarterly basis Changes in the observability of valuation inputs may result in a reclassification for certain financial assets or liabilities. Level 3 gains and losses represent amounts incurred during the period in which the instrument was classified as Level 3 Reclassifications impacting Level 3 of the fair value hierarchy are reported as transfers in or transfers out of the Level 3 category as of the beginning of the quarter in which the reclassifications occur Refer to the recurring and non-recurring sections within this Note for further information on transfers in and out of Level 3.

Valuation Techniques

The following outlines the valuation methodologies for Merrill Lynch's material categories of assets and liabilities

U S. Government and agencies

U.S. Treasury securities U.S. Treasury securities are valued using quoted market prices and are generally classified as Level 1 in the fair value hierarchy

U.S. agency securities U S agency securities are comprised of two main categories consisting of agency issued debt and mortgage pass-throughs The fair value of agency issued debt securities is derived using market prices and recent trade activity gathered from independent dealer pricing services or brokers. Mortgage pass-throughs include To-be-announced ("TBA") securities and mortgage pass-through certificates TBA securities are generally valued using quoted market prices Generally, the fair value of mortgage pass-through certificates is based on market prices of comparable securities Agency issued debt securities and mortgage pass-throughs are generally classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy.

Non-U S governments and agencies

Sovereign government obligations Sovereign government obligations are valued using quoted prices in active markets when available To the extent quoted prices are not available, fair value is determined based on reference to recent trading activity and quoted prices of similar securities. These securities are generally classified in Level 1 or Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy, primarily based on the issuing country.

Municipal debt

Municipal bonds The fair value of municipal bonds is calculated using recent trade activity, market price quotations and new issuance levels In the absence of this information, fair value is calculated using comparable bond credit spreads Current interest rates, credit events, and individual bond characteristics such as coupon, call features, maturity, and revenue purpose are considered in the valuation process The majority of these bonds are classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy

Auction Rate Securities ("ARS") Merrill Lynch holds investments in certain ARS, including student loan and municipal ARS Student loan ARS are comprised of various pools of student loans Municipal ARS are issued by states and municipalities for a wide variety of purposes, including but not limited to healthcare, industrial development, education and transportation infrastructure The fair value of the student loan ARS is calculated using a pricing model that relies upon a number of assumptions including weighted average life, coupon, discount margin and liquidity discounts. The fair value of the municipal ARS is calculated based upon projected refinancing and spread assumptions In both cases, recent trades and issuer tenders are considered in the valuations Student loan ARS and municipal ARS are classified as Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy

Corporate and other debt

Corporate bonds Corporate bonds are valued based on either the most recent observable trade and/or external quotes, depending on availability The most recent observable trade price is given highest priority as the valuation benchmark based on an evaluation of transaction date, size, frequency, and bid-offer. This price may be adjusted by bond or credit default swap spread movement When credit default swap spreads are referenced, cash-to-synthetic basis magnitude and movement as well as maturity matching are incorporated into the value. When neither external quotes nor a recent trade is available, the bonds are valued using a discounted cash flow approach based on risk parameters of comparable securities In such cases, the potential pricing difference in spread and/or price terms with the traded comparable is considered Corporate bonds are generally classified as Level 2 or Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy

Corporate loans and commitments The fair values of corporate loans and loan commitments are based on market prices and most recent transactions when available When not available, a discounted cash flow valuation approach is applied using market-based credit spreads of comparable debt instruments, recent new issuance activity or relevant credit derivatives with appropriate cash-to-synthetic basis adjustments Corporate loans and commitments are generally classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy. Certain corporate loans, particularly those related to emerging market, leveraged and distressed companies have limited price transparency These loans are generally classified as Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy

Mortgages, mortgage-backed and asset-backed

Residential Mortgage-Backed Securities ("RMBS"), Commercial Mortgage-Backed Securities ("CMBS"), and other Asset-Backed Securities ("ABS") RMBS, CMBS and other ABS are valued based on observable price or credit spreads for the particular security, or when price or credit spreads are not observable, the valuation is based on prices of comparable bonds or the present value of expected future cash flows. Valuation levels of RMBS and CMBS indices are used as an additional data point for benchmarking purposes or to price outright index positions

When estimating the fair value based upon the present value of expected future cash flows, Merrill Lynch uses its best estimate of the key assumptions, including forecasted credit losses, prepayment rates, forward yield curves and discount rates commensurate with the risks involved, while also taking into account performance of the underlying collateral

RMBS, CMBS and other ABS are classified as Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy if external prices or credit spreads are unobservable or if comparable trades/assets involve significant subjectivity related to property type differences, cash flows, performance and other inputs, otherwise, they are classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy

Equities

Exchange-Traded Equity Securities Exchange-traded equity securities are generally valued based on quoted prices from the exchange To the extent these securities are actively traded, they are classified as Level 1 in the fair value hierarchy, otherwise they are classified as Level 2

Convertible debentures Convertible debentures are valued based on observable trades and/or external quotes, depending on availability When neither observable trades nor external quotes are available, the instruments are valued using a discounted cash flow approach based on risk parameters of comparable securities In such cases, the potential pricing difference in spread and/or price terms with the traded comparable is considered. Convertible debentures are generally classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy.

Derivative contracts

Listed Derivative Contracts Listed derivatives that are actively traded are generally valued based on quoted prices from the exchange and are classified as Level 1 in the fair value hierarchy Listed derivatives that are not actively traded are valued using the same approaches as those applied to OTC derivatives, they are generally classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy

OTC Derivative Contracts OTC derivative contracts include forwards, swaps and options related to interest rate, foreign currency, credit, equity or commodity underlyings.

The fair value of OTC derivatives is derived using market prices and other market based pricing parameters such as interest rates, currency rates and volatilities that are observed directly in the market or gathered from independent sources such as dealer consensus pricing services or brokers. Where models are used, they are used consistently and reflect the contractual terms of and specific risks inherent in the contracts Generally, the models do not require a high level of subjectivity since the valuation techniques used in the models do not require significant judgment and inputs to the models are readily observable in active markets. When appropriate, valuations are adjusted for various factors such as liquidity and credit considerations based on available market evidence In addition, for most collateralized interest rate and currency derivatives the requirement to pay interest on the collateral may be considered in the valuation The majority of OTC derivative contracts are classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy

OTC derivative contracts that do not have readily observable market based pricing parameters are classified as Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy. Examples of derivative contracts classified within Level 3 include contractual obligations that have tenures that extend beyond periods in which inputs to the model would be observable, exotic derivatives with significant inputs into a valuation model that are less transparent in the market and certain credit default swaps ("CDS") referenced to mortgage-backed securities. For example, derivative instruments, such as certain CDS referenced to RMBS, CMBS, ABS and collateralized debt obligations ("CDOs"), may be valued based on the underlying mortgage risk where these instruments are not actively quoted Inputs to the valuation will include available information on similar underlying loans or securities in the cash market The prepayments and loss assumptions on the underlying loans or securities are estimated using a combination of historical data, prices on recent market transactions, relevant observable market indices such as the Asset Backed Securities Index ("ABX") or Commercial Mortgage Backed Securities Index ("CMBX") and prepayment and default scenarios and analyses.

CDOs The fair value of CDOs is derived from a referenced basket of CDS, the CDO's capital structure, and the default correlation, which is an input to a proprietary CDO valuation model The underlying CDO portfolios typically contain investment grade as well as non-investment grade obligors. After adjusting for differences in risk profile, the correlation parameter for an actual transaction is estimated by benchmarking against observable standardized index tranches and other comparable transactions CDOs are classified as either Level 2 or Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy.

Investment securities non-qualifying

Investments in Private Equity, Real Estate and Hedge Funds Merrill Lynch has investments in numerous asset

classes, including direct private equity, private equity funds, hedge funds and real estate funds Valuing these investments requires significant management judgment due to the nature of the assets and the lack of quoted market prices and liquidity in these assets Initially, the transaction price of the investment is generally considered to be the best indicator of fair value Thereafter, valuation of direct investments is based on an assessment of each individual investment using various methodologies, which include publicly traded comparables derived by multiplying a key performance metric (e.g , earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization) of the portfolio company by the relevant valuation multiple observed for comparable companies, acquisition comparables, entry level multiples and discounted cash flows These valuations are subject to appropriate discounts for lack of liquidity or marketability Certain factors which may influence changes to fair value include but are not limited to, recapitalizations, subsequent rounds of financing, and offerings in the equity or debt capital markets For fund investments, Merrill Lynch generally records the fair value of its proportionate interest in the fund's capital as reported by the fund's respective managers

Investment securities non-qualifying include equity securities that have recently gone through initial public offerings or secondary sales of public positions These investments are primarily classified as either Level 1 or Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy Level 2 classifications generally include those publicly traded equity investments that have a legal or contractual transfer restriction All other investments in private equity, real estate and hedge funds are classified as Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy due to infrequent trading and/or unobservable market prices

Resale and repurchase agreements

Merrill Lynch elected the fair value option for certain resale and repurchase agreements For such agreements, the fair value is estimated using a discounted cash flow model which incorporates inputs such as interest rate yield curves and option volatility Resale and repurchase agreements for which the fair value option has been elected are generally classified as Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy.

Long-term and short-term borrowings

Merrill Lynch and its consolidated VIEs issue structured notes that have coupons or repayment terms linked to the performance of debt or equity securities, indices, currencies or commodities. The fair value of structured notes is estimated using valuation models for the combined derivative and debt portions of the notes when the fair value option has been elected These models incorporate observable, and in some instances unobservable, inputs including security prices, interest rate yield curves, option volatility, currency, commodity or equity rates and correlations between these inputs The impact of Merrill Lynch's own credit spreads is also included based on Merrill Lynch's observed secondary bond market spreads Structured notes are classified as either Level 2 or Level 3 in the fair value hierarchy

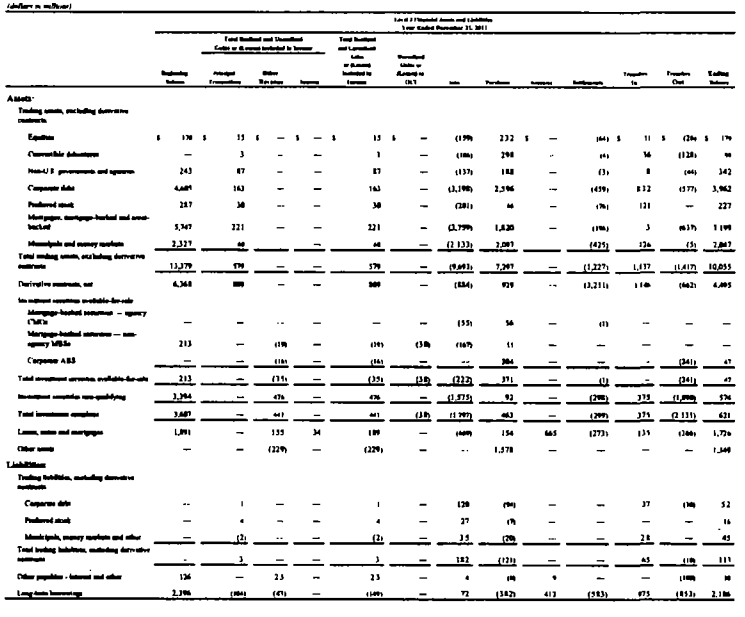
The following tables provide a summary of changes in Merrill Lynch's Level 3 financial assets and liabilities for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009



Sales of corporate debt primarily relates to sales of corporate ARS and distressed loans during the first quarter of 2011 Sales of mortgages, mortgage-backed and asset-backed securities primarily relates to the sale of CDO positions in conjunction with the liquidation of a VIE and sales of collateralized loan obligation ("CLO") positions due to the exit of Merrill Lynch's proprietary trading business. Purchases of corporate debt primarily relates to purchases of non-investment grade and distressed corporate loans and bonds Purchases of mortgages, mortgage-backed and asset-backed securities primarily relates to purchases of CDO and CLO positions Sales and purchases of municipal securities is primarily due to dealer activity in student loan ARS Sales of investment securities non-qualifying primarily relates to the sale of private equity investments during 2011.

The purchases for other assets and settlements for derivative contracts, net reflect the reclassification of approximately $1 6 billion of net monoline exposure from derivative contracts (assets) to other assets because of the inherent default risk and given that these contracts no longer provide a hedge benefit.

Transfers out for convertible debentures are due to increased observability (i.e., market comparables) for certain convertible bond positions. Transfers in for corporate debt are primarily due to decreased observability (i e , decreased market liquidity) for certain corporate loans and bonds Transfers out for corporate debt primarily relates to increased price observability (i e , market comparables) for certain corporate bond positions Transfers out for mortgages, mortgage-backed and asset-backed securities primarily relates to increased price observability for certain RMBS, CMBS and consumer ABS portfolios Transfers in for derivative contracts, net primarily relates to changes in the valuation methodology for certain CDOs and total return swaps ("TRS"), in addition to certain equity derivative positions with unobservable correlation Transfers out for derivative contracts, net primarily relates to increased price observability for certain equity and credit derivative positions

Transfers out for investment securities available-for-sale - corporate ABS are due to increased price observability (i e , market comparables) for certain positions Transfers in for investment securities non-qualifying are due to a change in the valuation methodology for a real estate private equity fund Transfers out related to investment securities non-qualifying are primarily due to a private equity investment that underwent an initial public offering during the first quarter of 2011. Transfers out for loans, notes and mortgages and other payables - interest and other primarily relates to increased observability (i e., market comparables) for certain corporate loans and unfunded loan commitments Transfers in and out related to long-term borrowings are primarily due to changes in the impact of unobservable inputs on the value of certain equity-linked structured notes

Decreases in purchases, issuances and settlements related to municipals and money markets primarily relates to the sale of municipal ARS during the fourth quarter of 2010. Decreases in purchases, issuances and settlements related to investment securities non-qualifying relates to the settlement of certain private equity investments Decreases in purchases, issuances and settlements related to loans, notes and mortgages primarily relates to sales and repayments of some sizable positions and portfolios during the first and second quarters of 2010 in addition to sales and the deconsolidation of certain loan VIEs during the fourth quarter of 2010 Decreases in purchases, issuances and settlements related to long-term borrowings relates to the deconsolidation of certain loan VIEs during the fourth quarter of 2010.

Transfers in for corporate debt primarily relates to reduced price transparency for certain corporate bond positions. Transfers in for municipals and money markets relates to reduced price transparency (e g., lower trading activity) for municipal ARS. Transfers out for corporate debt primarily relates to increased price testing coverage for certain positions. Transfers in and transfers out related to long-term borrowings are primarily due to changes in the impact of unobservable inputs on the value of certain equity-linked structured notes

Other payables - interest and other includes amounts recorded for loan commitments at lower of cost or fair value where the funded loan will be held for sale.

Fair Value Option Election

The fair value option election allows companies to irrevocably elect fair value as the initial and subsequent measurement attribute for certain financial assets and liabilities Changes in fair value for assets and liabilities for which the election is made will be recognized in earnings as they occur The fair value option election is permitted on an instrument by instrument basis at initial recognition of an asset or liability or upon an event that gives rise to a new basis of accounting for that instrument. As discussed above, certain of Merrill Lynch's financial instruments are required to be accounted for at fair value under Investment Accounting and Derivatives Accounting, as well as industry level guidance. For certain financial instruments that are not accounted for at fair value under other applicable accounting guidance, the fair value option election has been made

The following tables provide information about the line items in the Consolidated Statements of (Loss) Earnings where changes in fair values of assets and liabilities, for which the fair value option election has been made, are included for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009

(2) Other revenues primarily represent fair value changes on non-recourse long-term borrowings issued by consolidated VIEs

The following describes the rationale for electing to account for certain financial assets and liabilities at fair value, as well as the impact of instrument-specific credit risk on the fair value

Resale and repurchase agreements

Merrill Lynch elected the fair value option for certain resale and repurchase agreements and, to a lesser extent, securities lending. The fair value option election was made based on the tenor of the agreements, which reflect the magnitude of the interest rate risk. The majority of resale and repurchase agreements collateralized by U S Government securities were excluded from the fair value option election as these contracts are generally short-dated and therefore the interest rate risk is not considered significant. Amounts loaned under resale agreements require collateral with a market value equal to or in excess of the principal amount loaned, resulting in minimal credit risk for such transactions.

Loans and loan commitments

Merrill Lynch made the fair value option election for certain loans that are risk managed on a fair value basis. Upon the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch also made the fair value option election for certain mortgage, corporate, and leveraged loans and loan commitments The changes in the fair value of loans and commitments, for which the fair value option was elected, that were attributable to changes in borrower-specific credit risk were not material for the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, and were gains of $560 million for the year ended December 31, 2009

As of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the aggregate fair value of loans for which the fair value option election has been made that were 90 days or more past due was $28 million and $32 million, respectively, and the aggregate fair value of loans that were in non-accrual status was $117 million and $32 million at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively As of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the unpaid principal amount due exceeded the aggregate fair value of such loans that are 90 days or more past due and/or in non-accrual status by $172 million and $173 million, respectively.

Short-term and long-term borrowings

Merrill Lynch made the fair value option election for certain short-term and long-term borrowings that are risk managed on a fair value basis (e g , structured notes) and/or for which hedge accounting under Derivatives Accounting had been difficult to obtain The majority of the fair value changes on long-term borrowings are from structured notes with coupon or repayment terms that are linked to the performance of debt and equity securities, indices, currencies or commodities Excluding gains (losses) related to changes in Merrill Lynch's credit spreads, the majority of the gains (losses) for the respective years are offset by gains (losses) on derivatives and securities that economically hedge these borrowings and that are accounted for at fair value The changes in the fair value of liabilities for which the fair value option election was made that were attributable to changes in Merrill Lynch's credit spreads were gains of approximately $2.0 billion, losses of approximately $0 1 billion and losses of approximately $5 2 billion for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009, respectively. Changes in Merrill Lynch specific credit risk are derived by isolating fair value changes due to changes in Merrill Lynch's credit spreads as observed in the secondary cash market

The fair value option election was also made for certain non-recourse long-term borrowings and secured borrowings issued by consolidated VIEs The fair value of these borrowings is not materially affected by changes in Merrill Lynch's creditworthiness

The following tables present the difference between fair values and the aggregate contractual principal amounts of receivables under resale agreements, receivables under securities borrowed transactions, loans and long-term borrowings for which the fair value option election has been made as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

(2) The majority of the difference between the fair value and principal amount due upon maturity at December 31, 2011

relates to the impact of widening of Merrill Lynch's credit spreads, as well as the fair value of the embedded derivative, where applicable

(1) The fair value and principal amount due upon maturity of receivables under resale agreements have been revised from approximately $51 billion for each (as previously reported) to approximately $74 billion

(2) The majority of the difference relates to the impact of the widening of Merrill Lynch's credit spreads, the change in fair value of non-recourse debt, and zero coupon notes issued at a substantial discount from the principal amount

Trading Risk Management

Trading activities subject Merrill Lynch to market and credit risks These risks are managed in accordance with established risk management policies and procedures On January 1, 2009, pursuant to the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch adopted Bank of America's risk management and governance practices to maintain consistent risk measurement and disciplined risk taking Bank of America's risk management structure as applicable to Merrill Lynch is described below

Bank of America's Global Markets Risk Committee ("GRC"), chaired by Bank of America's Global Markets Risk Executive, has been designated by its Asset, Liability and Market Risk Committee ("ALMRC") as the primary governance authority for its Global Markets Risk Management, including trading risk management. The GRC's focus is to take a forward-looking view of the primary credit and market risks impacting Bank of America's Global Banking and Markets business (which includes Merrill Lynch's sales and trading businesses) and prioritize those that need a proactive risk mitigation strategy. Market risks that impact businesses outside of the Global Banking and Markets business are monitored and governed by their respective governance authorities

The GRC monitors significant daily revenues and losses by business and the primary drivers of the revenues or losses Thresholds are in place for each business in order to determine if the revenue or loss is considered to be significant for that business. If any of the thresholds are exceeded, an explanation of the variance is provided to the GRC The thresholds are developed in coordination with the respective risk managers to highlight those revenues or losses that exceed what is considered to be normal daily income statement volatility.

Market Risk

Market risk is the potential change in an instrument's value caused by fluctuations in interest and currency exchange rates, equity and commodity prices, credit spreads, or other risks The level of market risk is influenced by the volatility and the liquidity in the markets in which financial instruments are traded.

Merrill Lynch seeks to mitigate market risk associated with trading inventories by employing hedging strategies that correlate rate, price, and spread movements of trading inventories and related financing and hedging activities Merrill Lynch uses a combination of cash instruments and derivatives to hedge its market exposures. The following discussion describes the types of market risk faced by Merrill Lynch.

Interest Rate Risk

Interest rate risk arises from the possibility that changes in interest rates will affect the value of financial instruments Interest rate swap agreements, Eurodollar futures, and U S Treasury securities and futures are common interest rate risk management tools The decision to manage interest rate risk using futures or swap contracts, as opposed to buying or selling short U.S. Treasury or other securities, depends on current market conditions and funding considerations.

Interest rate agreements used by Merrill Lynch include caps, collars, floors, basis swaps, leveraged swaps, and options Interest rate caps and floors provide the purchaser with protection against rising and falling interest rates, respectively. Interest rate collars combine a cap and a flour, providing the purchaser with a predetermined interest rate range Basis swaps are a type of interest rate swap agreement where variable rates are received and paid, but are based on different index rates. Leveraged swaps are another type of interest rate swap where changes in the variable rate are multiplied by a contractual leverage factor, such as four times three-month London Interbank Offered Rate ("LIBOR") Merrill Lynch's exposure to interest rate risk resulting from these leverage factors is typically hedged with other financial instruments.

Currency Risk

Currency risk arises from the possibility that fluctuations in foreign exchange rates will impact the value of financial instruments. Merrill Lynch's trading assets and liabilities include both cash instruments denominated in and derivatives linked to more than 50 currencies, including the euro, Japanese yen, British pound, and Swiss franc. Currency forwards and options are commonly used to manage currency risk associated with these instruments Currency swaps may also be used in situations where a long-dated forward market is not available or where the client needs a customized instrument to hedge a foreign currency cash flow stream Typically, parties to a currency swap initially exchange principal amounts in two currencies, agreeing to exchange interest payments and to re-exchange the currencies at a future date and exchange rate.

Equity Price Risk

Equity price risk arises from the possibility that equity security prices will fluctuate, affecting the value of equity securities and other instruments that derive their value from a particular stock, a defined basket of stocks, or a stock index Instruments typically used by Merrill Lynch to manage equity price risk include equity options, warrants, and baskets of equity securities. Equity options, for example, can require the writer to purchase or sell a specified stock or to make a cash payment based on changes in the market price of that stock, basket of stocks, or stock index

Credit Spread Risk

Credit spread risk arises from the possibility that changes in credit spreads will affect the value of financial instruments Credit spreads represent the credit risk premiums required by market participants for a given credit quality (e g , the additional yield that a debt instrument issued by a AA-rated entity must produce over a risk-free alternative) Certain instruments are used by Merrill Lynch to manage this type of risk. Swaps and options, for example, can be designed to mitigate losses due to changes in credit spreads, as well as the credit downgrade or default of the issuer. Credit risk resulting from default on counterparty obligations is discussed in the Counterparty Credit Risk section

Commodity Price and Other Risks

Through its commodities business, Merrill Lynch enters into exchange-traded contracts, financially settled OTC derivatives, contracts for physical delivery and contracts providing for the transportation, transmission and/or storage rights on or in vessels, barges, pipelines, transmission lines or storage facilities Commodity, related storage, transportation or other contracts expose Merrill Lynch to the risk that the price of the underlying commodity or the cost of storing or transporting commodities may rise or fall. In addition, contracts relating to physical ownership and/or delivery can expose Merrill Lynch to numerous other risks, including performance and environmental risks

Counterparty Credit Risk

Merrill Lynch is exposed to risk of loss if an individual, counterparty or issuer fails to perform its obligations under contractual terms ("default risk") Both cash instruments and derivatives expose Merrill Lynch to default risk. Credit risk arising from changes in credit spreads is discussed above.

Merrill Lynch has established policies and procedures for mitigating credit risk on principal transactions, including reviewing and establishing limits for credit exposure, maintaining qualifying collateral, purchasing credit protection, and continually assessing the creditworthiness of counterparties

In the normal course of business, Merrill Lynch executes, settles, and finances various customer securities transactions Execution of these transactions includes the purchase and sale of securities by Merrill Lynch. These activities may expose Merrill Lynch to default risk arising from the potential that customers or counterparties may fail to satisfy their obligations. In these situations, Merrill Lynch may be required to purchase or sell financial instruments at unfavorable market prices to satisfy obligations to other customers or counterparties. In addition, Merrill Lynch seeks to control the risks associated with its customer margin activities by requiring customers to maintain collateral in compliance with regulatory and internal guidelines

Liabilities to other brokers and dealers related to unsettled transactions (i.e , securities failed-to-receive) are recorded at the amount for which the securities were purchased, and are paid upon receipt of the securities from other brokers or dealers In the case of aged securities failed-to-receive, Merrill Lynch may purchase the underlying security in the market and seek reimbursement for losses from the counterparty.

Concentrations of Credit Risk

Merrill Lynch's exposure to credit risk (both default and credit spread) associated with its trading and other activities is measured on an individual counterparty basis, as well as by groups of counterparties that share similar attributes. Concentrations of credit risk can be affected by changes in political, industry, or economic factors. To reduce the potential for risk concentration, credit limits are established and monitored in light of changing counterparty and market conditions

Concentration of Risk to the U S. Government and its Agencies

At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch had exposure to the U.S. Government and its agencies. This concentration consists of both direct and indirect exposures. Direct exposure, which primarily includes trading asset positions in instruments issued by the U.S Government and its agencies, amounted to $43 0 billion at December 31, 2011 Merrill Lynch's indirect exposure results from maintaining U S. Government and agencies securities as collateral for resale agreements and securities borrowed transactions Merrill Lynch's direct credit exposure on these transactions is with the counterparty, thus Merrill Lynch has credit exposure to the U.S. Government and its agencies only in the event of the counterparty's default Securities issued by the U S Government or its agencies held as collateral for resale agreements and securities borrowed transactions at December 31, 2011 totaled $128.2 billion

Other Concentrations of Risk

At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch had other concentrations of credit risk, the largest of which was related to a counterparty having a total outstanding unsecured exposure of approximately $1 3 billion.

Merrill Lynch's most significant industry credit concentration is with financial institutions. Financial institutions include banks, insurance companies, finance companies, investment managers, and other diversified financial institutions This concentration arises in the normal course of Merrill Lynch's brokerage, trading, hedging, financing, and underwriting activities Merrill Lynch also monitors credit exposures worldwide by region. Outside the U S , financial institutions and multi-national corporations represent the most significant concentrations of credit risk.

In the normal course of business, Merrill Lynch purchases, sells, underwrites, and makes markets in non-investment grade instruments Merrill Lynch also provides extensions of credit and makes equity investments to facilitate leveraged transactions These activities expose Merrill Lynch to a higher degree of credit risk than is associated with trading, investing in, and underwriting investment grade instruments and extending credit to investment grade counterparties

Derivatives

Merrill Lynch's trading derivatives consist of derivatives provided to customers and derivatives entered into for trading strategies or risk management purposes

Default risk exposure varies by type of derivative Default risk on derivatives can occur for the full notional amount of the trade where a final exchange of principal takes place, as may be the case for currency swaps. Swap agreements and forward contracts are generally OTC-transacted and thus are exposed to default risk to the extent of their replacement cost Since futures contracts are exchange-traded and usually require daily cash settlement, the related risk of loss is generally limited to a one-day net positive change in fair value Generally such receivables and payables are recorded in customers' receivables and payables on the Consolidated Balance Sheets. Option contracts can be exchange-traded or OTC Purchased options have default risk to the extent of their replacement cost Written options represent a potential obligation to counterparties and typically do not subject Merrill Lynch to default risk except under circumstances where the option premium is being financed or in cases where Merrill Lynch is required to post collateral Refer to Note 6 for further information on credit risk management related to derivatives Additional information about derivatives that meet the definition of a guarantee for accounting purposes is included in Note 6

Note 5. Fair Value of Financial Instruments

The fair values of financial instruments have been derived, in part, by management's assumptions, the estimated amount and timing of future cash flows and estimated discount rates Different assumptions could significantly affect these estimated fair values Accordingly, the net realizable values could be materially different from the estimates presented below In addition, the estimates are only indicative of the value of individual financial instruments and should not be considered an indication of the fair value of Merrill Lynch.

The following disclosures relate to financial instruments for which the ending balances at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 are not carried at fair value in their entirety on Merrill Lynch's Consolidated Balance Sheets

Short-term Financial Instruments

The carrying value of short-term financial instruments, including cash and cash equivalents, cash and securities segregated for regulatory purposes or deposited with clearing organizations, certain securities financing transactions, customer and broker-dealer receivables and payables, and commercial paper and other short-term borrowings, approximates the fair value of these instruments These financial instruments generally expose Merrill Lynch to limited credit risk and have no stated maturities or have short-term maturities and carry interest rates that approximate market interest rates

Loans, Notes and Mortgages

Fair values were generally determined by discounting both principal and interest cash flows expected to be collected using an observable discount rate for similar instruments with adjustments that Merrill Lynch believes a market participant would consider in determining fair value Merrill Lynch estimates the cash flows expected to be collected using internal credit risk, interest rate and prepayment risk models that incorporate its best estimate of current key assumptions, such as default rates, loss severity and prepayment speeds for the life of the loan. Merrill Lynch made the fair value option election for certain loans and loan commitments See Note 4 for additional information.

Deposits

The fair value for certain deposits with stated maturities was determined by discounting contractual cash flows using current market rates for instruments with similar maturities. For deposits with no stated maturities, the carrying amount was considered to approximate fair value and does not take into account the significant value of the cost advantage and stability of Merrill Lynch's long-term relationships with depositors

Long-term Borrowings

Merrill Lynch uses quoted market prices, when available, to estimate the fair value of its long-term borrowings When quoted market prices are not available, fair value is estimated based on current market interest rates and credit spreads for Merrill Lynch debt with similar terms and maturities. Merrill Lynch made the fair value option election for certain long-term borrowings, including structured notes. See Note 4 for additional information

The book and fair values of certain financial instruments at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 were as follows

	December 31, 2011		December 31, 2010

(1) Loans are presented net of the allowance for loan losses
(2) Includes junior subordinated notes (related to trust preferred securities)

Note 6. Derivatives

A derivative is an instrument whose value is derived from an underlying instrument or index, such as interest rates, equity security prices, currencies, commodity prices or credit spreads Derivatives include futures, forwards, swaps, option contracts, and other financial instruments with similar characteristics. Derivative contracts often involve future commitments to exchange interest payment streams or currencies based on a notional or contractual amount (e g., interest rate swaps or currency forwards) or to purchase or sell other financial instruments at specified terms on a specified date (e g , options to buy or sell securities or currencies)

Derivatives Accounting establishes accounting and reporting standards for derivative instruments, including certain derivative instruments embedded in other contracts ("embedded derivatives") and for hedging activities Derivatives Accounting requires that an entity recognize all derivatives as either assets or liabilities and measure those instruments at fair value The fair value of all derivatives is recorded on a net-by-counterparty basis on the Consolidated Balance Sheets where Merrill Lynch believes a legal right of setoff exists under an enforceable netting agreement. All derivatives, including bifurcated embedded derivatives within structured notes, are reported on the Consolidated Balance Sheets as trading assets and liabilities

The accounting for changes in fair value of a derivative instrument depends on its intended use and if it is designated and qualifies as an accounting hedging instrument under Derivatives Accounting.

Trading derivatives

Merrill Lynch enters into derivatives to facilitate client transactions, for trading and financing purposes, and to manage risk exposures arising from trading assets and liabilities Changes in fair value for these derivatives are reported in current period earnings as principal transactions revenues

Derivatives that contain a significant financing element

In the ordinary course of trading activities, Merrill Lynch enters into certain transactions that are documented as derivatives where a significant cash investment is made by one party Certain derivative instruments that contain a significant financing element at inception and where Merrill Lynch is deemed to be the borrower are included in financing activities in the Consolidated Statements of Cash Flows The cash flows from all other derivative transactions that do not contain a significant financing element at inception are included in operating activities

Non-trading derivatives

Merrill Lynch also enters into derivatives in order to manage risk exposures arising from assets and liabilities not carried at fair value as follows

1 Merrill Lynch's debt was issued in a variety of maturities and currencies to achieve the lowest cost financing possible Merrill Lynch enters into derivative transactions to hedge these liabilities Derivatives used most frequently include swap agreements that:

- Convert fixed-rate interest payments into variable-rate interest payments,
- Change the underlying interest rate basis or reset frequency, and
- Change the settlement currency of a debt instrument

Changes in the fair value of interest rate and foreign currency derivatives are reported in interest expense or other revenues

2 Merrill Lynch uses foreign-exchange forward contracts, foreign-exchange options, and currency swaps to hedge its net investments in foreign operations, as well as other foreign currency exposures (e g , non-U S dollar denominated debt and expenses) These derivatives are used to mitigate the impact of changes in exchange rates. Changes in the fair value of these derivatives are reported in OCI, other revenue and interest expense when net investment hedge accounting is applied; otherwise changes in fair value are reported in other revenues.

3 Merrill Lynch enters into futures, swaps, options and forward contracts to manage the price risk of certain commodity inventory and forecasted commodity purchases and sales. Changes in fair value of these derivatives are reported in principal transactions revenues, unless cash flow hedge accounting is applied.

4 Merrill Lynch enters into CDS to manage the credit risk on certain loans that are not part of trading activities. Changes in the fair value of these derivatives are reported in other revenue.

Derivatives that qualify as accounting hedges under the guidance in Derivatives Accounting are designated as one of the following

1 A hedge of the fair value of a recognized asset or liability ("fair value hedge") Changes in the fair value of derivatives that are designated and qualify as fair value hedges of interest rate risk, foreign exchange risk and commodity price risk, along with the gain or loss on the hedged asset or liability that is attributable to the hedged risk, are recorded in current period earnings as interest expense, other revenues, or principal transactions

2 A hedge of the variability of cash flows to be received or paid related to a recognized asset or liability ("cash flow hedge"). Changes in the fair value of derivatives that are designated and qualify as cash flow hedges are recorded in OCI until earnings are affected by the variability of cash flows of the hedged asset or liability or when the forecasted purchase or sale occurs

3. A hedge of a net investment in a foreign operation ("net investment hedge") Changes in the fair value of derivatives that are designated and qualify as hedges of a net investment in a foreign operation are recorded in the foreign currency translation adjustment account within OCI Changes in the fair value of the hedging instruments that are associated with the difference between the spot rate and the contracted forward rate are recorded in current period earnings in other revenues and in interest expense.

Merrill Lynch formally assesses, both at the inception of the hedge and on an ongoing basis, whether the hedging derivatives are highly effective in offsetting changes in fair value or cash flows of hedged items Merrill Lynch uses regression analysis at the hedge's inception and for each reporting period thereafter to assess whether the derivative used in its hedging transaction is expected to be and has been highly effective in offsetting changes in the fair value or cash flows of the hedged item. When it is determined that a derivative is not highly effective as a hedge, Merrill Lynch discontinues hedge accounting

(1) Amounts are recorded in other revenues and interest expense

The amounts in the "Net gains (losses) on economic hedges" table above represent net gains (losses) on derivatives that are not used for trading purposes and are not used in accounting hedging relationships. Interest rate risk primarily relates to derivatives used to economically hedge long-term borrowings. Foreign currency risk primarily relates to economic hedges of foreign currency denominated transactions that generate earnings upon remeasurement in accordance with ASC 830-20, Foreign Currency Transactions ("Foreign Currency Transactions"). As both the remeasurement of the foreign currency risk on the transaction and the changes in fair value of the derivative are recorded in earnings, hedge accounting is not applied. Credit risk relates to credit default swaps used to economically manage the credit risk on certain loans not included in trading activities.

Derivative balances by primary risk

Derivative instruments contain numerous market risks. In particular, most derivatives have interest rate risk, as they contain an element of financing risk that is affected by changes in interest rates. Additionally, derivatives expose

Merrill Lynch to counterparty credit risk, although this is generally mitigated by collateral margining and netting arrangements. For disclosure purposes below, the primary risk of a derivative is largely determined by the business that is engaging in the derivative activity For instance, a derivative that is initiated by an equities derivative business will generally have equity price risk as its primary underlying market risk and is classified as such for the purposes of this disclosure, despite the fact that there may be other market risks that affect the value of the instrument

The following tables identify the primary risk for derivative instruments, which includes trading, non-trading and bifurcated embedded derivatives, at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 The primary risk is provided on a gross basis, prior to the application of the impact of counterparty and cash collateral netting

Trading revenues

Merrill Lynch enters into trading derivatives and non-derivative cash instruments to facilitate client transactions, for trading and financing purposes, and to manage risk exposures arising from trading assets and liabilities The resulting risk from derivatives and non-derivative cash instruments is managed on a portfolio basis as part of Merrill Lynch's sales and trading activities and the related revenue is recorded on different income statement line items, including principal transactions, commissions, other revenues and net interest income (expense)

Sales and trading revenue includes changes in fair value and realized gains and losses on the sales of trading and other assets, which are included in principal transactions and other revenues, net interest income, and commissions Initial trading related revenue is generated by the difference in the client price for an instrument and the price at which the trading desk can execute the trade in the dealer market That revenue is included within principal transactions on the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings For equity securities, commissions related to purchases and sales are recorded in commissions on the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings Changes in the fair value of these equity securities are included in principal transactions. These amounts are reflected in equity risk in the tables below. For debt securities, revenue, with the exception of interest, is typically included in principal transactions Unlike commissions for equity securities, the initial revenue related to broker/dealer services for debt securities is included in the pricing of the instrument rather than charged through separate fee agreements Therefore, this revenue is recorded in principal transactions as part of the initial mark to fair value In transactions where Merrill Lynch acts as an agent, fees are earned and recorded in commissions In the tables below, most sovereign government debt securities are reflected in interest rate risk. All other government debt securities (including, for example, municipal bonds and emerging markets sovereign debt) and corporate debt securities are included in credit risk

For derivatives, revenue is typically included in principal transactions Similar to debt securities, the initial revenue related to dealer services is included in the initial pricing of the instrument rather than charged through separate fee agreements. Therefore, this revenue is recorded in principal transactions as part of the initial mark to fair value In transactions where Merrill Lynch acts as agent, which includes exchange traded futures and options, fees are earned and recorded in commissions Derivatives are included in the tables below based on their predominant risk (e g , credit default swaps are included in credit risk).

Certain instruments, primarily available-for-sale securities and loans, are not considered trading assets or liabilities Gains/losses on sales and changes in fair value of these instruments, where applicable (e.g , the fair value option has been elected), are recorded in other revenues These instruments are typically reflected in credit risk.

Interest revenue for debt securities and loans is included in net interest (expense) income

The following tables identify the amounts in the income statement line items attributable to trading and non-trading activities, including both derivatives and non-derivative cash instruments categorized by primary risk for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010 and December 31, 2009

Non-trading related amounts include activities in connection with principal investment, wealth management, and certain lending activities, economic hedging activity discussed in the Non-trading derivatives section above, and the impact of changes in Merrill Lynch's own creditworthiness on borrowings accounted for at fair value

Derivatives as guarantees

Merrill Lynch enters into certain derivative contracts that meet the definition of a guarantee under ASC 460, Guarantees ("Guarantees Accounting"). Guarantees are defined to include derivative contracts that contingently require a guarantor to make payment to a guaranteed party based on changes in an underlying (such as changes in the value of interest rates, security prices, currency rates, commodity prices, indices, etc.) that relate to an asset, liability or equity security of a guaranteed party Derivatives that meet the accounting definition of a guarantee include certain OTC written options (e.g , written interest rate and written currency options). Merrill Lynch does not track, for accounting purposes, whether its clients enter into these derivative contracts for speculative or hedging purposes Accordingly, Merrill Lynch has disclosed information about all credit derivatives, credit-related notes and certain types of written options that can potentially be used by clients to protect against changes in an underlying, regardless of how the contracts are actually used by the client

Merrill Lynch's derivatives that act as guarantees at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 are summarized below.

Credit derivatives

Credit derivatives derive value based on an underlying third party referenced obligation or a portfolio of referenced obligations Merrill Lynch is both a seller and a buyer of credit protection. A seller of credit protection is required to make payments to a buyer upon the occurrence of a predefined credit event Such credit events generally include bankruptcy of the referenced credit entity and failure to pay under their credit obligations, as well as acceleration of indebtedness and payment repudiation or moratorium Merrill Lynch considers credit derivatives to be guarantees where it is the seller of credit protection For credit derivatives based on a portfolio of referenced credits or credit indices, Merrill Lynch as a seller of credit protection may not be required to make payment until a specified amount of loss has occurred and/or may only be required to make payment up to a specified amount

For most credit derivatives, the notional value represents the maximum amount payable by Merrill Lynch as a seller of credit protection However, Merrill Lynch does not exclusively monitor its exposure to credit derivatives based on notional value. Instead, a risk framework is used to define risk tolerances and establish limits to help to ensure that certain credit risk-related losses occur within acceptable, predefined limits Merrill Lynch discloses internal categorizations (i e , investment grade, non-investment grade) consistent with how risk is managed to evaluate the payment status of its freestanding credit derivative instruments.

Merrill Lynch economically hedges its exposure to credit derivatives by entering into a variety of offsetting derivative contracts and security positions For example, in certain instances, Merrill Lynch purchases credit protection with identical underlying referenced names to offset its exposure At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the notional value and carrying value of credit protection purchased and credit protection sold by Merrill Lynch with identical underlying referenced names was

Credit related notes

Credit related notes in the guarantees table above include investments in securities issued by CDO, CLO and credit linked note vehicles. These instruments are classified as trading securities. Most of the entities that issue these instruments have either the ability to enter into, or have entered into, credit derivatives that meet the definition of a guarantee (in this case, the sale of credit protection). Since most of these securities could potentially have embedded credit derivatives that would meet the definition of a guarantee, Merrill Lynch includes all of its investments in these securities above.

The carrying value of these instruments equals Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss Merrill Lynch is not obligated to make any payments to the entities under the terms of the securities owned. Merrill Lynch discloses internal categorizations (i.e., investment grade, non-investment grade) consistent with how risk is managed for these instruments.

Other derivative contracts

Other derivative contracts in the guarantees table above primarily include OTC written interest rate options and written currency options For such contracts the maximum payout could theoretically be unlimited, because, for example, the rise in interest rates or changes in foreign exchange rates could theoretically be unlimited Merrill Lynch does not monitor its exposure to derivatives based on the theoretical maximum payout because that measure does not take into consideration the probability of the occurrence As such, rather than including the maximum payout, the notional value of these contracts has been included to provide information about the magnitude of involvement with these types of contracts However, it should be noted that the notional value is not a reliable indicator of Merrill Lynch's exposure to these contracts. Instead, as previously noted, a risk framework is used to define risk tolerances and establish limits to help ensure that certain risk-related losses occur within acceptable, predefined limits

As the fair value and risk of payment under these derivative contracts are based upon market factors, such as changes in interest rates or foreign exchange rates, the carrying values in the table above reflect the best estimate of Merrill Lynch's performance risk under these transactions at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010. Merrill Lynch economically hedges its exposure to these contracts by entering into a variety of offsetting derivative contracts and security positions

Credit risk management of derivatives

Merrill Lynch defines counterparty credit risk as the potential for loss that can occur as a result of an individual, counterparty, or issuer being unable or unwilling to honor its contractual obligations Merrill Lynch mitigates its credit risk to counterparties through a variety of techniques, including, where appropriate, the right to require initial collateral or margin, the right to terminate transactions or to obtain collateral should unfavorable events occur, the right to call for collateral when certain exposure thresholds are exceeded, the right to call for third party guarantees, and the purchase of credit default protection

Merrill Lynch enters into International Swaps and Derivatives Association, Inc. ("ISDA") master agreements or their equivalent ("master netting agreements") with almost all derivative counterparties. Master netting agreements provide protection in bankruptcy in certain circumstances and, where legally enforceable, enable receivables and payables with the same counterparty to be offset for accounting and risk management purposes Netting agreements are generally negotiated bilaterally and can require complex terms While Merrill Lynch makes reasonable efforts to execute such agreements, it is possible that a counterparty may be unwilling to sign such an agreement and, as a result, would subject Merrill Lynch to additional credit risk

Where Merrill Lynch has entered into legally enforceable netting agreements with counterparties, it reports derivative assets and liabilities, and any related cash collateral, net in the Consolidated Balance Sheets in accordance with ASC 210-20, Balance Sheet-Offsetting At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, cash collateral received of $26.5 billion and $28 6 billion, respectively, and cash collateral paid of $33 0 billion and $29 0 billion, respectively, was netted against derivative assets and liabilities The enforceability of master netting agreements under bankruptcy laws in certain countries or in certain industries is not free from doubt, and receivables and payables with counterparties in these countries or industries are accordingly reported on a gross basis

Merrill Lynch considers the impact of counterparty credit risk on the valuation of derivative contracts Factors used to determine the credit valuation adjustments on the derivatives portfolio include current exposure levels (i e , fair value prior to credit valuation adjustments) and expected exposure levels profiled over the maturity of the contracts. CDS market information, including either quoted single name CDS or index or other proxy CDS, is also considered In addition, the credit valuation adjustments also take into account the netting and credit provisions of relevant agreements including collateral margin agreements and master netting agreements During the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, valuation adjustments (net of hedges) of approximately $1 0 billion of losses and $0.1 billion of gains, respectively, were recognized in principal transactions for counterparty credit risk At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the cumulative counterparty credit risk valuation adjustment that was reflected in derivative assets was $1 5 billion and $5 9 billion, respectively. The decrease in the valuation adjustment related to counterparty credit risk primarily relates to the changes in the monoline exposures discussed below. In addition, the fair value of derivative liabilities is adjusted to reflect the impact of Merrill Lynch's credit quality During the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, valuation adjustments (net of hedges) of approximately $0 5 billion and $0 1 billion in gains were recognized in principal transactions for changes in Merrill Lynch's credit risk At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the cumulative credit risk valuation adjustment that was reflected in the derivative liabilities balance was $1 1 billion and $0 6 billion, respectively

Monoline derivative credit exposure at December 31, 2011 had a notional value of $15.8 billion compared with $32 0 billion at December 31, 2010 Mark-to-market monoline derivative credit exposure was $1 7 billion at December 31, 2011 compared with $8 8 billion at December 31, 2010 This decrease was driven by terminated monoline contracts and the reclassification of certain exposures During the year ended December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch terminated all of its monoline contracts referencing super senior ABS CDOs. In addition, Merrill Lynch reclassified approximately $1.3 billion (gross receivable of $4.7 billion less impairment) of net monoline exposure from trading assets - derivative contracts to other assets, because of the inherent default risk and given that these contracts no longer provide a hedge benefit, they are no longer considered derivative trading instruments. This monoline exposure relates to a single counterparty and is recorded at fair value based on current net recovery projections The net recovery projections take into account the present value of projected payments expected to be received from the counterparty At December 31, 2011, the counterparty credit valuation adjustment related to monoline derivative trading instruments exposure was $382 million compared with $5 0 billion at December 31, 2010, which reduced Merrill Lynch's net mark-to-market exposure to $1 3 billion at December 31, 2011 Monoline related mark-to-market losses for the year ended December 31, 2011 were $50 million

Bank of America has guaranteed the performance of Merrill Lynch on certain derivative transactions The aggregate amount of such derivative liabilities was approximately $0 6 billion at December 31, 2011.

Credit-risk related contingent features

Most of Merrill Lynch's derivative contracts contain credit risk related contingent features, primarily in the form of ISDA master netting agreements and credit support documentation that enhance the creditworthiness of these instruments compared to other obligations of the respective counterparty with whom Merrill Lynch has transacted These contingent features may be for the benefit of Merrill Lynch as well as its counterparties with respect to changes in Merrill Lynch's creditworthiness and the mark-to-market exposure under the derivative transactions At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch held cash and securities collateral of $40 9 billion and $44 0 billion and posted collateral of $45.2 billion and $38 2 billion in the normal course of business under derivative agreements

At December 31, 2011, the amount of collateral, calculated based on the terms of the contracts that Merrill Lynch could be required to post to counterparties but had not yet posted to counterparties was approximately $3 0 billion. That amount included collateral that could be required to be posted, but has not yet been posted, as a result of the downgrades by rating agencies in 2011.

Some counterparties are able to unilaterally terminate certain contracts, or Merrill Lynch may be required to take other action such as find a suitable replacement or obtain a guarantee At December 31, 2011, the current liability for these derivative contracts was $0.9 billion, against which Merrill Lynch had posted $1.0 billion of collateral

In addition, under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements, in the event of a further credit rating downgrade of ML&Co or certain subsidiaries that have entered into these transactions, counterparties to those agreements may require ML&Co. or certain subsidiaries to provide additional collateral or to terminate these contracts or agreements or provide other remedies At December 31, 2011, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch, the amount of additional collateral contractually required by such derivative contracts and other trading agreements would have been approximately $0 4 billion If the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by a second incremental notch, approximately $0 3 billion in additional collateral would have been required.

Also, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch, the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by the counterparties as of December 31, 2011 was $0.5 billion, against which $0 3 billion of collateral had been posted Further, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term debt ratings for ML & Co or certain subsidiaries by a second incremental notch, the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by the counterparties as of December 31, 2011 was an incremental $3.5 billion, against which $3 4 billion of collateral had been posted

Note 7. Securities Financing Transactions

Merrill Lynch enters into secured borrowing and lending transactions in order to meet customers' needs and earn residual interest rate spreads, obtain securities for settlement and finance trading inventory positions

Under these transactions, Merrill Lynch either receives or provides collateral, including U S. Government and agency securities, asset-backed, corporate debt, equity, and non-U S government and agency securities Merrill Lynch receives collateral in connection with resale agreements, securities borrowed transactions, customer margin loans and other loans. Under most agreements, Merrill Lynch is permitted to sell or repledge the securities received (e.g., use the securities to secure repurchase agreements, enter into securities lending transactions, or deliver to counterparties to cover short positions). At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the fair value of securities received as collateral where Merrill Lynch is permitted to sell or repledge the securities was $418 billion and $439 billion, respectively, and the fair value of the portion that had been sold or repledged was $349 billion and

$332 billion, respectively Merrill Lynch may use securities received as collateral for resale agreements to satisfy regulatory requirements such as Rule 15c3-3 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934

Additionally, Merrill Lynch receives securities as collateral in connection with certain securities transactions in which Merrill Lynch is the lender In instances where Merrill Lynch is permitted to sell or repledge securities received, Merrill Lynch reports the fair value of such securities received as collateral and the related obligation to return securities received as collateral in the Consolidated Balance Sheets.

Merrill Lynch pledges assets to collateralize repurchase agreements and other secured financings. Pledged securities that can be sold or repledged by the secured party are parenthetically disclosed in trading assets on the Consolidated Balance Sheets. The carrying value and classification of securities owned by Merrill Lynch that have been pledged to counterparties where those counterparties do not have the right to sell or repledge at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 are as follows

	December 31, 2011	December 31, 2010
Trading asset category
Equities and convertible debentures	$ 6,469	$ 8,199
Corporate debt and preferred stock	7,961	14,320

In certain cases, Merrill Lynch has transferred assets to consolidated VIEs where those restricted assets serve as collateral for the interests issued by the VIEs These assets are disclosed on the Consolidated Balance Sheet as Assets of Consolidated VIEs These transactions are also described in Note 9

Generally, when Merrill Lynch transfers financial instruments that are not recorded as sales (i e , secured borrowing transactions), the liability is recorded as either payables under repurchase agreements or payables under securities loaned transactions, however, in instances where Merrill Lynch transfers financial assets to a consolidated VIE, the liabilities of the consolidated VIE will be reflected in long or short-term borrowings (see Note 9) In either case, at the time of transfer, the related liability is equal to the cash received in the transaction In most cases the lenders in secured borrowing transactions have full recourse to Merrill Lynch (i e , recourse beyond the assets pledged).

Note 8. Investment Securities

Investment securities on the Consolidated Balance Sheets include

- Investments within the scope of Investment Accounting that are held by ML & Co and certain of its non-broker-dealer subsidiaries consist of debt held-for-investment and liquidity and collateral management purposes that are classified as available-for-sale, and debt securities that Merrill Lynch intends to hold until maturity

- Non-qualifying investments are those that are not within the scope of Investment Accounting and consist principally of equity investments, including investments in partnerships and joint ventures. Included in non-qualifying investments are investments accounted for under the equity method of accounting, which consist of investments in (i) partnerships and certain limited liability corporations where Merrill Lynch has more than a minor influence (generally defined as three to five percent interest) and (ii) corporate entities where Merrill Lynch has the ability to exercise significant influence over the investee (generally defined as ownership and voting interest of 20% to 50%) Also included in non-qualifying investments are private equity investments that Merrill Lynch holds for capital appreciation and/or current income and which are accounted for at fair value in accordance with the Investment Company Guide, as well as private equity investments accounted for at fair value under the fair value option election

Equity Method Investments

At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch held certain investments that were accounted for under the equity method of accounting.

On December 1, 2009, BlackRock completed its purchase of Barclays Global Investors from Barclays, Plc. This acquisition had the effect of diluting Merrill Lynch's ownership interest in BlackRock, which for accounting purposes was treated as a sale of a portion of Merrill Lynch's ownership interest. As a result, upon the closing of this transaction, Merrill Lynch recorded an adjustment to its investment in BlackRock, which resulted in a pre-tax gain of $1.1 billion, which is included within Earnings from equity method investments in the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings for the year ended December 31, 2009. In addition, Merrill Lynch's economic interest in BlackRock was reduced from approximately 50% to approximately 34%.

On November 15, 2010, Merrill Lynch sold 51.2 million shares of BlackRock common stock. The net proceeds to Merrill Lynch from the sale of these shares, after underwriting discounts and before offering expenses payable by Merrill Lynch, were approximately $8.2 billion. As a result of the sale, Merrill Lynch owned shares of BlackRock Series B Preferred Stock only, and Merrill Lynch's economic interest in BlackRock was reduced from approximately 34% to approximately 7%. Merrill Lynch recorded a pre-tax gain of approximately $90 million from this transaction, which is included within Earnings from equity method investments in the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings for the year ended December 31, 2010.

In June 2011, Merrill Lynch sold the remaining shares of BlackRock's Series B preferred stock, resulting in a pre-tax gain of $377 million, which is included within Other Revenues in the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings for the year ended December 31, 2011. As of December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch no longer held an economic interest in BlackRock.

	For the Year Ended December 31, 2010 [1]	For the Year Ended December 31, 2009 [2]
Revenues	$ 8,612	$ 6,576
Operating income	2,998	2,774
Earnings before income taxes	3,021	2,768
Net earnings	2,063	2,371

(1) Consists of the results of BlackRock for the year ended December 31, 2010. BlackRock was accounted for under the equity method of accounting through November 15, 2010.

(2) Amounts related to BlackRock are as follows: Revenues $4,700 million, Operating income $1,278 million, Earnings before income taxes $1,272 million and Net earnings $875 million.

Such investments were exited or not material for the year ended December 31, 2011.

Note 9. Securitizations and Other Variable Interest Entities ("VIEs")

Merrill Lynch utilizes VIEs in the ordinary course of business to support its own and its customers' financing and investing needs Merrill Lynch securitizes loans and debt securities using VIEs as a source of funding and as a means of transferring the economic risk of the loans or debt securities to third parties Merrill Lynch also administers, structures or invests in other VIEs including municipal bond trusts, CDOs and other entities as described in more detail below.

The entity that has a controlling financial interest in a VIE is referred to as the primary beneficiary and consolidates the VIE. Merrill Lynch is deemed to have a controlling financial interest and is the primary beneficiary of a VIE if it has both the power to direct the activities of the VIE that most significantly impact the VIE's economic performance and an obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that could potentially be significant to the VIE

The tables below present the assets and liabilities of consolidated and unconsolidated VIEs if Merrill Lynch has continuing involvement with transferred assets or if Merrill Lynch otherwise has a variable interest in the VIE For consolidated VIEs, these amounts are net of intercompany balances The tables also present Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss resulting from its involvement with consolidated VIEs and unconsolidated VIEs in which Merrill Lynch holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss is based on the unlikely event that all of the assets in the VIEs become worthless and incorporates not only potential losses associated with assets recorded on Merrill Lynch's Consolidated Balance Sheet but also potential losses associated with off-balance sheet commitments such as unfunded liquidity commitments and other contractual arrangements Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss does not include losses previously recognized

Merrill Lynch invests in ABS issued by third party VIEs with which it has no other form of involvement These securities are described in more detail in Note 8 In addition, Merrill Lynch uses VIEs such as trust preferred securities trusts in connection with its funding activities (see Note 12)

Except as described below, Merrill Lynch has not provided financial support to consolidated or unconsolidated VIEs that it was not contractually required to provide, nor does it intend to do so

Loan VIEs

Merrill Lynch securitizes mortgage loans that it originates or purchases from third parties In certain circumstances, Merrill Lynch has continuing involvement with the securitized loans as servicer of the loans Merrill Lynch may also retain beneficial interests in the securitization vehicles including senior and subordinated securities, and the equity tranche. Except as described below, Merrill Lynch does not provide guarantees to the securitization vehicles and investors do not have recourse to Merrill Lynch other than through standard representations and warranties

The following table summarizes certain information related to Loan VIEs in which Merrill Lynch is either the transferor, servicer or sponsor and holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010.

(1) Maximum loss exposure excludes liabilities for representations and warranties
(2) Substantially all of the securities were in Level 2 in the fair value hierarchy
(3) Principal balance outstanding includes those loans that Merrill Lynch transferred and with which it has continuing involvement

In accordance with consolidation guidance, Merrill Lynch consolidates Loan VIEs in which it has a controlling financial interest For loan securitizations, Merrill Lynch is considered to have a controlling financial interest (i e., is the primary beneficiary) when it is the servicer of the loans and also holds a financial interest that could potentially be significant to the entity. If Merrill Lynch is not the servicer of an entity or does not hold a financial interest that could be significant to the entity, Merrill Lynch does not have a controlling financial interest and does not consolidate the entity.

Merrill Lynch sells mortgage loans to VIEs with various representations and warranties related to, among other things, the ownership of the loan, validity of the lien securing the loan, absence of delinquent taxes or liens against the property securing the loan, the process used in selecting the loans for inclusion in a transaction, the loan's compliance with any applicable loan criteria established by the buyer, and the loan's compliance with applicable local, state and federal laws Under these representations and warranties, Merrill Lynch may be required to repurchase mortgage loans with the identified defects or indemnify or provide other recourse to the investor or insurer. In such cases, Merrill Lynch bears any subsequent credit loss on the mortgage loans Merrill Lynch's representations and warranties are generally not subject to stated limits and extend over the life of the loans. See Note 14.

Municipal Bond Securitizations

Merrill Lynch sponsors municipal bond trusts that hold highly-rated, long-term, fixed-rate municipal bonds, some of which are callable prior to maturity A majority of the bonds are rated AAA or AA and some benefit from insurance provided by third parties. The trusts obtain financing by issuing floating-rate trust certificates that reprice on a frequent basis to third party investors Merrill Lynch may serve as remarketing agent and/or liquidity provider for the trusts. The floating-rate investors have the right to tender the certificates at specified dates, often with as little as seven days' notice Should Merrill Lynch be unable to remarket the tendered certificates, it is generally obligated to purchase them at par under standby liquidity facilities unless the bond's credit rating has declined below investment grade or there has been an event of default or bankruptcy of the issuer and insurer

Merrill Lynch also provides default protection or credit enhancement to investors in certain municipal bond trusts whereby Merrill Lynch guarantees the payment of interest and principal on floating-rate certificates issued by these trusts If an investor holds the residual interest, that investor typically has the unilateral ability to liquidate the trust at any time, while Merrill Lynch typically has the ability to trigger the liquidation of that trust only if the market value of the bonds held in the trust declines below a specified threshold The weighted average remaining life of bonds held in the trusts at December 31, 2011 was 11.4 years

The following table summarizes certain information related to municipal bond trusts in which Merrill Lynch holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Merrill Lynch consolidates municipal bond trusts when it has a controlling financial interest As transferor of assets into a trust, Merrill Lynch has the power to determine which assets would be held in the trust and to structure the liquidity facilities, default protection and credit enhancement, if applicable In some instances, Merrill Lynch retains a residual interest in such trusts and has loss exposure that could potentially be significant to the trust through the residual interest, liquidity facilities and other arrangements. Merrill Lynch is also the remarketing agent, through which it has the power to direct the activities that most significantly impact economic performance Accordingly, Merrill Lynch is the primary beneficiary of and consolidates these trusts. In other instances, one or more third party investor(s) hold(s) the residual interest and, through that interest, has the unilateral right to liquidate the trust Merrill Lynch does not consolidate these trusts

In the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch was the transferor of assets into unconsolidated municipal bond trusts and received cash proceeds from new securitizations of $645 million and $1 2 billion, respectively. At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, the principal balance outstanding for unconsolidated municipal bond securitization trusts for which Merrill Lynch was the transferor was $1 2 billion and $1 7 billion, respectively

Merrill Lynch's liquidity commitments to unconsolidated municipal bond trusts totaled $742 million and

$1.3 billion at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively

CDOs

CDO vehicles hold diversified pools of fixed income securities, typically corporate debt or asset-backed securities, which they fund by issuing multiple tranches of debt and equity securities Synthetic CDOs enter into a portfolio of credit default swaps to synthetically create exposure to fixed income securities. CLOs are a subset of CDOs that hold pools of loans, typically corporate loans or commercial mortgages CDOs are typically managed by third party portfolio managers. Merrill Lynch transfers assets to these CDOs, holds securities issued by the CDOs, and may be a derivative counterparty to the CDOs, including credit default swap counterparty for synthetic CDOs. Merrill Lynch has also entered into total return swaps with certain CDOs whereby Merrill Lynch will absorb the economic returns generated by specified assets held by the CDO Merrill Lynch receives fees for structuring CDOs and providing liquidity support for super senior tranches of securities issued by certain CDOs.

The following table summarizes certain information related to CDO vehicles in which Merrill Lynch holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss is significantly less than the total assets of the CDO vehicles in the table above because Merrill Lynch typically has exposure to only a portion of the total assets

At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch had $2 3 billion of aggregate liquidity exposure to CDOs. This amount includes $588 million of commitments to CDOs to provide funding for super senior exposures and $1 7 billion notional amount of derivative contracts with unconsolidated VIEs, principally CDO vehicles, which hold non-super senior CDO debt securities or other debt securities on Merrill Lynch's behalf Refer to Note 14 for additional information Merrill Lynch's liquidity exposure to CDOs at December 31, 2011 is included in the table above to the extent that Merrill Lynch sponsored the CDO vehicle or the liquidity exposure is more than insignificant compared to total assets of the CDO vehicle. Liquidity exposure included in the table is reported net of previously recorded losses

Customer Vehicles

Customer vehicles include credit-linked and equity-linked note vehicles and repackaging vehicles, which are typically created on behalf of customers who wish to obtain exposure to a specific company or financial instrument Credit-linked and equity-linked note vehicles issue notes which pay a return that is linked to the specific credit or equity risk. The vehicles purchase high-grade assets as collateral and enter into CDS or equity derivatives to synthetically create the credit or equity risk required to pay the specified return on the notes issued by the vehicles Repackaging vehicles issue notes that are designed to incorporate risk characteristics desired by customers of Merrill Lynch The vehicles hold debt instruments such as corporate bonds, convertible bonds or ABS with the desired credit risk profile Merrill Lynch enters into derivatives with the vehicles to change the interest rate or currency profile of the debt instruments. If a vehicle holds convertible bonds and Merrill Lynch retains the conversion option, Merrill Lynch is deemed to have a controlling financial interest and consolidates the vehicle

The following table summarizes certain information related to customer vehicles in which Merrill Lynch holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

(1) Maximum loss exposure, trading assets and other liabilities have been revised from $2,603 million, $737 million and $140 million, respectively (as previously reported) to $2,083 million, $217 million and $750 million, respectively

Merrill Lynch consolidates customer vehicles in which it has a controlling financial interest. Merrill Lynch typically has control over the initial design of the vehicle and may also have the ability to replace the collateral assets Merrill Lynch consolidates these vehicles if it also absorbs potentially significant gains or losses through derivative contracts or investments Merrill Lynch does not consolidate a vehicle if a single investor controlled the initial design of the vehicle or if Merrill Lynch does not have a variable interest that could potentially be significant to the vehicle

Merrill Lynch is typically the counterparty for the credit and equity derivatives, and it may invest in securities issued by the vehicles Merrill Lynch may also enter into interest rate and foreign currency derivatives with the vehicles Merrill Lynch had approximately $824 million of other liquidity commitments, including written put options and collateral value guarantees, with unconsolidated credit-linked and equity-linked note vehicles at December 31, 2011

Merrill Lynch's maximum exposure to loss from customer vehicles includes the notional amount of the credit or equity derivatives to which it is counterparty, net of losses previously recorded, and Merrill Lynch's investment, if any, in securities issued by the vehicles It has not been reduced to reflect the benefit of offsetting swaps with the customers or collateral arrangements

Real Estate and other VIEs

Real Estate and other VIEs primarily includes a real estate investment fund that is a VIE, investments in VIEs that hold investment property, certain hedge fund investment entities, and residential agency resecuritizations.

The following table summarizes certain information related to Real Estate and other VIEs in which Merrill Lynch holds a variable interest as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

(1) Maximum loss exposure, trading assets and total assets of VIEs have been revised from $2,150 million, $86 million and $6,391 million, respectively (as previously reported), to $3,389 million, $1,326 million and $20,614 million, respectively

Merrill Lynch consolidates real estate and other VIEs in which it has a controlling financial interest Merrill Lynch has established real estate investment funds designed to provide returns to clients through limited partnership holdings Merrill Lynch was originally the general partner and the investment advisor, making management decisions. In 2010, Merrill Lynch transferred its management responsibilities to third parties but retained a limited partnership interest in these funds.

Merrill Lynch invests in real estate lending vehicles and establishes vehicles to hold real estate investments. In certain instances these entities do not have sufficient equity to finance operations and are therefore considered VIEs Merrill Lynch consolidates these vehicles when it has decision-making power over the property held by the vehicle and absorbs potentially significant gains or losses through its equity or loan investment

Other Transactions

Merrill Lynch transferred pools of securities to certain independent third parties and provided financing for approximately 75 percent of the purchase price under asset-backed financing arrangements At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, Merrill Lynch's maximum loss exposure under these financing arrangements was $4.7 billion and $6 5 billion, respectively, substantially all of which was recorded as loans, notes and mortgages on Merrill Lynch's Consolidated Balance Sheet All principal and interest payments have been received when due in accordance with their contractual terms These arrangements are not included in the tables above because the purchasers are not VIEs.

Note 10. Loans, Notes and Mortgages

Loans, notes, mortgages and related commitments to extend credit include

- Consumer loans, which are substantially secured, including residential mortgages, home equity loans, and other loans to individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures, and
- Commercial loans, including corporate and institutional loans (including corporate and financial sponsor, non-investment grade lending commitments), commercial mortgages, asset-backed loans, small- and middle-market business loans, and other loans to businesses

Merrill Lynch monitors the credit quality of its loans on an ongoing basis. Merrill Lynch's commercial loans are evaluated using the internal classifications of pass rated or reservable criticized as the primary credit quality indicators. The term reservable criticized refers to those commercial loans that are internally classified or listed by Merrill Lynch as Special Mention, Substandard or Doubtful, which are asset categories defined by regulatory authorities. These assets have an elevated level of risk and may have a high probability of default or total loss. Pass rated refers to all loans not considered reservable criticized. In addition to these primary credit quality indicators, Merrill Lynch uses other credit quality indicators for certain types of loans. The table below presents credit quality indicators on Merrill Lynch's commercial loan portfolio, excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option, at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Consumer loans, substantially all of which are collateralized, consisted of approximately 23,000 individual loans at December 31, 2011 Commercial loans consisted of approximately 1,000 separate loans

Merrill Lynch's outstanding loans include $2 5 billion and $5.2 billion of loans held for sale at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively Loans held for sale are loans that Merrill Lynch expects to sell prior to maturity At December 31, 2011, such loans consisted of $1 0 billion of consumer loans, primarily residential mortgages, and $1 5 billion of commercial loans At December 31, 2010, such loans consisted of $1 7 billion of consumer loans, primarily residential mortgages, and $3 5 billion of commercial loans.

Merrill Lynch generally maintains collateral on secured loans in the form of securities, liens on real estate, perfected security interests in other assets of the borrower, and guarantees Consumer loans are typically collateralized by liens on real estate and other property. Commercial secured loans primarily include asset-based loans secured by financial assets such as loan receivables and trade receivables where the amount of the loan is based on the level of available collateral (i e , the borrowing base) and commercial mortgages secured by real property In addition, for secured commercial loans related to the corporate and institutional lending business, Merrill Lynch typically receives collateral in the form of either a first or second lien on the assets of the borrower or the stock of a subsidiary, which gives Merrill Lynch a priority claim in the case of a bankruptcy filing by the borrower In many cases, where a security interest in the assets of the borrower is granted, no restrictions are placed on the use of assets by the borrower and asset levels are not typically subject to periodic review; however, the borrowers are typically subject to stringent debt covenants Where the borrower grants a security interest in the stock of its subsidiary, the subsidiary's ability to issue additional debt is typically restricted.

In some cases, Merrill Lynch enters into single name and index credit default swaps to mitigate credit exposure related to funded and unfunded commercial loans The notional value of these swaps totaled $3 4 billion and $2 9 billion at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively

The following tables provide information regarding Merrill Lynch's net credit default protection associated with its funded and unfunded commercial loans as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Accounting for Acquired Impaired Loans

Upon completion of the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch adjusted the carrying value of its loans to fair value. Certain of these loans were subject to the requirements of Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting, which addresses accounting for differences between contractual cash flows and cash flows expected to be collected from an investor's initial investment in loans if those differences are attributable, at least in part, to credit quality. Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting requires impaired loans to be recorded at estimated fair value and prohibits "carrying over" or the creation of valuation allowances in the initial accounting for loans acquired in a transfer that are within the scope of Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting

The estimated fair values for loans within the scope of Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting are determined by discounting cash flows expected to be collected using a discount rate for similar instruments with adjustments that management believes a market participant would consider in determining fair value. Cash flows expected to be collected at acquisition are estimated using internal prepayment, interest rate and credit risk models that incorporate management's best estimate of certain key assumptions, such as default rates, loss severity and prepayment speeds All other loans were remeasured at the present value of contractual payments discounted to the prevailing interest rates on the date of acquisition

Under Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting, the excess of cash flows expected at acquisition over the estimated fair value is referred to as the accretable yield and is recognized in interest income over the remaining life of the loans The difference between contractually required payments at acquisition and the cash flows expected to be collected at acquisition is referred to as the nonaccretable difference. Changes in the expected cash flows from the date of acquisition will either impact the accretable yield or result in a charge to the provision for credit losses Subsequent decreases to expected principal cash flows will result in a charge to provision for credit losses and a corresponding increase to allowance for loan losses Subsequent increases in expected principal cash flows will result in recovery of any previously recorded allowance for loan losses, to the extent applicable, and an increase from expected cash flows to accretable yield for any remaining increase All changes in expected interest cash flows will result in an increase or decrease of accretable yield.

In connection with Merrill Lynch's acquisition by Bank of America, loans within the scope of Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting had an unpaid principal balance of $5 6 billion ($2 7 billion consumer and $2 9 billion commercial) and a carrying value of $4.2 billion ($2 3 billion consumer and $1 9 billion commercial) as of January 1, 2009 The loans within the scope of Acquired Impaired Loan Accounting, which were primarily commercial real estate, had an unpaid principal balance of $0 7 billion and a carrying value of $0 2 billion as of December 31, 2010, and were not material as of December 31, 2011

Note 11. Goodwill and Intangible Assets

Goodwill

Goodwill is the cost of an acquired company in excess of the fair value of identifiable net assets at the acquisition date Goodwill is tested annually (or more frequently under certain conditions) for impairment at the reporting unit level in accordance with Goodwill and Intangible Assets Accounting If the fair value of the reporting unit exceeds its carrying value, its goodwill is not deemed to be impaired If the fair value is less than the carrying value, a further analysis is required to determine the amount of impairment, if any Based on the annual impairment analysis completed during the third quarter of 2011, Merrill Lynch determined that there was no impairment of goodwill as of the June 30, 2011 test date

The carrying amount of goodwill was $5 7 billion at both December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Intangible Assets

Intangible assets with definite lives at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 consisted primarily of value assigned to customer relationships. Intangible assets with definite lives are tested for impairment in accordance with ASC 360, Property, Plant and Equipment whenever certain conditions exist which would indicate the carrying amounts of such assets may not be recoverable Intangible assets with definite lives are amortized over their respective estimated useful lives Intangible assets with indefinite lives consist of value assigned to the Merrill Lynch brand and are tested for impairment in accordance with Goodwill and Intangible Assets Accounting Intangible assets with indefinite lives are not amortized Based on an impairment analysis conducted as of June 30, 2011, the Merrill Lynch brand intangible asset was not impaired

The table below presents the gross carrying amount, accumulated amortization, and net carrying amounts of intangible assets as of December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Amortization expense for the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 was $309 million. Amortization expense for 2009 was $349 million

The estimated future amortization of intangible assets from 2012 through 2016 is $309 million per year

Note 12. Borrowings and Deposits

Prior to Merrill Lynch's acquisition by Bank of America, ML & Co. was the primary issuer of Merrill Lynch's unsecured debt instruments. Debt instruments were also issued by certain subsidiaries Bank of America has not assumed or guaranteed the long-term debt that was issued or guaranteed by ML & Co or its subsidiaries prior to the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America.

Beginning late in the third quarter of 2009, in connection with the update or renewal of certain Merrill Lynch international securities offering programs, Bank of America agreed to guarantee debt securities, warrants and/or certificates issued by certain subsidiaries of ML & Co. on a going forward basis All existing ML & Co guarantees of securities issued by those same Merrill Lynch subsidiaries under various international securities offering programs will remain in full force and effect as long as those securities are outstanding, and Bank of America has not assumed any of those prior ML & Co. guarantees or otherwise guaranteed such securities There were approximately $5 2 billion of securities guaranteed by Bank of America at December 31, 2011

Following the completion of Bank of America's acquisition of Merrill Lynch, ML & Co. became a subsidiary of Bank of America and established intercompany lending and borrowing arrangements to facilitate centralized liquidity management. Included in these intercompany agreements is a $75 billion one-year revolving unsecured line of credit that allows ML & Co. to borrow funds from Bank of America at a spread to LIBOR that is reset periodically and is consistent with other intercompany agreements. This credit line was renewed effective January 1, 2012 with a maturity date of January 1, 2013. The credit line will automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding January 1st unless Bank of America provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date The agreement does not contain any financial or other covenants. There were no outstanding borrowings against the line of credit at December 31, 2011.

In addition to the $75 billion unsecured line of credit, a $25 billion 364-day revolving unsecured line of credit that allows ML & Co to borrow funds from Bank of America was established on February 15, 2011. Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The agreement does not contain any financial or other covenants The line of credit matures on February 12, 2013 There were no outstanding borrowings against the line of credit at December 31, 2011.

Following the merger of BAS into MLPF&S, Bank of America agreed to guarantee the short-term, senior unsecured obligations issued by MLPF&S under its short-term master note program on a going forward basis During 2011, Merrill Lynch decided to reduce short-term unsecured obligations. At December 31, 2011, there were no longer any borrowings outstanding under this program

Also in connection with the merger of BAS into MLPF&S, MLPF&S either assumed or established the following agreements

- MLPF&S assumed an approximately $1.5 billion subordinated loan agreement with Bank of America, which bears interest based on a spread to LIBOR, and has a scheduled maturity date of December 31, 2013 The loan agreement contains a provision that automatically extends the loan's maturity by one year unless Bank of America provides 13 months written notice not to extend prior to the scheduled maturity date
- MLPF&S assumed a $7 billion revolving subordinated line of credit with Bank of America The subordinated line of credit bears interest based on a spread to LIBOR, and has a scheduled maturity date of October 1, 2013 The revolving subordinated line of credit contains a provision that automatically extends the maturity by one year unless Bank of America provides 13 months written notice not to extend prior to the scheduled maturity

date. At December 31, 2011, $1 1 billion was outstanding on the subordinated line of credit

- On November 1, 2010, a $4 billion one-year revolving unsecured line of credit that allows MLPF&S to borrow funds from Bank of America was established Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The credit line will mature on November 1, 2012 and may automatically be extended by one year to the succeeding November 1st unless Bank of America provides written notice not to extend at least 45 days prior to the maturity date. At December 31, 2011, there were no borrowings outstanding on the line of credit
- On February 22, 2011, a $15 billion 364-day revolving unsecured line of credit that allows MLPF&S to borrow funds from Bank of America was established Interest on the line of credit is based on prevailing short-term market rates The line of credit matures on February 19, 2013. At December 31, 2011, approximately $1 5 billion was outstanding on the line of credit

The value of Merrill Lynch's debt instruments as recorded on the Consolidated Balance Sheets does not necessarily represent the amount that will be repaid at maturity This is due to the following.

- As a result of the acquisition by Bank of America, all debt instruments were adjusted to fair value on January 1, 2009,
- Certain debt issuances are accounted for at fair value and incorporate changes in Merrill Lynch's creditworthiness (see Note 4),
- Certain structured notes whose coupon or repayment terms are linked to the performance of debt and equity securities, indices, currencies or commodities reflect the fair value of those risks (see Note 4), and
- Certain debt issuances are adjusted for the impact of fair value hedge accounting (see Note 6).

The tables below exclude Merrill Lynch's intercompany borrowings from Bank of America, see Note 2 for further information. Total borrowings at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, which are comprised of short-term borrowings, long-term borrowings and junior subordinated notes (related to trust preferred securities), consisted of the following

	December 31, 2011	December 31, 2010
Senior debt	$ 59,583	$ 80,130
Senior structured notes	28,523	40,678

(1) See Note 9 for additional information on debt issued by consolidated VIEs.
(2) Excludes junior subordinated notes (related to trust preferred securities).
(3) Fixed-rate obligations are generally swapped to variable rates.
(4) Variable interest rates are generally based on rates such as LIBOR, the U S. Treasury Bill Rate, or the Federal Funds Rate
(5) Includes structured notes

See Note 5 for additional information on the fair value of long-term borrowings.

The weighted-average interest rates for borrowings at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 (excluding structured products) were as follows

	December 31, 2011	December 31, 2010
Short-term borrowings	0 4%	0.3%
Long-term borrowings	4 0	3 8
Junior subordinated notes (related to trust preferred securities)	6 9	6 9

Long-Term Borrowings

At December 31, 2011, long-term borrowings mature as follows.

	Amount	Percentage of Total
Less than 1 year	$ 23,205	22%
1 – 2 years	19,958	19
2 – 3 years	18,848	18
3 – 4 years	4,570	4
4 – 5 years	4,124	4
Greater than 5 years	36,413	33
Total	$ 107,118	100%

Certain long-term borrowing agreements contain provisions whereby the borrowings are redeemable at the option of the holder ("put" options) at specified dates prior to maturity These borrowings are reflected in the above table as maturing at their put dates, rather than their contractual maturities. However, Merrill Lynch believes that a portion of such borrowings will remain outstanding beyond their earliest redemption date.

The maturity of certain structured notes whose coupon or repayment terms are linked to the performance of debt and equity securities, indices, currencies or commodities may be accelerated based on the value of a referenced index or security, in which case Merrill Lynch may be required to immediately settle the obligation for cash or other securities. These notes are included in the portion of long-term debt maturing in less than a year.

Senior and subordinated debt obligations do not contain provisions that could, upon an adverse change in ML & Co.'s credit rating, financial ratios, earnings or cash flows, trigger a requirement for an early payment, additional collateral support, changes in terms, acceleration of maturity, or the creation of an additional financial obligation.

Junior Subordinated Notes (related to trust preferred securities)

Merrill Lynch has created six trusts that have issued preferred securities to the public ("trust preferred securities") Merrill Lynch Preferred Capital Trust III, IV and V used the issuance proceeds to purchase Partnership Preferred Securities, representing limited partnership interests Using the purchase proceeds, the limited partnerships extended junior subordinated loans to ML & Co and one or more subsidiaries of ML & Co. Merrill Lynch Capital Trust I, II and III directly invested in junior subordinated notes issued by ML & Co

ML & Co has guaranteed, on a junior subordinated basis, the payment in full of all distributions and other payments on the trust preferred securities to the extent that the trusts have funds legally available. This guarantee and similar partnership distribution guarantees are subordinated to all other liabilities of ML & Co

The effective weighted-average interest rate for deposits, which includes the impact of hedges, was 0 7% at both December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively. The fair value of deposits approximated their carrying value at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010

Other

Merrill Lynch also obtains standby letters of credit from issuing banks to satisfy various counterparty collateral requirements, in lieu of depositing cash or securities collateral. Such standby letters of credit aggregated $2 1 billion and $1 4 billion at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively

Note 13. Stockholder's Equity and Earnings Per Share

Preferred Equity

As of October 15, 2010, all of the 12,000 outstanding shares of 9% Mandatory Convertible Non-Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series 2, par value $1 00 per share and liquidation preference of $100,000 per share and 5,000 outstanding shares of 9% Mandatory Convertible Non-Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series 3, par value $1 00 per share and liquidation preference of $100,000 per share automatically converted into Bank of America common stock in accordance with the terms of these securities. Immediately upon conversion, dividends on such shares of preferred stock ceased to accrue, the rights of holders of such preferred stock ceased, and the persons entitled to receive the shares of Bank of America common stock were treated for all purposes as having become the record and beneficial owners of shares of Bank of America common stock. As a result of the conversion, there were no preferred stock dividends recorded during the year ended December 31, 2011 Preferred stock dividends of $134 million were recorded in the year ended December 31, 2010

Common Stock

As of the completion of the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America on January 1, 2009, there have been 1,000 shares of ML & Co. common stock outstanding, all of which are held by Bank of America.

Accumulated Other Comprehensive Loss

Earnings Per Share

Earnings per share data is not provided for the years ended December 31, 2011, December 31, 2010, and December 31, 2009, as Merrill Lynch was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America during that period.

Rosen Capital Partners LP and Rosen Capital Institutional LP (collectively, the "Rosen Funds"), filed a statement of claim asserting claims for breach of contract, fraud, and negligence against MLPCC in connection with alleged losses in the fall of 2008 On July 5, 2011, a FINRA panel awarded the Rosen Funds $64 million plus interest at the rate of 9% per year, accruing from October 7, 2008 until the award is paid in full The Rosen Funds moved to confirm the award in California Superior Court. On December 23, 2011, the court granted the Rosen Funds' motion to confirm the award.

Commitments

At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch's commitments had the following expirations

		Commitment expiration
	Total	Less than 1 Year	1-3 Years	3-5 Years	Over 5 Years
Lending commitments	$ 6,898	$ 1,744	$ 1,922	$ 2,899	$ 333

Commitments to enter into repurchase and securities lending agreements	42,010	42,010	—	—	—
Total	$ 124,089	$ 114,831	$ 3,824	$ 4,066	$ 1,368

Lending Commitments

Merrill Lynch enters into commitments to extend credit, predominantly at variable interest rates, in connection with corporate finance, corporate and institutional transactions and asset-based lending transactions Clients may also be extended loans or lines of credit collateralized by first and second mortgages on real estate, certain liquid assets of small businesses, or securities These commitments usually have a fixed expiration date and are contingent on certain contractual conditions that may require payment of a fee by the counterparty Once commitments are drawn upon, Merrill Lynch may require the counterparty to post collateral depending upon creditworthiness and general market conditions See Note 10 for additional information

Commitments to extend credit are outstanding as of the date the commitment letter is issued and are comprised of closed and contingent commitments Closed commitments represent the unfunded portion of existing commitments available for draw down. Contingent commitments are contingent on the borrower fulfilling certain conditions or upon a particular event, such as an acquisition A portion of these contingent commitments may be syndicated among other lenders or the counterparty may replace the commitment with capital markets funding

The contractual amounts of these commitments represent the amounts at risk should the contract be fully drawn upon, the client defaults, and the value of the existing collateral becomes worthless The total amount of outstanding commitments may not represent future cash requirements, as commitments may expire without being drawn

For lending commitments where the loan will be classified as held for sale upon funding, liabilities associated with unfunded commitments are calculated at the lower of cost or fair value, capturing declines in the fair value of the respective credit risk For loan commitments where the loan will be classified as held for investment upon funding, liabilities are calculated considering both market and historical loss rates. Loan commitments either held by entities that apply the Broker-Dealer Guide or for which the fair value option was elected are accounted for at fair value

Purchasing and Other Commitments

Merrill Lynch had commitments to purchase partnership interests, primarily related to private equity and principal investing activities at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 of $0.3 billion and $0 6 billion, respectively Merrill Lynch also has entered into agreements with providers of market data, communications, systems consulting, and other office-related services At December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, minimum fee commitments over the remaining life of these agreements totaled $1.5 billion and $1 7 billion, respectively. Merrill Lynch entered into commitments to purchase loans of $2 5 billion, which, upon settlement of the commitment, will be included in trading assets, loans held for investment or loans held for sale at December 31, 2011 Such commitments totaled $2.6 billion at December 31, 2010 Other purchasing commitments amounted to $1 0 billion and $0 8 billion at December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010, respectively.

In the normal course of business, Merrill Lynch enters into commitments for underwriting transactions. Settlement of these transactions as of December 31, 2011 would not have a material effect on the Consolidated Balance Sheet of Merrill Lynch.

In connection with trading activities, Merrill Lynch enters into commitments to enter into resale and securities borrowing and also repurchase and securities lending agreements.

Operating Leases

Merrill Lynch has entered into various non-cancelable long-term lease agreements for premises that expire through 2028 Merrill Lynch has also entered into various non-cancelable short-term lease agreements, which are primarily commitments of less than one year under equipment leases.

At December 31, 2011, future non-cancelable minimum rental commitments are as follows.

Guarantees

Merrill Lynch issues various guarantees to counterparties in connection with certain transactions Merrill Lynch's guarantee arrangements and their expiration at December 31, 2011 are summarized as follows (see Note 6 for information related to derivative financial instruments within the scope of Guarantees Accounting).

	Expiration
	Maximum Payout	Less than 1 year	1-3 years	3-5 years	Over 5 years	Carrying Value
Standby liquidity facilities	$ 761	$ 186	$ 555	$ 3	$ 17	$ —
Residual value guarantees	320	—	320	—	—	—
Standby letters of credit and other guarantees	429	280	99	31	19	—

Standby Liquidity Facilities

Standby liquidity facilities are primarily comprised of liquidity facilities provided to certain unconsolidated municipal bond securitization VIEs. In these arrangements, Merrill Lynch is required to fund these standby liquidity facilities if certain contingent events take place (e g , a failed remarketing) and in certain cases if the fair value of the assets held by the VIE declines below the stated amount of the liquidity obligation The potential exposure under the facilities is mitigated by economic hedges and/or other contractual arrangements entered into by Merrill Lynch Based upon historical activity, it is considered remote that future payments would need to be made under these guarantees

Refer to Note 9 for further information

Residual Value Guarantees

At December 31, 2011, residual value guarantees of $320 million consist of amounts associated with certain power plant facilities Payments under these guarantees would only be required if the fair value of such assets declined below their guaranteed value As of December 31, 2011, no payments have been made under these guarantees and the carrying value of the associated liabilities was not material, as Merrill Lynch believes that the estimated fair value of such assets was in excess of their guaranteed value

Standby Letters of Credit

At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch provided guarantees to certain counterparties in the form of standby letters of credit in the amount of $0 4 billion Payment risk is evaluated based upon historical payment activity

Representations and Warranties

Background

In prior years, Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries, including First Franklin Financial Corporation ("First Franklin") sold pools of first-lien residential mortgage loans and home equity loans as private-label securitizations (in a limited number of these securitizations, monolines insured all or some of the securities), or in the form of whole loans Most of the loans sold in the form of whole loans were subsequently pooled into private-label securitizations sponsored by the third-party buyer of the whole loans. In addition, Merrill Lynch and First Franklin securitized first-lien residential mortgage loans generally in the form of mortgage-backed securities guaranteed by the GSEs In connection with these transactions, Merrill Lynch made various representations and warranties These representations and warranties, as set forth in the agreements, related to, among other things, the ownership of the loan, the validity of the lien securing the loan, the absence of delinquent taxes or liens against the property securing the loan, the process used to select the loan for inclusion in a transaction, the loan's compliance with any applicable loan criteria, including underwriting standards, and the loan's compliance with applicable federal, state and local laws. Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in the requirement to repurchase mortgage loans or to otherwise make whole or provide other remedies to the GSEs, whole-loan buyers, securitization trusts or monoline insurers (collectively, "repurchases") In such cases, Merrill Lynch would be exposed to any credit loss on the repurchased mortgage loans after accounting for any mortgage insurance or mortgage guaranty payments that it may receive

Subject to the requirements and limitations of the applicable sales and securitization agreements, these representations and warranties can be enforced by the GSEs, the whole-loan buyer, the securitization trustee, or others as governed by the applicable agreement or, in a limited number of first-lien and home equity securitizations where monoline insurers have insured all or some of the securities issued, by the monoline insurer In the case of loans sold to parties other than the GSEs, the contractual liability to repurchase typically arises only if there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or investors in the loan or of the monoline insurer (as applicable) Contracts with the GSEs do not contain equivalent language. Merrill Lynch believes that the longer a loan performs prior to default, the less likely it is that an alleged breach of representations and warranties had a material impact on the loan's performance. Historically, most demands for repurchase have occurred within the first several years after origination, generally after a loan has defaulted.

Merrill Lynch's credit loss would be reduced by any recourse it may have to organizations (e g , correspondents) that, in turn, had sold such loans to Merrill Lynch based upon its agreements with these organizations When a loan is originated by a correspondent or other third party, Merrill Lynch typically has the right to seek a recovery of related repurchase losses from that originator. Many of the correspondent originators of loans in 2004 through 2008 are no longer in business, or are in a weakened condition, and Merrill Lynch's ability to recover on valid claims is therefore impacted, or eliminated accordingly

The fair value of the obligations to be absorbed under the representations and warranties provided is recorded as an accrued liability when the loans are sold This liability for probable losses is updated by accruing a representations and warranties provision in Non-interest expenses on the Consolidated Statement of (Loss) Earnings This is done throughout the life of the loan, as necessary when additional relevant information becomes available

The methodology used to estimate the liability for representations and warranties is a function of the representations and warranties given and considers a variety of factors, which include, depending on the counterparty, actual defaults, estimated future defaults, historical loss experience, estimated home prices, other economic conditions, estimated probability that a repurchase claim will be received, consideration of whether presentation thresholds will be met, number of payments made by the borrower prior to default and estimated probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased. Merrill Lynch also considers bulk settlements, including those of its affiliates, when determining its estimated liability for representations and warranties The estimate of the liability for representations and warranties is based upon currently available information, significant judgment, and a number of factors, including those set forth above, that are subject to change Changes to any one of these factors could significantly impact the estimate of the liability and could have a material adverse impact on Merrill Lynch's results of operations for any particular period Given that these factors vary by counterparty, Merrill Lynch analyzes representations and warranties obligations based on the specific counterparty, or type of counterparty, with whom the sale was made.

Merrill Lynch has vigorously contested any request for repurchase when it has concluded that a valid basis for repurchase does not exist and will continue to do so in the future. Merrill Lynch may reach settlements in the future if opportunities arise on terms it believes to be advantageous to Merrill Lynch.

Bank of America BNY Mellon Settlement

On June 28, 2011, Bank of America and certain of its non-Merrill Lynch subsidiaries entered into a settlement agreement (subject to final court approval and certain other conditions) with The Bank of New York Mellon ("BNY Mellon"), as trustee, to resolve, among other claims, all outstanding and potential claims related to alleged representations and warranties breaches (including repurchase claims) with respect to the 525 legacy first-lien and five second-lien non-GSE residential mortgage-backed securitization trusts containing loans principally originated between 2004 and 2008 and for which BNY Mellon acts as trustee or indenture trustee (the "BNY Mellon Settlement") As a result of the experience gained by Bank of America and certain of its non-Merrill Lynch affiliates in the BNY Mellon Settlement, Merrill Lynch determined that it had sufficient experience to record a $2.7 billion liability for representations and warranties related to its repurchase exposure on private-label securitizations in the year ended December 31, 2011.

The net actuarial losses represent changes in the amount of either the projected benefit obligation or plan assets resulting from actual experience being different than that assumed and from changes in assumptions. Gains and losses for all benefits except the postretirement plans are recognized in accordance with standard amortization provisions of the applicable accounting standards. For the postretirement plans, 50% of the unrecognized gain or loss at the beginning of the fiscal year (or at subsequent remeasurement) is recognized on a level basis during the year The estimated net actuarial loss for the postretirement plans that will be recorded into expense over the next fiscal year is approximately $9 million. There is no expected amortization for the defined benefit pension plans over the next fiscal year

Plan Assumptions

The discount rate assumption used in determining the benefit obligation for the defined benefit pension plans and postretirement plans is based on a cash flow matching technique and is subject to change each year. This technique utilizes yield curves that are based upon Aa-rated corporate bonds with cash flows that match estimated benefit payments of each of the plans to produce the discount rate assumptions. The asset valuation method for the U S defined benefit pension plans recognizes 60% of the prior year's market gains and losses at the next measurement date, with the remaining 40% spread equally over the subsequent four years The asset valuation method for the non-U.S defined benefit pension plans uses the fair market value as of the measurement date

The expected return on asset assumption was developed through analysis of historical market and asset returns, historical asset class volatility and correlations, current market conditions, anticipated future asset allocations, and expectations on potential future market returns The expected return on asset assumption represents a long-term view of the assets in the defined benefit pension plans, a return that may or may not be achieved during one calendar year. The U.S terminated pension plan, which represents approximately 63% of Merrill Lynch's total pension plan assets as of December 31, 2011, is solely invested in a group annuity contract which is currently 100% invested in fixed income securities. The expected return on asset assumption on the non-U.S pension plans reflects the weighted average long-term return assumption across all funded non-U S Plans. Although Merrill Lynch's pension and postretirement benefit plans can be sensitive to changes in the discount rate, it is expected that a 25 basis point rate reduction would not have a material impact on the U S. or the U K. defined benefit plan expenses for 2012 Such a change would increase the U S. and U K. defined benefit plan obligations at December 31, 2011 by $55 million and $65 million, respectively. A 25 basis point decline in the expected rate of return for the U.S defined benefit pension plan and the U.K. pension plan would result in an expense increase for 2012 of approximately $7 million and $4 million, respectively.

A one percent change in the assumed healthcare cost trend rate would have the following effects on the amounts reported for the postretirement plans

Investment Strategy and Asset Allocation

The U S terminated pension plan asset portfolio is structured such that the asset maturities match the duration of the plan's obligations Consistent with the plan termination in 1988, the annuity contract and the supplemental agreement, the asset portfolio's investment objective calls for a concentration in fixed income securities, the majority of which have investment grade ratings

The assets of the U K. pension plan are invested prudently so that the benefits promised to members are provided, considering the nature and the duration of the plan's liabilities The current planned investment strategy was set following an asset-liability study and advice from the Trustees' investment advisors The asset allocation strategy selected is designed to achieve a higher return than the lowest risk strategy while maintaining a prudent approach to meeting the plan's liabilities. As a risk control measure, a series of interest rate and inflation risk swaps have been executed covering approximately 100% of the plan's assets.

The pension plan target allocations for 2012 by asset category are shown below The Merrill Lynch postretirement benefit plans are not funded and do not hold assets for investment

Estimated Future Benefit Payments

Expected benefit payments associated with Merrill Lynch's defined benefit pension and postretirement plans for the next five years and in the aggregate for the five years thereafter are as follows.

	Defined Benefit Pension Plans			Postretirement Plans[3]
	U.S.[1]	Non-U.S.[2]	Total	Gross Payments	Medicare Subsidy	Net Payments

(1) The U.S. defined benefit pension plan payments are primarily funded under the terminated plan annuity contract

(2) The U.K., Swiss and Japan pension plans payments represent approximately 51%, 13% and 22%, respectively, of the non-U.S. 2012 expected defined benefit pension payments

(3) The U.S. postretirement plan payments, net of Medicare subsidy, represent approximately 95% of the total 2012 expected postretirement benefit payments

Postemployment Benefits

Merrill Lynch provides certain postemployment benefits for employees on extended leave due to injury or illness and for terminated employees. Employees who are disabled due to non-work-related illness or injury are entitled to disability income, medical coverage, and life insurance. Merrill Lynch also provides severance benefits to terminated employees. In addition, Merrill Lynch is mandated by U.S. state and federal regulations to provide certain other postemployment benefits. Merrill Lynch funds these benefits through a combination of self-insured and insured plans.

Note 16. Employee Incentive Plans

Prior to its acquisition by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch sponsored several employee compensation plans that provided eligible employees with stock-based compensation or options to purchase stock. In connection with the acquisition, all stock-based compensation plans of Merrill Lynch were assumed by Bank of America and awards under those plans became payable in Bank of America common stock. Other than the Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Employee Stock Compensation Plan ("ESCP") and the Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Employee Stock Purchase Plan ("ESPP"), existing Merrill Lynch plans were frozen as to new grants, although all previously granted awards outstanding under such plans continue to be governed by the applicable terms of the plan under which the awards were granted. Following the acquisition, grants with respect to Bank of America common stock may be made to eligible legacy Merrill Lynch employees under the ESCP as well as the Bank of America Corporation 2003 Key Associate Stock Plan ("KASP"), and eligible Merrill Lynch employees may participate in the ESPP.

The total pre-tax compensation cost recognized in earnings for share-based compensation plans for the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 was $1.9 billion, $1.5 billion and $1.4 billion, respectively. Total related tax benefits recognized in earnings for share-based payment compensation plans for the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 were $0.6 billion, $0.5 billion and $0.5 billion, respectively.

Bank of America issued approximately 89 million immediately tradable shares of Bank of America common stock, or $0.7 billion (after-tax) to certain employees of Merrill Lynch in February 2012 in lieu of a portion of their 2011 year-end cash incentive.

Below is a description of Merrill Lynch's share-based payment compensation plans.

Equity Compensation Plans

Prior to 2009, the Long-Term Incentive Compensation Plans ("LTIC Plans") and the Equity Capital Accumulation Plan ("ECAP") provided for grants of equity and equity-related instruments to certain employees. LTIC Plans consist of the Long-Term Incentive Compensation Plan, used for grants to executive officers, and the Long-Term Incentive Compensation Plan for Managers and Producers, a broad-based plan. LTIC Plans provided for the issuance of restricted shares, restricted units, and non-qualified stock options, as well as incentive stock options, performance shares, performance units, performance options, stock appreciation rights, and other securities of Merrill Lynch. The ECAP provided for the issuance of restricted shares, as well as performance shares. The ECAP was terminated in 2008 and its shares were rolled into the ESCP. Upon Bank of America's acquisition of Merrill Lynch on January 1, 2009, the LTIC Plans were frozen.

The ESCP was amended at the time of the Bank of America acquisition to provide for the issuance of Bank of America common stock. The ESCP covers employees who were salaried key employees of Merrill Lynch immediately prior to the effective date of the Bank of America acquisition, other than executive officers. Under the ESCP, Bank of America may award restricted shares, restricted units, non-qualified stock options and stock appreciation rights. Awards of restricted shares and restricted units are subject to a vesting schedule specified in the grant documentation. Bank of America granted approximately 8 million restricted stock unit awards to certain

Merrill Lynch employees in 2011 under the ESCP, which generally vest in three equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date There were no shares granted under this plan during 2010 Awards granted in 2009 generally vest in three annual installments beginning one year from the grant date, and awards granted prior to 2009 generally vest in four equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date As of December 31, 2011, there were approximately 85 million shares available under the ESCP for future awards Shares that are canceled, forfeited, or settled in cash from the frozen Merrill Lynch Long-Term Incentive Compensation Plan for Managers and Producers will become available for grant under the ESCP

Bank of America shareholders approved the KASP to be effective January 1, 2003 Awards to Merrill Lynch employees may also be made under the KASP effective as of January 1, 2009 In 2011, Bank of America issued approximately 89 million restricted stock and restricted stock unit awards to certain Merrill Lynch employees under the KASP Restricted stock awards generally vest in three equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date, with the exception of certain awards to financial advisors that vest eight years from grant date, certain awards of restricted stock that were vested on the grant date but were released from restriction after 6 months, and certain awards which will vest subject to the attainment of specified performance goals Shares that are canceled, forfeited, or settled in cash from the frozen Merrill Lynch Long Term Incentive Compensation Plan and Financial Advisor Capital Accumulation Award Plans (discussed below) will become available to grant under the KASP

Restricted Shares and Units

Restricted shares are shares of Bank of America common stock carrying voting and dividend rights A restricted unit is deemed equivalent in fair market value to one share of common stock. Awards of restricted units may be settled in shares of common stock or cash Recipients of restricted unit awards may receive cash payments equivalent to dividends The following table presents the activity of the restricted stock/unit awards that were granted as stock settled awards during 2011

	Restricted Shares/Units	Weighted Average Fair Value Per Share
Outstanding at January 1, 2011	147,389,107	$ 12 76

(1) Transfers in and transfers out resulted from employee transfers to and from Merrill Lynch and non-Merrill Lynch subsidiaries of Bank of America

The total fair value of restricted shares and units granted to retirement-eligible employees, or for which service criteria were satisfied during 2011, was approximately $511 million The total fair value of restricted shares and units delivered during 2011 was approximately $832 million The fair value of restricted shares and units was determined based on the price of Bank of America common stock at the date of grant

As of December 31, 2011, there was $867 million of total unrecognized compensation cost related to non-vested share-based payment compensation arrangements. This cost is expected to be recognized over a weighted average period of 1 2 years In 2011, the amount of cash used to settle equity instruments was $334 million

Stock compensation accounting requires the immediate expensing of share-based payment awards granted or modified to retirement-eligible employees, including awards that are subject to non-compete provisions The above activity includes awards with or without a future service requirement, as follows:

	No Future Service Required		Future Service Required
	Shares/Units	Weighted Avg Grant Price	Shares/Units	Weighted Avg Grant Price
Outstanding at January 1, 2011	76,523,841	$ 11 69	70,865,266	$ 13.91

Stock Appreciation Rights and Non-Qualified Stock Options

The activity for non-qualified stock options and stock appreciation rights under LTIC Plans for the year ended December 31, 2011 is presented below:

	Options Outstanding	Weighted-Average Exercise Price
Outstanding, end of 2010	86,481,385	$ 64.86
Granted — 2011	—	—
Exercised	—	—

Outstanding, end of 2011	60,178,703	54.53
Exercisable, end of 2011	60,169,968	54.53

(1) Transfers in and transfers out resulted from employee transfers to and from Merrill Lynch and non-Merrill Lynch subsidiaries of Bank of America

All options and stock appreciation rights outstanding as of December 31, 2011 are fully vested or expected to vest.

At December 31, 2011, the weighted-average remaining contractual terms for options outstanding was 1 9 years and for options exercisable was 1 7 years.

There were no stock options granted in the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009.

Proceeds from the exercise of stock options were not significant in the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009

The total intrinsic value of options exercised in the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 was not significant As of December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009, the total intrinsic value of options outstanding and exercisable was zero.

Employee Stock Purchase Plan ("ESPP")

The ESPP allows eligible associates to invest from one percent to 10 percent of eligible compensation to purchase Bank of America's common stock, subject to legal limits Purchases were made at a discount of up to five percent of the average high and low market price on the relevant purchase date and the maximum annual contribution per employee was $23,750 in 2011 Approximately 107 million shares were authorized for issuance under the ESPP in 2009 There were 6 million shares available at December 31, 2011

The weighted-average fair value of the ESPP stock purchase rights (i e , the five percent discount on purchases of Bank of America common stock) exercised by employees in the year ended December 31, 2011 was $0 54 per stock purchase right

Financial Advisor Capital Accumulation Award Plans ("FACAAP")

The FACAAP is no longer an active plan and no awards were granted in the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 At December 31, 2011, there were 12 million shares awarded under FACAAP outstanding. Prior to 2009, the FACAAP provided for awards to eligible employees in Merrill Lynch's Global Wealth Management division Payment for an award was contingent upon continued employment for a period of time and subject to forfeiture during that period Awards granted in 2003 and thereafter are generally payable eight years from the date of grant in a fixed number of shares of Bank of America common stock For outstanding awards granted prior to 2003 (the"pre-2003 awards"), payment is generally made ten years from the date of grant in a fixed number of shares of Bank of America common stock unless the fair market value of such shares is less than a specified minimum value, in which case the minimum value is paid in cash In accordance with the terms of the pre-2003 awards, accruals of approximately $141 million, $246 million and $155 million were made in the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively, for cash payments made in lieu of shares

Other Compensation Arrangements

Merrill Lynch sponsors deferred compensation plans in which employees who meet certain minimum compensation thresholds may participate on either a voluntary or mandatory basis Contributions to the plans are made on a tax-deferred basis by participants Participants' returns on these contributions may be indexed to various mutual funds and other funds

Merrill Lynch also sponsors several cash-based employee award programs, under which certain employees are eligible to receive future cash compensation, generally upon fulfillment of the service and vesting criteria for the particular program

When appropriate, Merrill Lynch maintains various assets as an economic hedge of its liabilities to participants under the deferred compensation plans and award programs These assets and the payables accrued by Merrill Lynch under the various plans and grants are included on the Consolidated Balance Sheets Such assets totaled $2 3 billion and $2 2 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010, respectively Accrued liabilities at both December 31, 2011 and 2010 were $2 1 billion Changes to deferred compensation liabilities and corresponding returns on the assets that economically hedge these liabilities are recorded within compensation and benefits expense on the Consolidated Statements of (Loss) Earnings

Note 17. Income Taxes

The components of income tax (benefit) expense for the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 were as follows:

(1) Total income tax (benefit) expense does not reflect the deferred tax effects of unrealized gains and losses on available-for-sale debt and marketable equity securities, foreign currency translation adjustments, derivatives and employee benefit plan adjustments that are included in accumulated other comprehensive loss. As a result of these tax effects, accumulated other comprehensive loss increased $178 million in the year ended December 31, 2011 and decreased $322 million and $796 million in the years ended December 31, 2010 and 2009, respectively In addition, total income tax (benefit) expense does not reflect the tax effects associated with employee stock plans which increased stockholder's equity $43 million in the year ended December 31, 2011 and decreased stockholder's equity $37 million and $99 million in the years ended December 31, 2010 and 2009, respectively

Income tax (benefit) expense for the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 varied from the amount computed by applying the statutory income tax rate to (loss) income before income taxes. A reconciliation between the expected U.S. federal income tax (benefit) expense using the U S federal statutory tax rate of 35% to Merrill Lynch's actual income tax (benefit) expense and resulting effective tax rate for the years ended December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009 is presented in the table below

(1) Amounts differ from the tax rate reconciliation table due to temporary items and jurisdictional offsets, as well as the inclusion of interest in the tax rate reconciliation table

As of December 31, 2011, 2010 and 2009, the balance of Merrill Lynch's UTBs which would, if recognized, affect Merrill Lynch's effective tax rate was $1 2 billion, $1.3 billion and $1 2 billion, respectively Included in the UTB balance are some items the recognition of which would not affect the effective tax rate, such as the tax effect of certain temporary differences, the portion of gross state UTBs that would be offset by the tax benefit of the associated federal deduction and the portion of gross non-U.S UTBs that would be offset by tax reductions in other jurisdictions.

Merrill Lynch files income tax returns in more than 100 state and non-U S jurisdictions each year The Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and other tax authorities in countries and states in which Merrill Lynch has significant business operations, examine tax returns periodically (continuously in some jurisdictions) The table below summarizes the status of significant tax examinations, by jurisdiction, for Merrill Lynch as of December 31, 2011

Tax Examination Status

Jurisdiction	Years under examination[1]	Status at December 31, 2011
U.S. federal	2004-2009[2]	See below
U.K	2009	Field examination

(1) All tax years subsequent to the above years remain open to examination
(2) From the date of its acquisition by Bank of America, Merrill Lynch has been included in Bank of America's consolidated federal income tax return

During 2011, Merrill Lynch, Bank of America and the IRS made significant progress toward resolving all federal income tax examinations for Bank of America tax years through 2009 and Merrill Lynch tax years through 2008 While subject to final agreement, including review by the Joint Committee on Taxation of the U S Congress for certain years, Merrill Lynch believes that all federal examinations in the Tax Examination Status table above may be concluded during 2012.

Considering all examinations, it is reasonably possible that the UTB balance will decrease by as much as $1.0 billion during the next twelve months, since resolved items will be removed from the balance whether their resolution resulted in payment or recognition If such a decrease were to occur, it likely would primarily result from outcomes consistent with Merrill Lynch's expectations

During 2011 and 2010, Merrill Lynch recognized in income tax expense, a benefit of $135 million and an expense of $71 million, respectively, of interest and penalties, net-of-tax At December 31, 2011 and 2010, Merrill Lynch's accrual for interest and penalties that related to income taxes, net of taxes and remittances, was $137 million and $329 million, respectively

Significant components of Merrill Lynch's net deferred tax assets at December 31, 2011 and 2010 are presented in the table below

The table below summarizes the deferred tax assets and related valuation allowances recognized for the net operating loss and tax credit carryforwards at December 31, 2011

	Deferred Tax Asset	Valuation Allowance	Net Deferred Tax Asset	First Year Expiring
Net operating losses - U S	$ 4,796	$ —	$ 4,796	After 2028
Net operating losses - U K.	8,836	—	8,836	None
Net operating losses - other non-U S	362	(230)	132	Various
Net operating losses - U S states[1]	893	(428)	465	Various
Tax credits[2]	317	(246)	71	After 2017

[1] Amounts above include capital losses The losses and related valuation allowances for U S states before considering the benefit of federal deductions were $1 4 billion and ($658) million, respectively
[2] Primarily U.S. foreign tax credits

Realization of the deferred tax assets above is dependent on Merrill Lynch's or Bank of America's ability to generate sufficient taxable income prior to their expiration. After examining all available evidence, Merrill Lynch concluded that no valuation allowance was necessary to reduce the U K. NOL and U.S. federal NOL since estimated future taxable income will more-likely-than-not be sufficient to utilize these assets prior to expiration. As of December 31, 2011, none of the U S. federal capital loss carryforward remained unutilized. The valuation allowance also increased, primarily against operating loss carryforwards in non-U S and state jurisdictions

Merrill Lynch is included in the consolidated U.S. federal income tax return and certain combined and unitary state income tax returns of Bank of America. At December 31, 2011, Merrill Lynch had a current tax receivable from

Bank of America of approximately $4 4 billion as a result of its inclusion in consolidated, combined, and unitary tax return filings with Bank of America

At December 31, 2011 and 2010, U S federal income taxes had not been provided on $10 4 billion and $11 0 billion of undistributed earnings of non-U S subsidiaries earned prior to 1987 and after 1997 that have been reinvested for an indefinite period of time If the earnings were distributed, an additional $0 8 billion and $1 3 billion of tax expense, net of credits for non-U S taxes paid on such earnings and for the related non-U S withholding taxes, would have resulted as of December 31, 2011 and 2010

Note 18. Regulatory Requirements

As a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America, a bank holding company that is also a financial holding company, Merrill Lynch is subject to the oversight of, and inspection by, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System

Certain U.S and non-U S subsidiaries are subject to various securities and banking regulations and capital adequacy requirements promulgated by the regulatory and exchange authorities of the countries in which they operate These regulatory restrictions may impose regulatory capital requirements and limit the amounts that these subsidiaries can pay in dividends or advance to ML & Co. The principal regulated subsidiaries of ML & Co are discussed below.

Securities Regulation

As a registered broker-dealer and futures commission merchant, MLPF&S is subject to the uniform net capital requirements of SEC Rule 15c3-1, and CFTC Regulation 1.17. MLPF&S has elected to compute the minimum capital requirement in accordance with the "Alternative Net Capital Requirement" as permitted by SEC Rule 15c3-1. At December 31, 2011, MLPF&S's regulatory net capital as defined by Rule 15c3-1 was $10 8 billion and exceeded the minimum requirement of $803 million by $10.0 billion.

In accordance with the Alternative Net Capital Requirement, MLPF&S is required to maintain tentative net capital in excess of $1 billion, net capital in excess of $500 million, and notify the SEC in the event its tentative net capital is less than $5 billion As of December 31, 2011, MLPF&S had tentative net capital and net capital in excess of the minimum and notification requirements

MLI, a U K regulated investment firm, is subject to capital requirements of the U.K 's FSA Financial resources, as defined, must exceed the total financial resources requirement set by the FSA At December 31, 2011, MLI's financial resources were $19 7 billion, exceeding the minimum requirement by $5 1 billion.

MLJS, a Japan-based regulated broker-dealer, is subject to capital requirements of the Japanese Financial Services Agency ("JFSA") Net capital, as defined, must exceed 120% of the total risk equivalents requirement of the JFSA. At December 31, 2011, MLJS's net capital was $1 8 billion, exceeding the minimum requirement by $1.1 billion

Banking Regulation

MLIB, an Ireland-based regulated bank, is subject to the capital requirements of the Central Bank of Ireland MLIB is required to meet minimum regulatory capital requirements under the European Union ("EU") banking law as implemented in Ireland by the Central Bank of Ireland At December 31, 2011, MLIB's financial resources were $13 7 billion, exceeding the minimum requirement by $4.9 billion.

Note 19. Quarterly Information (Unaudited)

The unaudited quarterly results of operations of Merrill Lynch for the years ended December 31, 2011 and December 31, 2010 are prepared in conformity with U.S generally accepted accounting principles, and reflect all adjustments that are, in the opinion of management, necessary for a fair presentation of the results of operations for the periods presented. Results of any interim period are not necessarily indicative of results for a full year

Non-cash investing and financing activities,

For the year ended December 31, 2010 Merrill Lynch received a non-cash capital contribution of approximately $1.0 billion from Bank of America associated with certain employee stock awards. In addition, as of January 1, 2010, Merrill Lynch assumed assets and liabilities in connection with the consolidation of certain VIEs. See Note 9. In October 2010, Merrill Lynch's mandatory convertible preferred stock was automatically converted to Bank of America common stock. The redemption was settled through a non-cash intercompany transaction.

In connection with the acquisition of Merrill Lynch by Bank of America, ML & Co. recorded purchase accounting adjustments for the year ended December 31, 2009, which were recorded as non-cash capital contributions. In addition, during 2009 Bank of America contributed the net assets of Banc of America Investment Services, Inc. to ML & Co. See Note 2.

Effective on January 1, 2009, Bank of America contributed the net assets of Bank of America Securities Holdings Corporation totaling approximately $3.7 billion to ML & Co. This was recorded as a non-cash capital contribution. See Note 1.

In connection with the sale of Merrill Lynch Bank USA to a subsidiary of Bank of America during 2009, ML & Co. received a note receivable as consideration for the net book value of assets and liabilities transferred to Bank of America. See Note 2.

Item 9. Changes in and Disagreements with Accountants on Accounting and Financial Disclosure.

Item 9A. Controls and Procedures

Evaluation of Disclosure Controls and Procedures

As of the end of the period covered by this report and pursuant to Rule 13a-15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act"), Merrill Lynch's management, including the Chief Executive Officer and Chief Financial Officer of ML & Co , conducted an evaluation of the effectiveness and design of Merrill Lynch's disclosure controls and procedures (as that term is defined in Rule 13a-15(e) of the Exchange Act). Based upon that evaluation, the Chief Executive Officer and Chief Financial Officer concluded that Merrill Lynch's disclosure controls and procedures were effective, as of the end of the period covered by this report, in recording, processing, summarizing and reporting information required to be disclosed by ML & Co in reports that it files or submits under the Exchange Act, within the time periods specified in the SEC's rules and forms

Report on Internal Control Over Financial Reporting

Management recognizes its responsibility for establishing and maintaining adequate internal control over financial reporting

Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting is a process designed to provide reasonable assurance regarding the reliability of financial reporting and the preparation of financial statements for external purposes in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting includes those policies and procedures that (i) pertain to the maintenance of records that, in reasonable detail, accurately and fairly reflect the transactions and dispositions of the assets of the company; (ii) provide reasonable assurance that transactions are recorded as necessary to permit preparation of financial statements in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America, and that Merrill Lynch's receipts and expenditures are being made only in accordance with authorizations of our management and directors, and (iii) provide reasonable assurance regarding prevention or timely detection of unauthorized acquisition, use, or disposition of our assets that could have a material effect on the financial statements.

Because of its inherent limitations, internal control over financial reporting may not prevent or detect misstatements. Also, projections of any evaluation of effectiveness to future periods are subject to the risk that controls may become inadequate because of changes in conditions, or that the degree of compliance with the policies or procedures may deteriorate.

Management assessed the effectiveness of Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting as of December 31, 2011 In making this assessment, management used the criteria set forth by the Committee of Sponsoring Organizations of the Treadway Commission (COSO) in Internal Control-Integrated Framework Based on that assessment, management believes that Merrill Lynch maintained effective internal control over financial reporting as of December 31, 2011

PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, Merrill Lynch's independent registered public accounting firm, has issued an opinion on the effectiveness of Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting as of December 31, 2011. This report appears under "Report of Independent Registered Public Accounting Firm" in Part II, Item 8 of this Form 10-K

Changes in Internal Control over Financial Reporting

No change in Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting (as defined in Rule 13a-15(f) under the Exchange Act) occurred in the fourth quarter of 2011 that has materially affected, or is reasonably likely to materially affect, Merrill Lynch's internal control over financial reporting.

On January 1, 2009, Merrill Lynch (the "Predecessor Company") was acquired by Bank of America through the merger of a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America with and into ML & Co. with ML & Co. (the "Successor Company") continuing as the surviving corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America. The Predecessor Company and Successor Company periods have been separated by a vertical line above to highlight the fact that the financial information for such periods has been prepared under two different cost bases of accounting.

(a) Excludes undistributed earnings (loss) from equity investments and earnings from discontinued operations.
(b) Other fixed charges consist of the interest factor in rentals, amortization of debt issuance costs and preferred security dividend requirements of subsidiaries.
*The earnings for the years 2011, 2008 and 2007 were inadequate to cover total fixed charges and total fixed charges and preferred stock dividends.
The coverage deficiencies for total fixed charges for the years 2011, 2008, and 2007 were $5,446 million, $45,438 million and $13,723 million, respectively.
The coverage deficiencies for total fixed charges and preferred stock dividends for the years 2011, 2008 and 2007 were $5,446 million, $49,794 million and $14,124, million, respectively.

Competition is based on a number of factors including among others customer service quality and range of products and services offered price reputation interest rates on loans and deposits lending limits and customer convenience Our ability to continue to compete effectively also depends in large part on our ability to attract new employees and retain and motivate our existing employees while managing compensation and other costs

Employees
As of December 31 2011 we had approximately 282 000 full-time equivalent employees None of our domestic employees is subject to a collective bargaining agreement Management considers our employee relations to be good

Government Supervision and Regulation

The following discussion describes among other things elements of an extensive regulatory framework applicable to bank holding companies financial holding companies and banks including specific information about Bank of America U S federal regulation of banks bank holding companies and financial holding companies is intended primarily for the protection of depositors and the Deposit Insurance Fund (DIF) rather than for the protection of stockholders and creditors For additional information about recent regulatory programs initiatives and legislation that impact us see Regulatory Matters in the MD&A on page 66

General

We are subject to an extensive regulatory framework applicable to bank holding companies financial holding companies and banks

As a registered financial holding company and bank holding company Bank of America Corporation is subject to the supervision of and regular inspection by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Federal Reserve) Our banking subsidiaries (the Banks) organized as national banking associations are subject to regulation supervision and examination by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and the Federal Reserve The Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection (CFPB) regulates consumer financial products and services

U S financial holding companies and the companies under their control are permitted to engage in activities considered "financial in nature" as defined by the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act and related Federal Reserve interpretations Unless otherwise limited by the Federal Reserve a financial holding company may engage directly or indirectly in activities considered financial in nature provided the financial holding company gives the Federal Reserve after-the-fact notice of the new activities The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act also permits national banks to engage in activities considered financial in nature through a financial subsidiary subject to certain conditions and limitations and with the approval of the OCC If the Federal Reserve finds that any of the Banks is not "well-capitalized" or "well-managed" we would be required to enter into an agreement with the Federal Reserve to comply with all applicable capital and management requirements which may contain additional limitations or conditions relating to our activities

The Riegle-Neal Interstate Banking and Branching Efficiency Act of 1994 permits bank holding companies to acquire banks located in states other than their home state without regard to state law subject to certain conditions including the condition that the bank holding company after and as a result of the acquisition controls no more than 10 percent of the total amount of deposits of insured depository institutions in the United States and no more than 30 percent or such lesser or greater amount set by state law of such deposits in that state The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Financial Reform Act) restricts acquisitions by financial companies if as a result of the acquisition the total liabilities of the financial company would exceed 10 percent of the total liabilities of all financial companies At December 31 2011 we held approximately 12 percent of the total amount of deposits of insured depository institutions in the U S

We are also subject to various other laws and regulations as well as supervision and examination by other regulatory agencies all of which directly or indirectly affect our operations and management and our ability to make distributions to stockholders Our U S broker/dealer subsidiaries are subject to regulation by and supervision of the SEC New York Stock Exchange and Financial Industry Regulatory Authority our commodities businesses in the U S are subject to regulation by and supervision of the U S Commodities Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) and our insurance activities are subject to licensing and regulation by state insurance regulatory agencies

Our non U S businesses are also subject to extensive regulation by various non-U S regulators including governments securities exchanges central banks and other regulatory bodies in the jurisdictions in which those businesses operate Our financial services operations in the U K are subject to regulation by and supervision of the Financial Services Authority (FSA) In July of 2010 the U K proposed abolishing the FSA and replacing it with the Financial Policy Committee within the Bank of England (FPC) and two new regulators the Prudential Regulatory Authority and the Consumer Protection and Markets Authority (CPMA) Our U K regulated entities will be subject to the supervision of the FPC and the PRA for prudential matters and the CPMA for conduct of business matters The new financial regulatory structure is intended to be in place by the end of 2012 We continue to monitor the development and potential impact of this regulatory restructuring

On July 21 2010 the Financial Reform Act was signed into law As a result of the Financial Reform Act several significant regulatory developments occurred in 2011 and additional regulatory developments may occur in 2012 and beyond The Financial Reform Act has had and will continue to have a significant and negative impact on our earnings through fee reductions higher costs and new restrictions For a description of significant developments see Regulatory Matters in the MD&A on page 66

Capital and Operational Requirements

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 (FDICIA) among other things identifies five capital categories for insured depository institutions ("well-capitalized" "adequately capitalized" "undercapitalized" "significantly undercapitalized" and "critically undercapitalized") and requires the respective federal regulatory agencies to implement systems for prompt corrective action for insured depository institutions that do not meet minimum capital requirements within such categories FDICIA imposes progressively restrictive constraints on operations management and capital distributions depending on the category in which an institution is classified Failure to meet the capital guidelines could also subject a banking institution to capital-raising requirements An "undercapitalized" bank must develop a capital restoration plan and its parent holding company must guarantee that bank's compliance with the plan

As a financial services holding company we are subject to the risk-based capital guidelines issued by the Federal Reserve (Basel I) and risk-based capital guidelines issued by other U S banking regulators Under these guidelines we measure capital adequacy based on Tier 1 capital Tier 2 capital and Total capital (Tier 1 plus Tier 2 capital) Capital ratios are calculated by dividing each capital amount by risk-weighted assets Under Basel I the minimum Tier 1 capital ratio is four percent and the minimum total capital ratio is eight percent A "well-capitalized" institution must generally maintain capital ratios an additional two percentage points higher than these minimum guidelines

While not an explicit requirement of law or regulation bank regulatory agencies have stated that they expect common equity to be the primary component of a financial holding company's Tier 1 capital and that financial holding companies should maintain a Tier 1 common capital ratio of at least four percent

The Tier 1 leverage ratio is determined by dividing Tier 1 capital by adjusted quarterly average total assets after certain adjustments "Well-capitalized" bank holding companies must have a minimum Tier 1 leverage ratio of four percent and not be subject to a Federal Reserve directive to maintain higher capital levels "Well-capitalized" national banks must maintain a Tier 1 leverage ratio of at least five percent and not be subject to a Federal Reserve directive to maintain higher capital levels We are currently classified as "well-capitalized" under Basel I

The Basel II Final Rule (Basel II) was published in December 2007 and established requirements for U S implementation of Basel II and provided detailed requirements for a new regulatory capital framework This regulatory capital framework includes requirements related to credit and operational risk (Pillar 1) supervisory requirements (Pillar 2) and disclosure requirements (Pillar 3) We are currently in the Basel II parallel period

On December 16 2010 the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (Basel Committee) issued "Basel III A global regulatory framework for more resilient banks and banking systems" (Basel III) proposing a January 2013 implementation date for Basel III If implemented by U S banking regulators as proposed Basel III could significantly increase our capital requirements Basel III and the Financial Reform Act propose the disqualification of qualifying trust preferred securities from Tier 1 capital with the Financial Reform Act proposing that the disqualification be phased in from 2013 through 2015 Basel III also proposes the deduction of certain assets from capital (including deferred tax assets mortgage servicing rights (MSRs) investments in financial firms and pension assets among others within prescribed limitations) the inclusion of accumulated other comprehensive income (OCI) in capital increased capital requirements for counterparty credit risk and new minimum capital and buffer requirements The phase-in period for the capital deductions is proposed to occur in 20 percent increments from 2014 through 2018 with full implementation by December 31 2018 An increase in capital requirements for counterparty credit is proposed to be effective January 2013 The phase-in period for the new minimum capital requirements and related buffers is proposed to occur between 2013 and 2019 U S banking regulators have not yet issued proposed regulations that will implement these requirements

On December 29 2011 U S regulators issued a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPR) that would amend a December 2010 NPR on the Market Risk Rules This amended NPR is expected to increase the capital requirements for our trading assets and liabilities We continue to evaluate the capital impact of the proposed rules and currently anticipate that we will be in compliance with any final rules by the projected implementation date in late 2012

On June 17 2011 U S banking regulators proposed rules requiring all large bank holding companies (BHCs) to submit a comprehensive capital plan to the Federal Reserve as part of an annual Comprehensive Capital Analysis and Review (CCAR) The proposed regulations require BHCs to demonstrate adequate capital to support planned capital actions such as dividends share repurchases or other forms of distributing capital CCAR submissions are subject to approval by the Federal Reserve The Federal Reserve may require BHCs to provide prior notice under certain circumstances before making a capital distribution

On July 19 2011 the Basel Committee published the consultative document "Globally systemic important banks Assessment methodology and the additional loss absorbancy requirement" which sets out measures for global systemically important financial institutions including the methodology for measuring systemic importance the additional capital required (the SIFI buffer) and the arrangements by which they will be phased in As proposed the SIFI buffer would be met with additional Tier 1 common equity ranging from one percent to 2 5 percent and in certain circumstances 3 5 percent This will be phased in from 2016 through 2018 U S banking regulators have not yet provided similar rules for U S implementation of a SIFI buffer

In addition to the capital proposals in December 2010 the Basel Committee proposed two measures of liquidity risk The Liquidity Coverage Ratio (LCR) identifies the amount of unencumbered high-quality liquid assets a financial institution holds that can be used to offset the net cash outflows the institution would encounter under an acute 30-day stress scenario The Net Stable Funding Ratio (NSFR) measures the amount of longer-term stable sources of funding employed by a financial institution relative to the liquidity profiles of the assets funded and the potential for contingent calls on funding liability arising from off-balance sheet commitments and obligations over a one-year period These two minimum liquidity measures are also considered part of Basel III

Given that the U S regulatory agencies have issued neither proposed rulemaking nor supervisory guidance on Basel III significant uncertainty exists regarding the ultimate impacts of Basel III on U S financial institutions including us

For additional information about our calculation of regulatory capital and capital composition see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital in the MD&A on page 72 and Note 18 – Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions to the Consolidated Financial Statements For more information about regulatory capital changes see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital Changes in the MD&A on page 73

Distributions

We are subject to various regulatory policies and requirements relating to the payment of dividends including requirements to maintain capital above regulatory minimums The appropriate federal regulatory authority is authorized to determine under certain circumstances relating to the financial condition of a bank or bank holding company that the payment of dividends would be an unsafe or unsound practice and to prohibit payment thereof For instance under proposed rules we are required to submit to the Federal Reserve a capital plan as part of an annual CCAR (the Capital Plan) Supervisory review of the CCAR has a stated purpose of assessing the capital planning process of major U S bank holding companies including any planned capital actions such as the payment of dividends on common stock For additional information regarding the restrictions on our ability to receive dividends or other distributions from the Banks see Item 1A Risk Factors

In addition our ability to pay dividends is affected by the various minimum capital requirements and the capital and non-capital standards established under FDICIA as described above The right of the Corporation our stockholders and our creditors to participate in any distribution of the assets or earnings of our subsidiaries is further subject to the prior claims of creditors of the respective subsidiaries

For additional information regarding the requirements relating to the payment of dividends including the minimum capital requirements see Note 15 – Shareholders' Equity and Note 18 – Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Source of Strength

According to the Financial Reform Act and Federal Reserve policy bank holding companies are expected to act as a source of financial strength to each subsidiary bank and to commit resources to support each such subsidiary Similarly under the cross-guarantee provisions of the FDICIA in the event of a loss suffered or anticipated by the FDIC - either as a result of default of a banking subsidiary or related to FDIC assistance provided to such a subsidiary in danger of default the affiliate banks of such a subsidiary may be assessed for the FDIC's loss subject to certain exceptions For additional information about our calculation of regulatory capital and capital composition and proposed capital rules see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital in the MD&A on page 72 and Note 18 – Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Deposit Insurance

Deposits placed at U S domiciled Banks (U S Banks) are insured by the FDIC subject to limits and conditions of applicable law and the FDIC's regulations Pursuant to the Financial Reform Act FDIC insurance coverage limits were permanently increased to $250 000 per customer The Financial Reform Act also provides for unlimited FDIC insurance coverage for noninterest-bearing demand deposit accounts for a two-year period beginning on December 31 2010 and ending on January 1 2013 All insured depository institutions are required to pay assessments to the FDIC in order to fund the DIF

The FDIC is required to maintain at least a designated minimum ratio of the DIF to insured deposits in the U S The Financial Reform Act requires the FDIC to assess insured depository institutions to achieve a DIF ratio of at least 1 35 percent by September 30 2020 The FDIC has adopted new regulations that establish a long-term target DIF ratio of greater than two percent The DIF ratio is currently below the required targets and the FDIC has adopted a restoration plan that will result in substantially higher deposit insurance assessments for all depository institutions over the coming years Deposit insurance assessment rates are subject to change by the FDIC and will be impacted by the overall economy and the stability of the banking industry as a whole For additional information regarding deposit insurance see Item 1A Risk Factors – Regulatory and Legal Risk on page 14 and Regulatory Matters – Financial Reform Act and Regulatory Matters – FDIC Deposit Insurance Assessments in the MD&A on pages 66 and 67

U S Banks are subject to restrictions under federal law that limit certain types of transactions between the Banks and their non-bank affiliates In general U S Banks are subject to quantitative and qualitative limits on extensions of credit purchases of assets and certain other transactions involving Bank of America and its non-bank affiliates Transactions between the U S Banks and their non-bank affiliates are required to be on arm's length terms For additional information regarding transactions with affiliates see Regulatory Matters – Transactions with Affiliates in the MD&A on page 68

Privacy and Information Security

We are subject to many U S federal state and international laws and regulations governing requirements for maintaining policies and procedures to protect the non-public confidential information of our customers The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act requires the Banks to periodically disclose Bank of America's privacy policies and practices relating to sharing such information and enables retail customers to opt out of our ability to market to affiliates and non-affiliates under certain circumstances The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act also requires the Banks to implement a comprehensive information security program that includes administrative technical and physical safeguards to ensure the security and confidentiality of customer records and information These security and privacy policies and procedures for the protection of personal and confidential information are in effect across all businesses and geographic locations

Item 1A. Risk Factors

In the course of conducting our business operations we are exposed to a variety of risks some of which are inherent in the financial services industry and others of which are more specific to our own businesses The following discussion addresses the most significant factors that could affect our businesses' operations and financial condition Additional factors that could affect our financial condition and operations are discussed in Forward-looking Statements in the MD&A on page 25 However other factors could also adversely affect our businesses' operations and financial condition Therefore the risk factors below should not be considered a complete list of potential risks that we may face

General Economic and Market Conditions Risk

Our businesses and results of operations have been, and may continue to be, materially and adversely affected by the U.S. and international financial markets and economic conditions generally.

Our businesses and results of operations are materially affected by the financial markets and general economic conditions in the U S and abroad including factors such as the level and volatility of short term and long-term interest rates inflation home prices unemployment and under-employment levels bankruptcies household income consumer spending fluctuations in both debt and equity capital markets liquidity of the global financial markets the availability and cost of capital and credit investor sentiment and confidence in the financial markets European sovereign debt risks and the strength of the U S economy and the non-U S economies in which we operate The deterioration of any of these conditions can adversely affect our consumer and commercial businesses and securities portfolios our level of charge-offs and provision for credit losses the carrying value of our deferred tax assets our capital levels and liquidity and our results of operations

Although the U S economy continued its modest recovery in 2011 elevated unemployment under-employment and household debt along with continued stress in the consumer real estate market and certain commercial real estate markets pose challenges for domestic economic performance and the financial services industry The sustained high unemployment rate and the lengthy duration of unemployment have directly impaired consumer finances and pose risks to the financial services industry The housing market remains weak and elevated levels of distressed and delinquent mortgages pose further risks to the housing market In addition the public perception of certain financial services firms and practices appeared to decline during 2011 The current environment of heightened scrutiny of financial institutions has resulted in increased public awareness of and sensitivity to banking fees and practices Mortgage and housing market-related risks may be accentuated by attempts to forestall foreclosure proceedings as well as state and federal investigations into foreclosure practices by mortgage servicers Each of these factors may adversely affect our fees and costs

For additional information about economic conditions and challenges discussed above see Executive Summary – 2011 Economic and Business Environment in the MD&A on page 27

Mortgage and Housing Market-Related Risk

We have been, and expect to continue to be, required to repurchase mortgage loans and/or reimburse government-sponsored enterprises, Fannie Mae (FNMA) and Freddie Mac (collectively, the GSEs) and monolines for losses due to claims related to representations and warranties made in connection with sales of residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS) and mortgage loans, and have received similar claims, and may receive additional claims, from whole-loan purchasers, private-label securitization investors and private-label securitization trustees, monolines and others. The ultimate resolution of these exposures could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows, financial condition and results of operations.

In connection with residential mortgage loans sold to GSEs and first lien residential mortgage and home equity loans sold to investors other than GSEs we or our subsidiaries or legacy companies make or have made various representations and warranties Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in a requirement that we repurchase mortgage loans or indemnify or provide other remedies to counterparties (collectively repurchases) The Corporation and legacy Countrywide sold approximately $1 1 trillion of loans originated from 2004 through 2008 to the GSEs In addition legacy companies and certain subsidiaries sold loans originated from 2004 through 2008 with an original principal balance of $963 billion to investors other than GSEs

The amount of our total unresolved repurchase claims from all sources totaled approximately $14 3 billion at December 31 2011 The total amount of our recorded liability related to representations and warranties repurchase exposure was $15 9 billion at December 31 2011

Our estimated liability at December 31 2011 for obligations under representations and warranties with respect to GSE exposures is necessarily dependent on and limited by our historical claims experience with the GSEs It includes our understanding of our agreements with the GSEs and projections of future defaults as well as certain other assumptions and judgmental factors The GSEs repurchase requests, standards for rescission of repurchase requests and resolution processes have become increasingly inconsistent with the GSEs' own past conduct and our interpretation of our contractual obligations These developments have resulted in an increase in claims outstanding from the GSEs We are not able to predict changes in the behavior of the GSEs based on our past experiences Therefore it is not possible to reasonably estimate a possible loss or range of possible loss with respect to any such potential impact in excess of current accrued liabilities

Beginning in February 2012 we are no longer delivering purchase money and non-Making Home Affordable Program (MHA) refinance first-lien residential mortgage products into FNMA mortgage-backed securities (MBS) pools because of the expiration and mutual non-renewal of certain contractual delivery commitments and variances that permit efficient delivery of such loans to FNMA While we continue to have a valid agreement with FNMA permitting the delivery of purchase money and non-MHA refinance first-lien residential mortgage products without such contractual delivery commitments and variances the delivery of such products without such contractual variances would involve time and expense to implement the necessary operational and systems changes and otherwise present practical operational issues The non-renewal of these contractual delivery commitments and variances was influenced in part by our ongoing differences with FNMA in other contexts including repurchase claims We continue to deliver MHA refinancing products into FNMA MBS pools and continue to engage in dialogue to attempt to address these differences

While we are seeking to resolve our differences with the GSEs concerning each party's interpretation of the requirements of the governing contracts whether we will be able to achieve a resolution of these differences on acceptable terms and timing thereof is subject to significant uncertainty

In addition to repurchase claims we receive notices from mortgage insurance (MI) companies of claim denials cancellations or coverage rescission (collectively MI rescission notices) and the amount of such notices have remained elevated As of December 31 2011 74 percent of the MI rescission notices received had not been resolved On June 30 2011 FNMA issued an announcement requiring servicers to report effective October 1 2011 all MI rescission notices with respect to loans sold to FNMA The announcement also confirmed FNMA's view of its position that a mortgage insurance company's issuance of a MI rescission notice constitutes a breach of the lender's representations and warranties and permits FNMA to require the lender to repurchase the mortgage loan or promptly remit a make-whole payment covering FNMA's loss even if the lender is contesting the mortgage insurer's rescission We have informed FNMA that we do not believe that the new policy is valid under our relevant contracts with FNMA and that we do not intend to repurchase loans under the terms set forth in the new policy If we are required to abide by the terms of the new FNMA policy our representations and warranties liability will likely increase

Our estimated liability and range of possible loss with respect to non-GSE exposures is necessarily dependent on and limited by our historical claims and settlement experience with non-GSE counterparties and may materially change in the future based on factors beyond our control Future provisions and/or estimated ranges of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties may be significantly impacted if actual experiences are different from our assumptions in our predictive models including without limitation those regarding ultimate resolution of the Bank of New York Mellon settlement (BNY Mellon Settlement) estimated repurchase rates economic conditions estimated home prices consumer and counterparty behavior and a variety of other judgmental factors In addition we have not recorded any representations and warranties liability for certain potential monoline exposures and certain potential whole-loan and other private-label securitization exposures We currently estimate that the range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31 2011 could be up to $5 0 billion over existing accruals Reserves for certain potential monoline exposure are considered in our litigation reserves This estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties does not represent a probable loss is based on currently available information significant judgment and a number of assumptions that are subject to change including the assumption that the conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement are satisfied Adverse developments with respect to one or more of the assumptions underlying the liability for non-GSE representations and warranties and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss could result in significant increases to future provisions and our estimated range of possible loss

If future representations and warranties losses occur in excess of our recorded liability for GSE exposures and in excess of our recorded liability and estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE exposures including as a result of the factors set forth above such losses could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows financial condition and results of operations The liability for obligations under representations and warranties with respect to GSE and non-GSE exposures and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposures do not include any losses related to litigation matters disclosed in Note 14 - Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements nor do they include any separate foreclosure costs and related costs assessments and compensatory fees or any possible losses related to potential claims for breaches of performance of servicing obligations (except as such losses are included as potential costs of the BNY Mellon settlement) potential securities law or fraud claims or potential indemnity or other claims against us including claims related to loans guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) We are not able to reasonably estimate the amount of any possible loss with respect to any such servicing securities law (except to the extent reflected in the aggregate range of possible loss for litigation and regulatory matters disclosed in Note 14 - Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements) fraud or other claims against us however such loss could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows financial condition and results of operations

For additional information about our representations and warranties exposure see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Representations and Warranties in the MD&A on page 56 Consumer Portfolio Credit Risk Management in the MD&A on page 81 and Note 9 - Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements

If final court approval is not obtained with respect to the BNY Mellon Settlement to resolve nearly all of the legacy Countrywide-issued first-lien non-GSE RMBS repurchase exposure of the 2004-2008 vintages, or if the Corporation and legacy Countrywide determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement in accordance with its terms, the Corporation's future representations and warranties losses could be substantially higher than existing accruals and the estimated range of possible loss over existing accruals, and consequently could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows, financial condition and results of operations.

The BNY Mellon Settlement is subject to final court approval and certain other conditions It is not currently possible to predict the timing or ultimate outcome of the court approval process which can include appeals and could take a substantial period of time There can be no assurance that final court approval of the settlement will be obtained that all conditions will be satisfied (including the receipt of private letter rulings from the IRS and other tax rulings and opinions) or that if certain conditions in the BNY Mellon Settlement permitting withdrawal are met, the Corporation and legacy Countrywide will not determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement agreement

If final court approval is not obtained with respect to the BNY Mellon Settlement or if the Corporation and legacy Countrywide determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement agreement in accordance with its terms the Corporation's future representations and warranties losses with respect to non-GSEs could substantially exceed our non-GSE reserve together with estimated reasonably possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure of up to $5 0 billion over existing accruals at December 31 2011 Developments with respect to one or more of the assumptions underlying the estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties (including the timing and ultimate outcome of the court approval process relating to the BNY Mellon Settlement) could result in significant increases in our non-GSE reserve and/or to this estimated range of possible loss and such increases could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows financial condition and results of operations For additional information regarding the BNY Mellon Settlement see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Representations and Warranties in the MD&A on page 56

Further weakness in the U.S. housing market, including home prices, may adversely affect our consumer portfolios and have a significant adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations.

Economic weakness in 2011 was accompanied by continued stress in the U S housing market including declines in home prices These declines in the housing market with falling home prices and elevated foreclosures have negatively impacted the demand for many of our products and the credit performance of our consumer mortgage portfolios Additionally our mortgage loan production volume is generally influenced by the rate of growth in residential mortgage debt outstanding and the size of the residential mortgage market which has declined due to reduced activity in the housing market Continued high unemployment rates in the U S have challenged U S consumers and further compounded these stresses in the U S housing market as employment conditions may be compelling some consumers to delay new home purchases or miss payments on existing mortgages

Conditions in the U S housing market have also resulted in significant write-downs of asset values in several asset classes notably MBS and exposure to monolines These conditions may negatively affect the value of real estate which could negatively affect our exposure to representations and warranties While there were continued indications throughout the past year that the U S economy is stabilizing the performance of our overall consumer portfolios may not significantly improve in the near future A protracted continuation or worsening of these difficult housing market conditions may exacerbate the adverse effects outlined above and have a significant adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations

We temporarily suspended our foreclosure sales nationally in 2010 to conduct an assessment of our foreclosure processes. Subsequently, numerous state and federal investigations of foreclosure processes across our industry have been initiated. Those investigations and any irregularities that might be found in our foreclosure processes, along with any remedial steps taken in response to governmental investigations or to our own internal assessment, could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations.

We have resumed foreclosure sales in nearly all states where foreclosure does not require a court order (non-judicial states) While we have resumed foreclosure proceedings in nearly all states where a court order is required (judicial states) our progress on foreclosure sales in judicial states has been much slower than in non-judicial states The pace of foreclosure sales in judicial states increased significantly by the fourth quarter of 2011 However there continues to be a backlog of foreclosure inventory in judicial states

The implementation of changes in procedures and controls including loss mitigation procedures related to our ability to recover on FHA insurance-related claims and governmental regulatory and judicial actions may result in continuing delays in foreclosure proceedings and foreclosure sales and create obstacles to the collection of certain fees and expenses in both judicial and non-judicial foreclosures

We entered into a consent order with the Federal Reserve and Bank of America N A (BANA) entered into a consent order with the OCC on April 13 2011 The OCC consent order required that we retain an independent consultant approved by the OCC to conduct a review of all foreclosure actions pending or foreclosure sales that occurred between January 1 2009 and December 31 2010 and submit a plan to the OCC to remediate all financial injury to borrowers caused by any deficiencies identified through the review The review is comprised of two parts a sample file review conducted by the independent consultant which began in October 2011 and file reviews by the independent consultant based upon requests for review from customers with in-scope foreclosures We began outreach to those customers in November 2011 and additional outreach efforts are underway Because the review process is available to a large number of potentially eligible borrowers and involves an examination of many details and documents each review could take several months to complete We cannot yet determine how many borrowers will ultimately request a review how many borrowers will meet the eligibility requirements or how much in compensation might ultimately be paid to eligible borrowers

We continue to be subject to additional borrower and non-borrower litigation and governmental and regulatory scrutiny related to our past and current servicing and foreclosure activities including those claims not covered by the Servicing Resolution Agreements defined below This scrutiny may extend beyond our pending foreclosure matters to issues arising out of alleged irregularities with respect to previously completed foreclosure activities The current environment of heightened regulatory scrutiny has the potential to subject us to inquiries or investigations that could significantly adversely affect our reputation Such investigations by state and federal authorities as well as any other governmental or regulatory scrutiny of our foreclosure processes could result in material fines penalties equitable remedies additional default servicing requirements and process changes or other enforcement actions and could result in significant legal costs in responding to governmental investigations and additional litigation and accordingly could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operation

We expect that mortgage related assessments and waivers costs including compensatory fees assessed by the GSEs and other costs associated with foreclosures will remain elevated as additional loans are delayed in the foreclosure process This will likely result in continued higher noninterest expense including higher default servicing costs and legal expenses in CRES In addition required process changes including those required under the consent orders with federal bank regulators are likely to result in further increases in our default servicing costs over the longer term Delays in foreclosure sales may result in additional costs associated with the maintenance of properties or possible home price declines result in a greater number of nonperforming loans and increased servicing advances and may adversely impact the collectability of such advances and the value of our MSR asset, MBS and real estate owned properties With respect to GSE MBS the valuation of certain MBS could be negatively affected under certain scenarios due to changes in the timing of cash flows With respect to non-GSE MBS under certain scenarios the timing and amount of cash flows could be negatively affected For additional information regarding the temporary suspension of our foreclosure sales see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Other Mortgage-related Matters in the MD&A on page 63

We reached an agreement in principle (AIP) with the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), various federal agencies and 49 state attorneys general, to resolve various investigations into our foreclosure, servicing and certain mortgage origination practices. We also reached an agreement in principle with the FHA to resolve certain claims relating to the origination of FHA-insured mortgage loans and agreements in principle with the Federal Reserve and OCC regarding civil monetary penalties. These agreements are subject to ongoing discussions among the parties and the completion and execution of definitive documentation, as well as required regulatory and court approvals. Failure to finalize the documentation or to obtain the required approvals with respect to these agreements in principle, and failure to meet certain borrower assistance and refinancing assistance commitment goals in the agreements in principle which would trigger additional monetary payments and exposure to claims not covered by the agreements in principle, could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition or results of operations.

On February 9 2012 we reached agreements in principle (collectively the Servicing Resolution Agreements) with (1) the DOJ various federal regulatory agencies and 49 attorneys general to resolve federal and state investigations into certain origination servicing and foreclosure practices (the Global AIP) (2) the FHA to resolve certain claims relating to the origination of FHA-insured mortgage loans primarily by Countrywide prior to and for a period following our acquisition of that lender (the FHA AIP) and (3) each of the Federal Reserve and the OCC regarding civil monetary penalties related to conduct that was the subject of consent orders entered into with the banking regulators in April 2011 (the Consent Order AIPs)

The Servicing Resolution Agreements are subject to ongoing discussions among the parties and completion and execution of definitive documentation as well as required regulatory and court approvals The Global AIP is subject to among other things Federal court approval in the United States District Court in the District of Columbia and regulatory approvals of the United States

Department of the Treasury and other federal agencies. The Consent Order AIPs are subject to, among other things, the finalization of the Global AIP. There can be no assurance as to when or whether binding settlement agreements will be reached that they will be on terms consistent with the agreements in principle or as to when or whether the necessary approvals will be obtained and the settlements will be finalized.

The Global AIP calls for the establishment of certain uniform servicing standards, upfront cash payments of approximately $1.9 billion to the state and federal governments and for borrower restitution, approximately $7.6 billion in borrower assistance in the form of, among other things, principal reduction, short sales and deeds-in-lieu of foreclosure, and approximately $1.0 billion in refinancing assistance. We could be required to make additional payments if we fail to meet our borrower assistance and refinancing assistance commitments over a three-year period. In addition, we could be required to pay an additional $350 million if we fail to meet certain first-lien principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period. We also entered into agreements with several states under which we committed to perform certain minimum levels of principal reduction and related activities within those states as part of the Global AIP, and under which we could be required to make additional payments if we fail to meet such minimum levels. We expect to recognize the refinancing assistance at lower interest income in future periods as qualified borrowers pay reduced interest rates on loans refinanced. We may also incur additional operating costs (e.g., servicing costs) to implement certain terms of the Global AIP in future periods.

The FHA AIP provides for an upfront cash payment by us of $500 million. We would have the obligation to pay an additional $500 million if we fail to meet certain principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period.

Pursuant to an agreement in principle, the OCC agreed to hold in abeyance the imposition of a civil monetary penalty of $164 million. Pursuant to a separate agreement in principle, the Federal Reserve will assess a civil monetary penalty in the amount of $176 million against us. Satisfying our payment, borrower assistance and remediation obligations under the Global AIP will satisfy any civil monetary penalty obligations arising under these agreements in principle. If, however, we do not make certain required payments or undertake certain required actions under the Global AIP, the OCC will assess, and the Federal Reserve will require us to pay, the difference between the aggregate value of the payments and actions under these agreements in principle and the penalty amounts.

The Servicing Resolution Agreements do not cover claims arising out of securitization (including representations made to investors respecting MBS), criminal claims, private claims by borrowers, claims by certain states for injunctive relief or actual economic damages to borrowers related to Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. (MERS) and claims by the GSEs (including repurchase demands), among other items. Failure to finalize the documentation related to the Servicing Resolution Agreements, to obtain the required court and regulatory approvals, to meet our borrower and refinancing commitments, or other adverse developments with respect to the foregoing could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations. For additional information regarding the temporary suspension of our foreclosure sales, see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Other Mortgage-related Matters in the MD&A on page 63.

Failure to satisfy our obligations as servicer in the residential mortgage securitization process, including obligations related to residential mortgage foreclosure actions, along with other losses we could incur in our capacity as servicer, could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations.

Bank of America and its legacy companies have securitized a significant portion of the residential mortgage loans that they have originated or acquired. The Corporation services a large portion of the loans it or its subsidiaries have securitized and also services loans on behalf of third-party securitization vehicles and other investors. In addition to identifying specific servicing criteria, pooling and servicing arrangements entered into in connection with a securitization or whole-loan sale typically impose standards of care on the servicer with respect to its activities that may include the obligation to adhere to the accepted servicing practices of prudent mortgage lenders and/or to exercise the degree of care and skill that the servicer employs when servicing loans for its own account.

Many non-GSE residential mortgage-backed securitizations and whole-loan servicing agreements also require us to indemnify the trustee or other investor for, or against failures by us to perform our servicing obligations or acts or omissions that involve willful misfeasance, bad faith or gross negligence in the performance of, or reckless disregard of, our duties. Servicing agreements with the GSEs generally provide the GSEs with broader rights relative to the servicer than are found in servicing agreements with private investors. Each GSE typically claims the right to demand that we repurchase loans that breach the seller's representations and warranties made in connection with the initial sale of the loans, even if we were not the seller. The GSEs also claim that they have the contractual right to demand indemnification or loan repurchase for certain servicing breaches. The GSEs' first mortgage seller/servicer guides provide for timelines to resolve delinquent loans through workout efforts or liquidation if necessary and purport to require the imposition of compensatory fees if those deadlines are not satisfied except for reasons beyond our control. We believe that the governing contracts, our course of dealing and collective past practices and understandings should inform resolution of these matters. Beginning in 2010, the GSEs increased the level of compensatory fees imposed and have recently amended those servicing guides retroactively to impose significantly new and more stringent requirements relating to default activities, which could increase our exposure to claims for compensatory fees. We have informed the GSEs that we do not believe that the new policies, or their retroactive application, are valid under the relevant contracts, and that we do not agree that the newly articulated policies are the proper method for the assessment of any compensatory fees under the terms of the relevant contracts.

With regard to alleged irregularities in foreclosure process-related activities referred to above, we may incur costs or losses if we elect or are required to re-execute or re-file documents or take other action in connection with pending or completed foreclosures. We may also incur costs or losses if the validity of a foreclosure action is challenged by a borrower or overturned by a court because of errors or deficiencies in the foreclosure process. These costs and liabilities may not be reimbursable to us. We may also incur costs or losses relating to delays or alleged deficiencies in processing documents necessary to comply with state law governing foreclosures. We may be subject to deductions by insurers for MI or guarantee benefits relating to delays or alleged deficiencies. Additionally, if we commit a material breach of our servicing obligations that is not cured within specified timeframes, including those related to default servicing and foreclosure, we could be terminated as servicer under servicing agreements under certain circumstances. Any of these actions may harm our reputation or increase our servicing costs.

Mortgage notes, assignments or other documents are often required to be maintained and are often necessary to enforce mortgage loans. There has been significant public commentary regarding the common industry practice of recording mortgages in the name of MERS as nominee on behalf of the note holder and whether securitization trusts own the loans purported to be conveyed to them and have valid liens securing those loans. We currently use the MERS system for a substantial portion of the residential mortgage loans that we originate, including loans that have been sold to investors or securitization trusts. A component of the OCC consent order requires significant changes in the manner in which we service loans identifying MERS as the mortgagee. Additionally, certain local and state governments have commenced legal actions against us, MERS and other MERS members questioning the validity of the MERS model. Other challenges have also been made to the process for transferring mortgage loans to securitization trusts, asserting that having a mortgagee of record that is different than the holder of the mortgage note could "break the chain of title" and cloud the ownership of the loan. In order to foreclose on a mortgage loan, in certain cases it may be necessary or prudent for an assignment of the mortgage to be made to the holder of the note, which in the case of a mortgage held in the name of MERS as nominee would need to be completed by a MERS signing officer. As such, our practice is to obtain assignments of mortgages from MERS prior to instituting foreclosure if certain required documents are missing or defective, or if the use of MERS is found not to be valid, we could be obligated to cure certain defects or in some circumstances be subject to additional costs and expenses. Our use of MERS as nominee for the mortgage may also create reputational and other risks for us.

These costs and liabilities could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows, financial condition and results of operations. We may also face negative reputational costs from these servicing risks, which could reduce our future business opportunities in this area or cause that business to be on less favorable terms to us.

For additional information concerning our servicing risks, see Recent Events in the MD&A on page 28. For additional information regarding the temporary suspension of our foreclosure sales, see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Other Mortgage-related Matters in the MD&A on page 63.

Liquidity Risk

Liquidity Risk is the Potential Inability to Meet Our Contractual and Contingent Financial Obligations, On- or Off-balance Sheet, as they Become Due.

Adverse changes to our credit ratings from the major credit rating agencies could have a material adverse effect on our liquidity, cash flows, competitive position, financial condition and results of operations by significantly limiting our access to funding in the capital markets, increasing our borrowing costs, or triggering additional collateral or funding requirements.

Our borrowing costs and ability to raise funds are directly impacted by our credit ratings. In addition, credit ratings may be important to customers or counterparties when we compete in certain markets and when we seek to engage in certain transactions, including over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives. Credit ratings and outlooks are opinions on our creditworthiness and that of our obligations or securities, including long-term debt, short-term borrowings, preferred stock and other securities, including asset securitizations. Our credit ratings are subject to ongoing review by the rating agencies which consider a number of factors, including our own financial strength, performance, prospects and operations as well as factors not under our control.

On December 15, 2011, Fitch Ratings (Fitch) downgraded the Corporation's and BANA's long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Fitch's decision to lower its "support floor" for systemically important U.S. financial institutions. On November 29, 2011, Standard & Poor's Ratings Services (S&P) downgraded the Corporation's long-term and short-term debt ratings as well as BANA's long-term debt rating as a result of S&P's implementation of revised methodologies for determining Banking Industry Country Risk Assessments and bank ratings. On September 21, 2011, Moody's Investors Service, Inc. (Moody's) downgraded the Corporation's long-term and short-term debt ratings as well as BANA's long-term debt rating as a result of Moody's lowering the amount of uplift for potential U.S. government support it incorporates into ratings. On February 15, 2012, Moody's placed the Corporation's long-term debt ratings and BANA's long-term and short-term debt ratings on review for possible downgrade as part of its review of financial institutions with global capital markets operations. Any adjustment to our ratings will be determined based on Moody's review; however, the agency offered guidance that downgrades to our ratings, if any, would likely be limited to one notch.

Currently, the Corporation's long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks expressed by the rating agencies are as follows: Baa1/P-2 (negative) by Moody's; A/A-2 (negative) by S&P; and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch. The rating agencies could make further adjustments to our credit ratings at any time. There can be no assurance that additional downgrades will not occur.

A further reduction in certain of our credit ratings may have a material adverse effect on our liquidity, access to credit markets, the related cost of funds, our businesses and on certain trading revenues, particularly in those businesses where counterparty creditworthiness is critical. If the short-term credit ratings of our parent company, bank or broker/dealer subsidiaries were downgraded by one or more levels, the potential loss of access to short-term funding sources such as repo financing, and the effect on our incremental cost of funds and earnings could be material.

In addition, under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements, in the event of a further downgrade of our credit ratings or certain subsidiaries' credit ratings, counterparties to those agreements may require us or certain subsidiaries to provide additional collateral, terminate these contracts or agreements or provide other remedies. At December 31, 2011, if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for us or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch, the amount of additional collateral contractually required by derivative contracts and other trading agreements would have been approximately $1.6 billion, comprised of $1.2 billion for BANA and $375 million for Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. (Merrill Lynch) and certain of its subsidiaries. If the agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for these entities by a second incremental notch, approximately $1.1 billion in additional collateral, comprised of $871 million for BANA and $269 million for Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries, would have been required.

Also if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for us or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was $2 9 billion against which $2 7 billion of collateral had been posted If the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for us or certain subsidiaries a second incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was an incremental $5 6 billion against which $5 4 billion of collateral had been posted

While certain potential impacts are contractual and quantifiable the full consequences of a credit ratings downgrade to a financial institution are inherently uncertain as they depend upon numerous dynamic complex and inter-related factors and assumptions including whether any downgrade of a firm s long-term credit ratings precipitates downgrades to its short-term credit rat-ngs and assumptions about the potential behaviors of various customers investors and counterparties

For additional information about our credit ratings and their potential effects to our liquidity see Liquidity Risk - Credit Ratings in the MD&A on page 79 and Note 4 - Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Our liquidity, cash flows, financial condition and results of operations, and competitive position may be significantly adversely affected if we are unable to access the capital markets, continue to raise deposits, sell assets on favorable terms, or if there is an increase in our borrowing costs.

Liquidity is essential to our businesses We fund our assets primarily with globally sourced deposits in our bank entities as well as secured and unsecured liabilities transacted in the capital markets We rely on certain secured funding sources such as repo markets which are typically short-term and credit-sensitive in nature We also engage in asset securitization transactions including with the GSEs to fund consumer lending activities Our liquidity could be significantly adversely affected by our ability to access the capital markets illiquidity or volatility in the capital markets unforeseen outflows of cash including customer deposits funding for commitments and contingencies including Variable Rate Demand Notes the ability to sell assets on favorable terms increased liquidity requirements on our banking and nonbanking subsidiaries imposed by their home countries or negative perceptions about our short or long-term business prospects including downgrades of our credit ratings Several of these factors may arise due to circumstances beyond our control such as a general market disruption negative views about the financial services industry generally changes in the regulatory environment actions by credit rating agencies or an operational problem that affects third parties or us

Our cost of obtaining funding is directly related to prevailing market interest rates and to our credit spreads Credit spreads are the amount in excess of the interest rate of U S Treasury securities or other benchmark securities of the same maturity that we need to pay to our funding providers Increases in interest rates and our credit spreads can significantly increase the cost of our funding Changes in our credit spreads are market-driven and may be influenced by market perceptions of our creditworthiness Changes to interest rates and our credit spreads occur continuously and may be unpredictable and highly volatile

For additional information about our liquidity position and other liquidity matters including credit ratings and outlooks and the policies and procedures we use to manage our liquidity risks see Capital Management and Liquidity Risk in the MD&A on pages 71 and 76

Bank of America Corporation is a holding company and as such we are dependent upon our subsidiaries for liquidity, including our ability to pay dividends to stockholders. Applicable laws and regulations, including capital and liquidity requirements, may restrict our ability to transfer funds from our subsidiaries to Bank of America Corporation or other subsidiaries.

Bank of America Corporation as the parent company is a separate and distinct legal entity from our banking and nonbanking subsidiaries We evaluate and manage liquidity on a legal entity basis Legal entity liquidity is an important consideration as there are legal and other limitations on our ability to utilize liquidity from one legal entity to satisfy the liquidity requirements of another including the parent company For instance the parent company depends on dividends distributions and other payments from our banking and nonbanking subsidiaries to fund dividend payments on our common stock and preferred stock and to fund all payments on our other obligations including debt obligations Many of our subsidiaries including our bank and broker/dealer subsidiaries are subject to laws that restrict dividend payments or authorize regulatory bodies to block or reduce the flow of funds from those subsidiaries to the parent company or other subsidiaries In addition our bank and broker/dealer subsidiaries are subject to restrictions on their ability to lend or transact with affiliates and to minimum regulatory capital and liquidity requirements as well as restrictions on their ability to use funds deposited with them in bank or brokerage accounts to fund their businesses

Additional restrictions on related party transactions increased capital and liquidity requirements and additional limitations on the use of funds on deposit in bank or brokerage accounts as well as lower earnings can reduce the amount of funds available to meet the obligations of the parent company and even require the parent company to provide additional funding to such subsidiaries Regulatory action of that kind could impede access to funds we need to make payments on our obligations or dividend payments In addition our right to participate in a distribution of assets upon a subsidiary s liquidation or reorganization is subject to the prior claims of the subsidiary s creditors For additional information regarding our ability to pay dividends see Note 15 - Shareholders' Equity and Note 18 - Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Credit Risk

Credit Risk is the Risk of Loss Arising from a Borrower, Obligor or Counterparty Default when a Borrower, Obligor or Counterparty does not Meet Its Obligations.

Increased credit risk, due to economic or market disruptions, insufficient credit loss reserves or concentration of credit risk, may necessitate increased provisions for credit losses and could have an adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations.

When we loan money commit to loan money or enter into a letter of credit or other contract with a counterparty we incur credit risk or the risk of losses if our borrowers do not repay their loans or our counterparties fail to perform according to the terms of their agreements A number of our products expose us to credit risk including loans leases and lending commitments derivatives trading account assets and assets held-for-sale As one of the nation s largest lenders the credit quality of our consumer and commercial portfolios has a significant impact on our earnings

Global and U S economic conditions continue to weigh on our credit portfolios Economic or market disruptions are likely to increase our credit exposure to customers obligors or other counterparties due to the increased risk that they may default on their obligations to us These potential increases in delinquencies and default rates could adversely affect our consumer credit card home equity consumer real estate and purchased credit-impaired portfolios through increased charge-offs and provisions for credit losses In addition despite improvement in the mar of our commercial portfolio increased credit risk could also adversely affect our commercial loan portfolios where we continue to experience elevated losses particularly in our commercial real estate portfolios reflecting continued stress across industries property types and borrowers

We estimate and establish an allowance for credit losses for losses inherent in our lending activities (including unfunded lending commitments) excluding those measured at fair value through a charge to earnings The amount of allowance is determined based on our evaluation of the potential credit losses included within our loan portfolio The process for determining the amount of the allowance which is critical to our financial condition and results of operations requires difficult subjective and complex judgments including forecasts of economic conditions and how our borrowers will react to those conditions Our ability to assess future economic conditions or the creditworthiness of our customers obligors or other counterparties is imperfect The ability of our borrowers to repay their loans will likely be impacted by changes in economic conditions which in turn could impact the accuracy of our forecasts

As with any such assessments there is also the chance that we will fail to identify the proper factors or that we will fail to accurately estimate the impacts of factors that we identify We may suffer unexpected losses if the models and assumptions we use to establish reserves and make judgments in extending credit to our borrowers and other counterparties become less predictive of future events Although we believe that our allowance for credit losses was in compliance with applicable accounting standards at December 31 2011 there is no guarantee that it will be sufficient to address future credit losses particularly if economic conditions deteriorate In such an event we might need to increase the size of our allowance which could adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations

In the ordinary course of our business we also may be subject to a concentration of credit risk in a particular industry country counterparty borrower or issuer A deterioration in the financial condition or prospects of a particular industry or a failure or downgrade of or default by any particular entity or group of entities could have a material adverse effect on our businesses and the processes by which we set limits and monitor the level of our credit exposure to individual entities industries and countries may not function as we have anticipated While our activities expose us to many different industries and counterparties we routinely execute a high volume of transactions with counterparties in the financial services industry including brokers/dealers commercial banks investment funds and insurers This has resulted in significant credit concentration with respect to this industry In the ordinary course of business we also enter into transactions with sovereign nations U S states and U S municipalities Unfavorable economic or political conditions disruptions to capital markets currency fluctuations social instability and changes in government policies could impact the operating budgets or credit ratings of sovereign nations U S states and U S municipalities and expose us to credit risk

We also have a concentration of credit risk with respect to our consumer real estate consumer credit card and commercial real estate portfolios which represent a large percentage of our overall credit portfolio The economic downturn has adversely affected these portfolios and further exposed us to this concentration of risk Continued economic weakness or deterioration in real estate values or household incomes could result in materially higher credit losses

For additional information about our credit risk and credit risk management policies and procedures see Credit Risk Management in the MD&A on page 80 and Note 1 - Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements

We could suffer losses as a result of the actions of or deterioration in the commercial soundness of our counterparties and other financial services institutions.

We could suffer losses and our ability to engage in routine trading and funding transactions could be adversely affected by the actions and commercial soundness of other market participants We have exposure to many different industries and counterparties and we routinely execute transactions with counterparties in the financial services industry including brokers/dealers commercial banks investment banks mutual and hedge funds and other institutional clients Financial services institutions and other counterparties are inter related because of trading funding clearing or other relationships As a result defaults by or even rumors or questions about one or more financial services institutions or the financial services industry generally have led to market-wide liquidity problems and could lead to significant future liquidity problems including losses or defaults by us or by other institutions Many of these transactions expose us to credit risk in the event of default of a counterparty or client In addition our credit risk may be impacted when the collateral held by us cannot be realized or is liquidated at prices not sufficient to recover the full amount of the loan or derivatives exposure due us Any such losses could materially adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations

Our derivatives businesses may expose us to unexpected risks and potential losses.

We are party to a large number of derivatives transactions including credit derivatives Our derivatives businesses may expose us to unexpected market credit and operational risks that could cause us to suffer unexpected losses and have an adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations Severe declines in asset values unanticipated credit events or unforeseen circumstances that may cause previously uncorrelated factors to become correlated (and vice versa) may create losses resulting from risks not appropriately taken into account in the development, structuring or pricing of a derivative instrument The terms of certain of our OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements provide that upon the occurrence of certain specified events such as a change in our credit ratings we may be required to provide additional collateral or to provide other remedies or our counterparties may have the right to terminate or otherwise diminish our rights under these contracts or agreements

Many derivative instruments are individually negotiated and non-standardized which can make exiting, transferring or settling some positions difficult. Many derivatives require that we deliver to the counterparty the underlying security, loan or other obligation in order to receive payment. In a number of cases we do not hold and may not be able to obtain the underlying security, loan or other obligation.

Following the downgrade of the credit ratings of the Corporation, we have engaged in discussions with certain derivative and other counterparties regarding their rights under these agreements. In response to counterparties' inquiries and requests, we have discussed, and in some cases substituted, derivative contracts and other trading agreements including naming BANA as the new counterparty. Our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements to meet counterparties' requests may be subject to certain limitations, including counterparty willingness, regulatory limitations on naming BANA as the new counterparty, and the type or amount of collateral required. It is possible that such limitations on our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements, including naming BANA as the new counterparty, could adversely affect our results of operations.

Derivatives contracts and other transactions entered into with third parties are not always confirmed by the counterparties or settled on a timely basis. While a transaction remains unconfirmed or during any delay in settlement, we are subject to heightened credit and operational risk, and in the event of default may find it more difficult to enforce the contract. In addition, as new and more complex derivatives products have been created, covering a wider array of underlying credit and other instruments, disputes about the terms of the underlying contracts may arise, which could impair our ability to effectively manage our risk exposures from these products and subject us to increased costs.

For additional information on our derivatives exposure, see Note 4 – Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Market Risk

Market Risk is the Risk that Values of Assets and Liabilities or Revenues will be Adversely Affected by Changes in Market Conditions Such as Market Volatility. Market Risk is Inherent in the Financial Instruments Associated with our Operations and Activities, Including Loans, Deposits, Securities, Short-term Borrowings, Long-term Debt, Trading Account Assets and Liabilities, and Derivatives.

Our businesses and results of operations have been, and may continue to be, significantly adversely affected by changes in the levels of market volatility and by other financial or capital market conditions.

Our businesses and results of operations may be adversely affected by market risk factors such as changes in interest and currency exchange rates, equity and futures prices, the implied volatility of interest rates, credit spreads and other economic and business factors. These market risks may adversely affect, among other things, (i) the value of our on- and off-balance sheet securities, trading assets, other financial instruments and MSRs, (ii) the cost of debt capital and our access to credit markets, (iii) the value of assets under management, which could reduce our fee income relating to those assets, (iv) customer allocation of capital among investment alternatives, (v) the volume of client activity in our trading operations, (vi) investment banking fees, and (vii) the general profitability and risk level of the transactions in which we engage. Any of these developments could have a significant adverse impact on our financial condition and results of operations.

We use various models and strategies to assess and control our market risk exposures, but those are subject to inherent limitations. Our models, which rely on historical trends and assumptions, may not be sufficiently predictive of future results due to limited historical patterns, extreme or unanticipated market movements and illiquidity, especially during severe market downturns or stress events. The models that we use to assess and control our market risk exposures also reflect assumptions about the degree of correlation or lack thereof among prices of various asset classes or other market indicators.

In times of market stress or other unforeseen circumstances, such as the market conditions experienced in 2008 and 2009, previously uncorrelated indicators may become correlated or previously correlated indicators may move in different directions. These types of market movements have at times limited the effectiveness of our hedging strategies and have caused us to incur significant losses, and they may do so in the future. These changes in correlation can be exacerbated where other market participants are using risk or trading models with assumptions or algorithms that are similar to ours. In these and other cases, it may be difficult to reduce our risk positions due to the activity of other market participants or widespread market dislocations, including circumstances where asset values are declining significantly or no market exists for certain assets. To the extent that we own securities that do not have an established liquid trading market or are otherwise subject to restrictions on sale or hedging, we may not be able to reduce our positions and therefore reduce our risk associated with such positions. In addition, challenging market conditions may also adversely affect our investment banking fees.

For additional information about market risk and our market risk management policies and procedures, see Market Risk Management in the MD&A on page 112.

Further downgrades in the U.S. government's sovereign credit rating, or in the credit ratings of instruments issued, insured or guaranteed by related institutions, agencies or instrumentalities, could result in risks to the Corporation and its credit ratings and general economic conditions that we are not able to predict.

On August 2, 2011, Moody's affirmed the U.S. government's existing sovereign rating but revised the rating outlook to negative. On August 5, 2011, S&P downgraded the U.S. government's long-term sovereign credit rating to AA+ from AAA and stated that the outlook on the long-term rating is negative. On the same day, S&P affirmed its A-1+ short-term rating on the U.S. and removed it from CreditWatch negative. On November 28, 2011, Fitch affirmed its AAA long-term rating on the U.S., but changed the outlook from stable to negative. On the same day, Fitch affirmed its F1+ short-term rating on the U.S. All three rating agencies have indicated that they will continue to assess fiscal projections and consolidation measures as well as the medium-term economic outlook for the United States.

There continues to be the perceived risk of a sovereign credit ratings downgrade of the U.S. government, including the ratings of U.S. Treasury securities. It is foreseeable that the ratings and perceived creditworthiness of instruments issued, insured or guaranteed by institutions, agencies or instrumentalities directly linked to the U.S. government could also be correspondingly affected by any such downgrade. Instruments of this nature are key assets on the balance sheets of financial institutions, including the Corporation, and are widely used as collateral by financial institutions to meet their day-to-day cash flows in the short-term debt market. A downgrade of the sovereign credit ratings of the U.S. government and perceived creditworthiness of U.S. government-related obligations could impact our ability to obtain funding that is collateralized by affected instruments, as well as affecting the pricing of that funding when it is available. A downgrade may also adversely affect the market value of such instruments.

We cannot predict if, when or how any changes to the credit ratings or perceived creditworthiness of these organizations will affect economic conditions. Such ratings actions could result in a significant adverse impact to the Corporation. The credit rating agencies' ratings for the Corporation or its subsidiaries could be directly or indirectly impacted by a downgrade of the U.S. government's sovereign rating because the credit ratings of large systemically important financial institutions, including the Corporation, currently incorporate a degree of uplift due to assumptions concerning government support. In addition, the Corporation presently delivers a material portion of the residential mortgage loans it originates into GSEs' agencies or instrumentalities (or instruments insured or guaranteed thereby). We cannot predict if, when or how any changes to the credit ratings of these organizations will affect their ability to finance residential mortgage loans. Such ratings actions, if any, could result in a significant change to the business operations of CRES.

A downgrade of the sovereign credit ratings of the U.S. government or the credit ratings of related institutions', agencies' or instrumentalities' would significantly exacerbate the other risks to which the Corporation is subject and any related adverse effects on our business, financial condition and results of operations, including those described under Risk Factors – Credit Risk – "We could suffer losses as a result of the actions of or deterioration in the commercial soundness of our counterparties and other financial services institutions." Risk Factors – Market Risk – "Our businesses and results of operations have been and may continue to be significantly adversely affected by changes in the levels of market volatility and by other financial or capital market conditions" and Risk Factors – Liquidity Risk – "Our liquidity, cash flows, financial condition and results of operations and competitive position may be significantly adversely affected if we are unable to access capital markets, continue to raise deposits, sell assets on favorable terms or if there is an increase in our borrowing costs."

Uncertainty about the financial stability of several countries in the European Union (EU), the increasing risk that those countries may default on their sovereign debt and related stresses on financial markets, the Euro and the EU could have a significant adverse effect on our business, financial condition and results of operations.

In 2011, the financial crisis in Europe continued, triggered by high sovereign budget deficits and rising direct and contingent sovereign debt in Greece, Ireland, Italy, Portugal and Spain, which created concerns about the ability of these EU countries to continue to service their sovereign debt obligations. These conditions impacted financial markets and resulted in credit ratings downgrades for, and high and volatile bond yields on the sovereign debt of, many EU countries. Certain European countries continue to experience varying degrees of financial stress, and yields on government-issued bonds in Greece, Ireland, Italy, Portugal and Spain have risen and remain volatile. Despite assistance packages to certain of these countries, the creation of a joint EU-IMF European Financial Stability Facility and additional expanded financial assistance to Greece, uncertainty over the outcome of the EU governments' financial support programs and worries about sovereign finances and the stability of the Euro and EU persist. Market concerns over the direct and indirect exposure of certain European banks and insurers to these EU countries resulted in a widening of credit spreads and increased costs of funding for these financial institutions. While we have reduced our exposure to European financial institutions, the insolvency of one or more major European financial institutions could adversely impact financial markets and consequently our results of operations.

Risks and ongoing concerns about the debt crisis in Europe could have a detrimental impact on the global economic recovery, sovereign and non-sovereign debt in these countries and the financial condition of European financial institutions and international financial institutions with exposure to the region, including us. Market and economic disruptions have affected, and may continue to affect, consumer confidence levels and spending, personal bankruptcy rates, levels of incurrence and default on consumer debt and residential mortgages, and housing prices, among other factors. There can be no assurance that the market disruptions in Europe, including the increased cost of funding for certain governments and financial institutions, will not spread, nor can there be any assurance that future assistance packages will be available or, even if provided, will be sufficient to stabilize the affected countries and markets in Europe or elsewhere. To the extent uncertainty regarding the European economic recovery continues to negatively impact consumer confidence and consumer credit factors, or should the EU enter a deep recession, both the U.S. economy and our business and results of operations could be significantly and adversely affected. Global economic uncertainty, regulatory initiatives and reform have impacted, and will likely continue to impact, non-U.S. credit and trading portfolios. Our Regional Risk Committee, a subcommittee of our Credit Risk Committee, is seeking to address this risk but there can be no assurance our efforts in this respect will be sufficient or successful. Our total sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to Greece, Italy, Ireland, Portugal and Spain was $15.3 billion at December 31, 2011 compared to $15.6 billion at December 31, 2010. Our total net sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to these countries was $10.5 billion at December 31, 2011 compared to $12.4 billion at December 31, 2010 after taking into account net credit default protection. At December 31, 2011 and 2010, the fair value of net credit default protection purchased was $4.9 billion and $4.2 billion. Losses could still result because our credit protection contracts only pay out under certain scenarios.

For more information on our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures in Europe, see Executive Summary – 2011 Economic and Business Environment in the MD&A on page 27 and Non-U.S. Portfolio in the MD&A on page 104.

Declines in the value of certain of our assets could have an adverse effect on our results of operations.

We have a large portfolio of financial instruments, including, among others, certain corporate loans and loan commitments, loans held-for-sale, repurchase agreements, long-term deposits, trading account assets and liabilities, derivatives assets and liabilities, available-for-sale debt and marketable equity securities, consumer-related MSRs and certain other assets and liabilities that we measure at fair value. We determine the fair values of these instruments based on the fair value hierarchy under applicable accounting guidance The fair values of these financial instruments include adjustments for market liquidity credit quality and other transaction-specific factors where appropriate

Gains or losses on these instruments can have a direct and significant impact on our results of operations unless we have effectively hedged our exposures Changes in loan prepayment speeds which are influenced by interest rates among other things can impact the value of our MSRs and can result in substantially higher or lower mortgage banking income and earnings depending upon our ability to fully hedge the performance of our MSRs Fair values may be impacted by declining values of the underlying assets or the prices at which observable market transactions occur and the continued availability of these transactions The financial strength of counterparties such as monolines with whom we have economically hedged some of our exposure to these assets also will affect the fair value of these assets Sudden declines and significant volatility in the prices of assets may substantially curtail or eliminate the trading activity for these assets which may make it very difficult to sell hedge or value such assets The inability to sell or effectively hedge assets reduces our ability to limit losses in such positions and the difficulty in valuing assets may increase our risk-weighted assets which requires us to maintain additional capital and increases our funding costs

Asset values also directly impact revenues in our asset management businesses We receive asset based management fees based on the value of our clients portfolios or investments in funds managed by us and in some cases we also receive incentive fees based on increases in the value of such investments Declines in asset values can reduce the value of our clients portfolios or fund assets which in turn can result in lower fees earned for managing such assets

For additional information about fair value measurements see Note 22 - Fair Value Measurements to the Consolidated Financial Statements For additional information about our asset management businesses see Business Segment Operations – Global Wealth & Investment Management in the MD&A on page 52

Changes to loan prepayment speeds could reduce our net interest income and earnings.

Government officials and regulatory authorities have advanced various proposals to assist homeowners and the housing and mortgage markets more generally Certain of these proposals have included expanded access to residential mortgage loan refinancing options including refinancing options for borrowers who may be current on their existing mortgage loans and for borrowers whose current mortgage principal balance may exceed the current appraised value of the mortgaged property Expanded refinancing access may also result from our implementation of the Servicing Resolution Agreements discussed above Adoption of proposals of this nature could result in an increased number of mortgage refinancings and accordingly greater reductions in interest rates and principal prepayments on the mortgage loans in our portfolio than we would otherwise expect to experience without those proposals Reductions in interest rates and increases in mortgage prepayment speeds of this nature could adversely impact the value of our MSR asset cause a significant acceleration of purchase premium amortization on our mortgage portfolio adversely affect our net interest margin and adversely affect our net interest income and earnings

For additional information about interest rate risk management see Interest Rate Risk Management for Nontrading Activities in the MD&A on page 116

Regulatory and Legal Risk

Bank regulatory agencies may require us to hold higher levels of regulatory capital, increase our regulatory capital ratios or increase liquidity, which could result in the need to issue additional securities that qualify as regulatory capital or to sell company assets.

We are subject to the risk-based capital guidelines issued by the Federal Reserve These guidelines establish regulatory capital requirements for banking institutions to meet minimum requirements as well as to qualify as a "well-capitalized" institution (A well-capitalized institution must generally maintain capital ratios 200 basis points higher than the minimum guidelines) The risk-based capital rules have been further supplemented by required leverage ratios defined as Tier 1 (the highest grade) capital divided by quarterly average total assets after certain adjustments If any of our insured depository institutions fails to maintain its status as "well-capitalized" under the capital rules of their primary federal regulator the Federal Reserve will require us to enter into an agreement to bring the insured depository institution or institutions back into a "well-capitalized" status For the duration of such an agreement the Federal Reserve may impose restrictions on the activities in which we may engage If we were to fail to enter into such an agreement or fail to comply with the terms of such agreement the Federal Reserve may impose more severe restrictions on the activities in which we may engage including requiring us to cease and desist in activities permitted under the Bank Holding Act

It is possible that increases in regulatory capital requirements changes in how regulatory capital is calculated or increases to liquidity requirements may cause the loss of our "well-capitalized" status unless we increase our capital levels by issuing additional common stock thus diluting our existing shareholders or by selling assets On December 20 2011 the Federal Reserve proposed rules relating to risk based capital and leverage requirements liquidity requirements stress tests single counterparty credit limits and early remediation requirements These rules when finalized are likely to influence our regulatory capital and liquidity planning process and may impose additional operational and compliance costs on us Any requirement that we increase our regulatory capital regulatory capital ratios or liquidity could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations as we may need to sell certain assets perhaps on terms unfavorable to us and contrary to our business plans Such a requirement could also compel us to issue additional securities which could dilute our current common stockholders For additional information about the proposals described above and their potential effect on our required levels of regulatory capital see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital in the MD&A on page 72

Government measures to regulate the financial industry, including the Financial Reform Act, either individually, in combination or in the aggregate, have increased and will continue to increase our compliance costs and could require us to change certain of our business practices, impose significant additional costs on us, limit the products that we offer, limit our ability to pursue business opportunities in an efficient manner, require us to increase our regulatory capital, impact the value of assets that we hold, significantly reduce our revenues or otherwise materially and adversely affect our businesses, financial condition and results of operations

As a financial institution we are heavily regulated at the state federal and international levels As a result of the 2008-2009 financial crisis and related global economic downturn we have faced and expect to continue to face increased public and legislative scrutiny as well as stricter and more comprehensive regulation of our businesses These regulatory and legislative measures either individually in combination or in the aggregate could require us to further change certain of our business practices impose significant additional costs on us limit the products that we offer limit our ability to pursue business opportunities in an efficient manner require us to increase our regulatory capital impact the value of assets that we hold significantly reduce our revenues or otherwise materially and adversely affect our businesses financial condition and results of operations

On October 11 2011 the Federal Reserve the OCC FDIC and the SEC four of the five regulatory agencies charged with promulgating regulations implementing limitations on proprietary trading as well as the sponsorship of or investment in hedge funds and private equity funds (the Volcker Rule) established by the Financial Reform Act released for comment proposed regulations On January 11 2012 the CFTC the fifth agency released for comment its proposed regulations under the Volcker Rule The proposed regulations include clarifications to the definition of proprietary trading and distinctions between permitted and prohibited activities The comment period for the first regulations proposed ended on February 13 2012 and the comment period for the CFTC regulations will end in March 2012

The statutory provisions of the Volcker Rule will become effective on July 21 2012 whether or not the final regulations are adopted and it gives certain financial institutions two years from the effective date with opportunities for additional extensions to bring activities and investments into compliance Although GBAM exited its stand alone proprietary trading business as of June 30 2011 in anticipation of the Volcker Rule and to further our initiative to optimize our balance sheet the ultimate impact of the Volcker Rule on us remains uncertain However based on the contents of the proposed regulations it is possible that the implementation of the Volcker Rule could limit or restrict our remaining trading activities Implementation of the Volcker Rule could also limit or restrict our ability to sponsor and hold ownership interests in hedge funds private equity funds and other subsidiary operations Additionally implementation of the Volcker Rule could increase our operational and compliance costs and reduce our trading revenues and adversely affect our results of operations The date by which final regulations will be issued is uncertain

Additionally the Financial Reform Act includes measures to broaden the scope of derivative instruments subject to regulation by requiring clearing and exchange trading of certain derivatives imposing new capital margin reporting registration and business conduct requirements for certain market participants and imposing position limits on certain OTC derivatives The Financial Reform Act grants the CFTC and the SEC substantial new authority and requires numerous rulemakings by these agencies The Financial Reform Act required regulators to promulgate the rulemakings necessary to implement these regulations by July 16 2011 However the rulemaking process was not completed as of that date and is not expected to conclude until well into 2012 Further the regulators granted temporary relief from certain requirements that would have taken effect on July 16 2011 absent any rulemaking The SEC temporary relief is effective until final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The CFTC temporary relief is effective until the earlier of July 16 2012 or the date on which final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The ultimate impact of these derivatives regulations and the time it will take to comply continue to remain uncertain The final regulations will impose additional operational and compliance costs on us and may require us to restructure certain businesses and negatively impact our revenues and results of operations

In April 2011 a new regulation became effective that implements revisions to the assessment system mandated by the Financial Reform Act that increased our FDIC expense In addition the FDIC has broad discretionary authority to increase assessments on large and highly complex institutions on a case by case basis Any future increases in required deposit insurance premiums or other bank industry fees could have an adverse impact on our financial condition and results of operations

The Financial Reform Act provided for a new resolution authority to establish a process to resolve the failure of large systemically important financial institutions As part of that process we are required to develop and implement a resolution plan which will be subject to review by the FDIC and the Federal Reserve to determine whether our plan is credible As a result of FDIC and Federal Reserve review we could be required to take certain actions over the next several years which could impose operational costs and could potentially result in the divestiture or restructuring of certain businesses and subsidiaries

In 2011 the Federal Reserve and FDIC jointly approved a final rule that requires the Corporation and other bank holding companies with assets of $50 billion or more as well as companies designated as systemic by the Financial Stability Oversight Council to periodically report to the FDIC and the Federal Reserve their plans for a rapid and orderly resolution in the event of material financial distress or failure If the FDIC and the Federal Reserve determine that a company's plan is not credible and the company fails to cure the deficiencies in a timely manner then the FDIC and the Federal Reserve may jointly impose on the company or on any of its subsidiaries more stringent capital leverage or liquidity requirements or restrictions on growth activities or operations The Corporation's initial plan is required to be submitted on or before July 1 2012 and to be updated annually Similarly in the U K the FSA has issued proposed rules requiring the submission of significant information about certain U K incorporated subsidiaries (including information on intra-group dependencies and legal entity separation) to allow the FSA to develop resolution plans As a result of the FSA review we could be required to take certain actions over the next several years which could impose operational costs and potentially could result in the restructuring of certain businesses and subsidiaries

Under the Financial Reform Act when a systemically important financial institution such as the Corporation is in default or danger of default the FDIC may in certain circumstances be appointed receiver in order to conduct an orderly liquidation of such systemically important financial institution In such a case the FDIC could invoke a new form of resolution authority called the orderly liquidation authority instead of the U S Bankruptcy Code If the Secretary of the Treasury makes certain financial distress and systemic risk determinations The orderly liquidation authority is modeled in part on the Federal Deposit Insurance Act but also adopts certain concepts from the U S Bankruptcy Code However the orderly liquidation authority contains certain differences from the U S Bankruptcy Code Macroprudential systemic protection is the primary objective of the orderly liquidation authority subject to minimum threshold protections for creditors Accordingly in certain circumstances under the orderly liquidation authority the FDIC could permit payment of obligations determined to be systemically significant (for example short term creditors of operating creditors) in lieu of the payment of other obligations (for example long term creditors) without the need to obtain creditors consent or prior court review Additionally under the orderly liquidation authority amounts owed to the US government generally enjoy a statutory payment priority

The Financial Reform Act established the CFPB to regulate the offering of consumer financial products or services under the federal consumer financial laws In addition under the Financial Reform Act the CFPB was granted general authority to prevent covered persons or service providers from committing or engaging in unfair deceptive or abusive acts or practices under Federal law in connection with any transaction with a consumer for a consumer financial product or service or the offering of a consumer financial product or service Pursuant to the Financial Reform Act on July 21 2011 certain federal consumer financial protection statutes and related regulatory authority were transferred to the CFPB As a consequence of this transfer of authority certain Federal consumer financial laws to which we are subject including but not limited to the Equal Credit Opportunity Act Home Mortgage Disclosure Act Electronic Fund Transfers Act Fair Credit Reporting Act Truth in Lending and Truth in Savings Acts will be enforced by the CFPB subject to certain statutory limitations On January 4 2012 a Director of the CFPB was appointed via recess appointment and accordingly the CFPB was vested with full authority to exercise all supervisory enforcement and rulemaking authorities granted to the CFPB under the Financial Reform Act including its supervisory powers over non bank financial institutions such as pay-day lenders and other types of non-bank financial institutions

On December 20 2011 the Federal Reserve issued proposed rules to implement enhanced supervisory and prudential requirements and the early remediation requirements established under the Financial Reform Act The enhanced standards include risk based capital and leverage requirements liquidity standards requirements for overall risk management single-counterparty credit limits stress test requirements and a debt-to-equity limit for certain companies determined to pose a threat to financial stability Comments on the proposed rules are due by March 31 2012 and final regulations will not be adopted until after that date The final rules are likely to influence our regulatory capital and liquidity planning process and may impose additional operational and compliance costs on us

Many of the provisions under the Financial Reform Act have begun to be phased in or will be phased in over the next several months or years and will be subject both to further rulemaking and the discretion of applicable regulatory bodies The Financial Reform Act will continue to have a significant and negative impact on our earnings through fee reductions higher costs and new restrictions The Financial Reform Act may also continue to have a material adverse impact on the value of certain assets and liabilities held on our balance sheet The ultimate impact of the Financial Reform Act on our businesses and results of operations will depend on regulatory interpretation and rulemaking as well as the success of any of our actions to mitigate the negative earnings impact of certain provisions

In December 2010 the Basel Committee issued "Basel III A global regulatory framework for more resilient banks and banking systems" and "International framework for liquidity risk measurement standards and monitoring (together Basel III) If implemented by U S banking regulators as proposed Basel III a capital standards could significantly increase our capital requirements Basel III and the Financial Reform Act propose the disqualification of trust preferred securities from Tier 1 capital with the Financial Reform Act proposing that the disqualification be phased in from 2013 to 2015 Basel III also proposes the deduction of certain assets from capital (deferred tax assets MSRs investments in financial firms and pension assets among others within prescribed limitations) the inclusion of accumulated OCI in capital increased capital requirements for counterparty credit risk and new minimum capital and buffer requirements

Basel III also proposes two minimum liquidity measures The LCR measures the amount of a financial institution s unencumbered high-quality liquid assets relative to the net cash outflows the institution could encounter under an acute 30-day stress scenario The NSFR measures the amount of longer-term stable sources of funding employed by a financial institution relative to the liquidity profiles of the assets funded and the potential for contingent calls on funding liquidity arising from off balance sheet commitments and obligations over a one-year period

On July 19 2011 the Basel Committee published the consultative document Globally systemic important banks Assessment methodology and the additional loss absorbency requirement which sets out measures for global systemically important financial institutions including the methodology for measuring systemic importance the additional capital required (the SIFI buffer) and the arrangements by which they will be phased in As proposed the SIFI buffer would be met with additional Tier 1 common equity ranging from one percent to 2 5 percent and in certain circumstances 3 5 percent This will be phased in from 2016 through 2018 U S banking regulators have not yet provided similar rules for U S implementation of a SIFI buffer

Preparation for Basel III has influenced and when finalized is likely to continue to influence our regulatory capital and liquidity planning process and may impose additional operational and compliance costs on us Any requirement that we increase our regulatory capital regulatory capital ratios or liquidity could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations as we may need to liquidate certain assets perhaps on terms unfavorable to us and contrary to our business plans Such a requirement could also compel us to issue additional securities which could dilute our current common stockholders

Changes in the structure of the GSEs and the relationship among the GSEs, the government and the private markets, or the conversion of the current conservatorship of the GSEs into receivership, could result in significant changes to the business operations of GSEs, and adversely impact certain operations of GBAM.

During the last ten years the Corporation and its subsidiaries and legacy companies have sold over $20 trillion of loans to the GSEs Each GSE is currently in a conservatorship with its primary regulator the Federal Housing Finance Agency acting as conservator We cannot predict if when or how the conservatorships will end or any associated changes to the GSEs business structure that could result We also cannot predict whether the conservatorships will end in receivership There are several proposed approaches to reform the GSEs which if enacted could change the structure of the GSEs and the relationship among the GSEs the government and the private markets including the trading markets for agency conforming mortgage loans and markets for mortgage-related securities in which GBAM participates We cannot predict the prospects for the enactment timing or content of legislative or rulemaking proposals regarding the future status of the GSEs including whether they will continue to exist in their current form GSE reform if enacted could result in a significant change to the business operations of CRES and adversely impact certain operations of GBAM

We face substantial potential legal liability and significant regulatory action, which could have material adverse effects on our cash flows, financial condition and results of operations, or cause significant reputational harm to us.

We face significant legal risks in our businesses and the volume of claims and amount of damages and penalties claimed in litigation and regulatory proceedings against us and other financial institutions remain high and are increasing Increased litigation costs substantial legal liability or significant regulatory action against us could have material adverse effects on our financial condition and results of operations or cause significant reputational harm to us which in turn could adversely impact our business prospects In addition we continue to face increased litigation risk and regulatory scrutiny We have continued to experience increased litigation and other disputes with counterparties regarding relative rights and responsibilities Consumers clients and other counterparties have grown more litigious Our experience with certain regulatory authorities suggests a migration towards an increasing supervisory focus on enforcement including in connection with alleged violations of law and customer harm The current environment of additional regulation increased regulatory compliance burdens and enhanced regulatory enforcement combined with ongoing uncertainty related to the continuing evolution of the regulatory environment has resulted in significant operational and compliance costs and may limit our ability to continue providing certain products and services

These litigation and regulatory matters and any related settlements could have a material adverse effect on our cash flows financial condition and results of operations They could also negatively impact our reputation and lead to volatility of our stock price For a further discussion of litigation risks see Note 14 - Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Changes in governmental fiscal and monetary policy could adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations.

Our businesses and earnings are affected by domestic and international fiscal and monetary policy The Federal Reserve regulates the supply of money and credit in the U S and its policies determine in large part our cost of funds for lending investing and capital raising activities and the return we earn on those loans and investments both of which affect our net interest margin The actions of the Federal Reserve also can materially affect the value of financial instruments and other assets such as debt securities and MSRs and its policies also can affect our borrowers potentially increasing the risk that they may fail to repay their loans Our businesses and earnings are also affected by the fiscal or other policies that are adopted by the U S government various U S regulatory authorities and non-U S governments and regulatory authorities Changes in domestic and international fiscal and monetary policies are beyond our control and difficult to predict but could have an adverse impact on our capital requirements and the costs of running our businesses in turn adversely impacting our financial condition and results of operations

Changes in U.S. and non-U.S. tax and other laws and regulations could adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations.

The U S Congress and the Administration have signaled growing interest in reforming the U S corporate income tax While the timing of such reform is unclear possible approaches include lowering the 35 percent corporate tax rate modifying the taxation of income earned outside of the U S and limiting or eliminating various other deductions tax credits and/or other tax preferences It is not possible at this time to quantify either the one-time impact from remeasuring deferred tax assets and liabilities that might result upon enactment of tax reform or the ongoing impact reform might have on income tax expense but either of these impacts could adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations

In addition the income from certain non-U S subsidiaries has not been subject to U S income tax as a result of long standing deferral provisions applicable to income that is derived in the active conduct of a banking and financing business (active finance income) The U S Congress has extended the application of these deferral provisions several times most recently in 2010 These provisions now are set to expire for taxable years beginning on or after January 1 2012 absent an extension of these provisions active financing income earned by certain non-U S subsidiaries will generally be subject to a tax provision that considers incremental U S income tax The impact of the expiration of these provisions would depend upon the amount composition and geographic mix of our future earnings

Other countries have also proposed and in some cases adopted certain regulatory changes targeted at financial institutions or that otherwise affect us The EU has adopted increased capital requirements and the U K has (i) increased liquidity requirements for local financial institutions including regulated U K subsidiaries of non-U K bank holding companies and other financial institutions as well as branches of non-U K banks located in the U K (ii) adopted a Bank Tax Levy which will apply to the aggregate balance sheet of branches and subsidiaries of non-U K banks and banking groups operating in the U K and (iii) proposed the creation and production of recovery and resolution plans by U K -regulated entities

On July 19 2011 the U K 2011 Finance Act was enacted which reduced the corporate income tax rate one percent to 26 percent beginning on April 1 2011 and then to 25 percent effective April 1 2012 These rate reductions will favorably affect income tax expense on future U K earnings but also required us to remeasure our U K net deferred tax assets using the lower tax rates The income tax benefit for 2011 included a $782 million charge for the remeasurement substantially all of which was recorded in GBAM If corporate income tax rates were to be reduced to 23 percent by 2014 as suggested in U K Treasury announcements and assuming no change in the deferred tax asset balance a charge to income tax expense of approximately $400 million for each one percent reduction in the rate would result in each period of enactment (for a total of approximately $800 million) We are also monitoring other international legislative proposals that could materially impact us such as changes to corporate income tax laws Currently in the U K net operating loss carryforwards (NOLs) have an indefinite life Were the U K

taxing authorities to introduce limitations on the future utilization of NOLs and were the Corporation unable to document its continued ability to fully utilize its NOLs we would be required to establish a valuation allowance by a charge to corporate income tax expense Depending upon the nature of the limitations such a charge could be material to our results of operations in the period of enactment

Risk of the Competitive Environment in which We Operate

We face significant and increasing competition in the financial services industry.

We operate in a highly competitive environment Over time there has been substantial consolidation among companies in the financial services industry and this trend accelerated in recent years This trend has also hastened the globalization of the securities and financial services markets We will continue to experience intensified competition as consolidation in and globalization of the financial services industry may result in larger better-capitalized and more geographically diverse companies that are capable of offering a wider array of financial products and services at more competitive prices To the extent we expand into new business areas and new geographic regions we may face competitors with more experience and more established relationships with clients regulators and industry participants in the relevant market which could adversely affect our ability to compete In addition technological advances and the growth of e-commerce have made it possible for non-depository institutions to offer products and services that traditionally were banking products and for financial institutions to compete with technology companies in providing electronic and internet-based financial solutions Increased competition may negatively affect our results of operations by creating pressure to lower prices on our products and services and reducing market share

Damage to our reputation could significantly harm our businesses, including our competitive position and business prospects.

Our ability to attract and retain customers clients investors and employees is impacted by our reputation Public perception of us and others in the financial services industry appeared to decline in 2011 We continue to face increased public and regulatory scrutiny resulting from the financial crisis and economic downturn as well as alleged irregularities in servicing foreclosure consumer collections mortgage loan modifications and other practices lending volumes compensation practices our acquisitions of Countrywide and Merrill Lynch and the suitability or reasonableness of recommending particular trading or investment strategies

Significant harm to our reputation can also arise from other sources including employee misconduct unethical behavior litigation or regulatory outcomes failing to deliver minimum or required standards of service and quality compliance failures unintended disclosure of confidential information and the activities of our clients customers and counterparties including vendors Actions by the financial services industry generally or by certain members or individuals in the industry also can significantly adversely affect our reputation

We are subject to complex and evolving laws and regulations regarding privacy data protections and other matters Principles concerning the appropriate scope of consumer and commercial privacy vary considerably in different jurisdictions and regulatory and public expectations regarding the definition and scope of consumer and commercial privacy may remain fluid into the future It is possible that these laws may be interpreted and applied by various jurisdictions in a manner that is inconsistent with our current or future practices or that is inconsistent with one another We face regulatory reputational and operational risks if personal confidential or proprietary information of customers or clients in our possession is mishandled or misused

We could suffer significant reputational harm if we fail to properly identify and manage potential conflicts of interest Management of potential conflicts of interests has become increasingly complex as we expand our business activities through more numerous transactions obligations and interests with and among our clients The failure to adequately address or the perceived failure to adequately address conflicts of interest could affect the willingness of clients to deal with us or give rise to litigation or enforcement actions which could adversely affect our businesses

Our actual or perceived failure to address these and other issues gives rise to reputational risk that could cause significant harm to us and our business prospects including failure to properly address operational risks Failure to appropriately address any of these issues could also give rise to additional regulatory restrictions legal risks and reputational harm which could among other consequences increase the size and number of litigation claims and damages asserted or subject us to enforcement actions fines and penalties and cause us to incur related costs and expenses

Our ability to attract and retain qualified employees is critical to the success of our businesses and failure to do so could adversely affect our business prospects, including our competitive position and results of operations.

Our performance is heavily dependent on the talents and efforts of highly skilled individuals Competition for qualified personnel within the financial services industry and from businesses outside the financial services industry has been and is expected to continue to be intense Our competitors include non-U S -based institutions and institutions otherwise not subject to compensation and hiring regulations imposed on U S institutions and financial institutions in particular The difficulty we face in competing for key personnel is exacerbated in emerging markets where we are often competing for qualified employees with entities that may have a significantly greater presence or more extensive experience in the region

In order to attract and retain qualified personnel we must provide market-level compensation As a large financial and banking institution we may be subject to limitations on compensation practices (which may or may not affect our competitors) by the Federal Reserve the FDIC or other regulators around the world Any future limitations on executive compensation imposed by legislation or regulation could adversely affect our ability to attract and maintain qualified employees Furthermore a substantial portion of our annual bonus compensation paid to our senior employees has in recent years taken the form of long-term equity awards The value of long term equity awards to senior employees generally has been negatively affected by the significant decline in the market price of our common stock If we are unable to continue to attract and retain qualified individuals our business prospects including our competitive position and results of operations could be adversely affected

In addition if we fail to retain the wealth advisors that we employ in GWIM particularly those with significant client relationships such failure could result in a significant loss of clients or the withdrawal of significant client assets Any such loss or withdrawal could adversely impact GWIM s business activities and our financial condition results of operations and cash flows

We may not be able to achieve expected cost savings from cost-saving initiatives, including from Project New BAC, or in accordance with currently anticipated time frames.

We are currently engaged in numerous efforts to achieve certain cost savings including among other things Project New BAC

Project New BAC is a two-phase enterprise-wide initiative to simplify and streamline workflows and processes align businesses and costs more closely with our overall strategic plan and operating principles and increase revenues Phase 1 focuses on the consumer businesses including Deposits Card Services and CRES and related support technology and operations functions Phase 2 focuses on Global Commercial Banking GBAM and GWIM and related support technology and operations functions not subject to evaluation in Phase 1 All aspects of Project New BAC are expected to be implemented by the end of 2014

We may be unable to fully realize the cost savings and other anticipated benefits from our cost saving initiatives or in accordance with currently anticipated timeframes

Our inability to adapt our products and services to evolving industry standards and consumer preferences could harm our businesses.

Our business model is based on a diversified mix of businesses that provide a broad range of financial products and services delivered through multiple distribution channels Our success depends in part on our ability to adapt our products and services to evolving industry standards There is increasing pressure by competitors to provide products and services at lower prices This can reduce our net interest margin and revenues from our fee-based products and services In addition the widespread adoption of new technologies including internet services could require us to incur substantial expenditures to modify or adapt our existing products and services We might not be successful in developing or introducing new products and services responding or adapting to changes in consumer spending and saving habits achieving market acceptance of our products and services or sufficiently developing and maintaining loyal customers

Risks Related to Risk Management

Our risk management framework may not be effective in mitigating risk and reducing the potential for significant losses.

Our risk management framework is designed to minimize risk and loss to us We seek to identify measure monitor report and control our exposure to the types of risk to which we are subject including strategic credit market liquidity compliance operational and reputational risks among others While we employ a broad and diversified set of risk monitoring and mitigation techniques those techniques are inherently limited because they cannot anticipate the existence or future development of currently unanticipated or unknown risks Recent economic conditions heightened legislative and regulatory scrutiny of the financial services industry and increases in the overall complexity of our operations among other developments have resulted in a heightened level of risk for us Accordingly we could suffer losses as a result of our failure to properly anticipate and manage these risks including all correlations and downstream secondary or follow-on effects that occur

For additional information about our risk management policies and procedures see Managing Risk in the MD&A on page 68

A failure in or breach of our operational or security systems or infrastructure, or those of third parties with which we do business, including as a result of cyber attacks, could disrupt our businesses, result in the disclosure or misuse of confidential or proprietary information, damage our reputation, increase our costs and cause losses. Any such failure also could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition and results of operations.

Our businesses are highly dependent on our ability to process record and monitor on a continuous basis a large number of transactions many of which are highly complex across numerous and diverse markets in many currencies The potential for operational risk exposure exists throughout our organization including losses resulting from unauthorized trades by any employee

Integral to our performance is the continued efficacy of our internal processes systems relationships with third parties and the vast array of employees and key executives in our day-to-day and ongoing operations With regard to the physical infrastructure and systems that support our operations we have taken measures to implement backup systems and other safeguards but our ability to conduct business may be adversely affected by any significant and widespread disruption to our infrastructure or systems Our financial accounting data processing backup or other operating systems and facilities may fail to operate properly or become disabled or damaged as a result of a number of factors including events that are wholly or partially beyond our control and adversely affect our ability to process these transactions or provide these services There could be sudden increases in customer transaction volume electrical or telecommunications outages natural disasters such as earthquakes tornadoes and hurricanes disease pandemics events arising from local or larger scale political or social matters including terrorist acts and cyber attacks We continuously update these systems to support our operations and growth This updating entails significant costs and creates risks associated with implementing new systems and integrating them with existing ones

Information security risks for large financial institutions such as the Corporation have significantly increased in recent years in part because of the proliferation of new technologies the use of the Internet and telecommunications technologies to conduct financial transactions and the increased sophistication and activities of organized crime hackers terrorists and other external parties including foreign state actors Our operations rely on the secure processing transmission and storage of confidential proprietary and other information in our computer systems and networks Our banking brokerage investment advisory and capital markets businesses rely on our digital technologies computer and email systems software and networks to conduct their operations In addition to access our products and services our customers may use personal smartphones tablet PCs and other mobile devices that are beyond our control systems Our technologies systems networks and our customers devices have been subject to and are likely to continue to be the target of cyber attacks computer viruses malicious code phishing attacks or information security breaches that could result in the unauthorized release gathering monitoring misuse loss or destruction of our or our customers confidential proprietary and other information or otherwise disrupt our or our customers or other third parties

business operations Because of our prominence we believe that such attacks may continue

Although to date we have not experienced any material losses relating to cyber attacks or other information security breaches there can be no assurance that we will not suffer such losses in the future Our risk and exposure to these matters remains heightened because of among other things the evolving nature of these threats the prominent size and scale of the Corporation and its role in the financial services industry our plans to continue to implement our internet banking and mobile banking channel strategies and develop additional remote connectivity solutions to serve our customers when and how they want to be served our expanded geographic footprint and international presence the outsourcing of some of our business operations the continued uncertain global economic environment and system and customer account conversions As a result cybersecurity and the continued development and enhancement of our controls processes and practices designed to protect our systems computers software data and networks from attack damage or unauthorized access remain a priority for us As cyber threats continue to evolve we may be required to expend significant additional resources to continue to modify or enhance our protective measures or to investigate and remediate any information security vulnerabilities

In addition we also face the risk of operational failure termination or capacity constraints of any of the third parties with which we do business or that facilitate our business activities including clearing agents exchanges clearing houses or other financial intermediaries we use to facilitate our securities transactions In recent years there has been significant consolidation among clearing agents exchanges and clearing houses and increased interconnectivity of multiple financial institutions with central agents exchanges and clearing houses This consolidation and interconnectivity increases the risk of operational failure on both individual and industry-wide bases as disparate complex systems need to be integrated often on an accelerated basis Any such failure termination or constraint could adversely affect our ability to effect transactions service our clients manage our exposure to risk or expand our businesses, and could have a significant adverse impact on our liquidity financial condition and results of operations

Disruptions or failures in the physical infrastructure or operating systems that support our businesses and customers or cyber attacks or security breaches of the networks systems or devices that our customers use to access our products and services could result in the loss of customers and business opportunities legal liability regulatory fines penalties or intervention reputational damage reimbursement or other compensatory costs and additional compliance costs any of which could materially adversely affect our business financial condition and results of operations

For more information on operational risks and our operational risk management, see Operational Risk Management in the MD&A on page 119

Risk of Being an International Business

We are subject to numerous political, economic, market, reputational, operational, legal, regulatory and other risks in the non-U.S. jurisdictions in which we operate which could adversely impact our businesses, financial condition and results of operations.

We do business throughout the world including in developing regions of the world commonly known as emerging markets Our businesses and revenues derived from non U S jurisdictions are subject to risk of loss from currency fluctuations social or judicial instability changes in governmental policies or policies of central banks expropriation nationalization and/or confiscation of assets price controls capital controls exchange controls other restrictive actions unfavorable political and diplomatic developments and changes in legislation These risks are especially acute in emerging markets Many non-U S jurisdictions in which we do business have been negatively impacted by recessionary conditions While a number of these jurisdictions are showing signs of recovery others continue to experience increasing levels of stress In addition the increasing potential risk of default on sovereign debt in some non-U S jurisdictions could expose us to substantial losses Risks in one country can affect our operations in another country or countries including our operations in the U S As a result any such unfavorable conditions or developments could have an adverse impact on our businesses financial condition and results of operations

Our non-U S businesses are also subject to extensive regulation by various non-U S regulators including governments securities exchanges central banks and other regulatory bodies in the jurisdictions in which those businesses operate In many countries the laws and regulations applicable to the financial services and securities industries are uncertain and evolving, and it may be difficult for us to determine the exact requirements of local laws in every market or manage our relationships with multiple regulators in various jurisdictions Our inability to remain in compliance with local laws in a particular market and manage our relationships with regulators could have a significant and adverse effect not only on our businesses in that market but also on our reputation generally

We also invest or trade in the securities of corporations and governments located in non-U S jurisdictions including emerging markets Revenues from the trading of non-U S securities may be subject to negative fluctuations as a result of the above factors Furthermore the impact of these fluctuations could be magnified because non-U S trading markets particularly in emerging market countries are generally smaller less liquid and more volatile than U S trading markets

We are subject to geopolitical risks including acts or threats of terrorism and actions taken by the U S or other governments in response thereto and/or military conflicts that could adversely affect business and economic conditions abroad as well as in the U S

For more information on our non U S credit and trading portfolio see Non-U S Portfolio in the MD&A on page 104

Risk from Accounting Changes

Changes in accounting standards or inaccurate estimates or assumptions in the application of accounting policies could adversely affect our financial condition and results of operations.

Our accounting policies and methods are fundamental to how we record and report our financial condition and results of operations Some of these policies require use of estimates and assumptions that may affect the reported value of our assets or liabilities and results of operations and are critical because they require management to make difficult, subjective and complex judgments about matters that are inherently uncertain If those assumptions estimates or judgments were incorrectly made we could be required to correct and restate prior period financial statements

Accounting standard-setters and those who interpret the accounting standards (such as the Financial Accounting Standards Board the SEC banking regulators and our independent registered public accounting firm) may also amend or even reverse their previous interpretations or positions on how various standards should be applied These changes can be difficult to predict and can materially impact how we record and report our financial condition and results of operations In some cases we could be required to apply a new or revised standard retroactively resulting in the Corporation needing to revise and republish prior period financial statements

For more information on some of our critical accounting policies and standards and recent accounting changes see Complex Accounting Estimates in the MD&A on page 120 and Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations

This report on Form 10-K, the documents that it incorporates by reference and the documents into which it may be incorporated by reference may contain and from time to time Bank of America Corporation (collectively with its subsidiaries, the Corporation) and its management may make certain statements that constitute forward-looking statements within the meaning of the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995. These statements can be identified by the fact that they do not relate strictly to historical or current facts. Forward-looking statements often use words such as "expects," "anticipates," "believes," "estimates," "targets," "intends," "plans," "goal" and other similar expressions or future or conditional verbs such as "will," "may," "might," "should," "would" and "could." The forward-looking statements made represent the current expectations, plans or forecasts of the Corporation regarding the Corporation's future results and revenues, and future business and economic conditions more generally, including statements concerning: the potential impacts of the European Union sovereign debt crisis; the impact of the U.K. 2011 Finance Bill and review by the U.K. Financial Services Authority; the change to income for each one percent reduction in the U.K. corporate income tax rate; the agreements in principle with the state attorneys general and U.S. Department of Justice are expected to result in programs that would extend additional relief to homeowners and make refinancing options available to more homeowners; the programs expected to be developed pursuant to the agreements in principle, including expanded mortgage modification solutions such as broader use of principal reduction, short sales and other additional assistance programs, expanded refinancing opportunities; the amount of our commitments under the agreements in principle, as well as expectations that further details about eligibility and implementation will be provided; that the financial impact of the settlements is not expected to cause any additional reserves over existing accruals as of December 31, 2011 based on our understanding of the terms of the agreements in principle, as well as the expected impact of refinancing assistance and operating costs; that certain amounts may be reduced by credits earned for principal reductions; that our payment obligations under agreements in principle with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Federal Reserve) and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency would be deemed satisfied by payments and provisions of relief under the agreements in principle; the expectation that government entities will provide releases from further liability and the exclusions from the releases; expectations regarding reaching final agreements, obtaining necessary regulatory and court approvals and finalization of the settlements; the planned schedule and details for implementation and completion of, and the expected impact from, Phase 1 and Phase 2 of Project New BAC, including expected personnel reductions and estimated cost savings; the impact of and costs associated with each of the agreements with the Bank of New York Mellon (as trustee for certain legacy Countrywide Financial Corporation (Countrywide) private-label securitization trusts) and each of the government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae (FNMA) and Freddie Mac (collectively, the GSEs) to resolve bulk representations and warranties claims; our expectation that the $1.7 billion in claims from private-label securitization investors in the covered trusts under the private-label securitization settlement with the Bank of New York Mellon (the BNY Mellon Settlement) would be extinguished upon final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement; the belief that the provisions recorded in connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement and the additional non-GSE representations and warranties provisions recorded in 2011 have provided for a substantial portion of the Corporation's non-GSE repurchase claims; the estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31, 2011 of up to $5 billion over existing accruals and the effect of adverse developments with respect to one or more of the assumptions underlying the liability for non-GSE representations and warranties and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss; the continually evolving behavior of the GSEs and the Corporation's intention to monitor and repurchase loans to the extent required under the contracts and standards that govern our relationships with the GSEs and update its processes related to these changing GSE behaviors; our expressed intention not to pay compensatory fees under the new GSE servicing guides; the adequacy of the liability for the remaining representations and warranties exposure to the GSEs and the future impact to earnings, including the impact on such estimated liability arising from the announcement by FNMA regarding mortgage rescissions, cancellations and claim denials; our beliefs regarding our ability to resolve rescissions before the expiration of the appeal period allowed by FNMA; our expectation that mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs and costs related to resources necessary to perform the foreclosure process assessments will remain elevated as additional loans are delayed in the foreclosure process; the expected repurchase claims on the 2004-2008 loan vintages, including the belief regarding reduced exposure related to loans originated after 2008; the Corporation's intention to vigorously contest any requests for repurchase for which it concludes that a valid basis does not exist; future impact of complying with the terms of the consent orders with federal bank regulators regarding the foreclosure process; the impact of delays in connection with the Corporation's temporary halt of foreclosure proceedings in late 2010; continued cooperation with investigations; the potential materiality of liability with respect to potential servicing-related claims; our estimates regarding the percentages of loans expected to prepay, default or reset in 2012 and thereafter; the net recovery projections for credit default swaps with monoline financial guarantors; the impact on economic conditions and on the Corporation arising from any further changes to the credit rating or perceived creditworthiness of instruments issued, insured or guaranteed by the U.S. government, or of institutions, agencies or instrumentalities directly linked to the U.S. government; the realizability of deferred tax assets prior to expiration of any carryforward periods; credit trends and conditions, including credit losses; credit reserves; the allowance for credit losses; the allowance for loan and lease losses; charge-offs; delinquency, collection and bankruptcy trends; and nonperforming asset levels, including continued expected reductions in the allowance for loan and lease losses in 2012; the role of non-core asset sales in our capital strategy; investment banking fees; sales and trading revenue; consumer and commercial service charges, including the impact of changes in the Corporation's overdraft policy and the Corporation's ability to mitigate a decline in revenues; the effects of new accounting pronouncements; capital levels determined by or established in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America and with the requirements

2011 Economic and Business Environment

The banking environment and markets in which we conduct our businesses will continue to be strongly influenced by developments in the U S and global economies including the results of the European Union (EU) sovereign debt crisis continued large budget imbalances in key developed nations and the implementation and rulemaking associated with recent financial reform The global economy expanded at a diminished pace in 2011 with the U S U K Europe and Japan all losing momentum while economic growth in emerging nations diminished somewhat but remained robust

United States

The U S economy expanded only modestly in 2011 as a promising beginning with an improving labor market gave way to an appreciable slowdown in domestic demand early in the year By mid-year the labor market had slowed once more followed by a sharp reversal in the stock market and in consumer sentiment Increasing oil prices and supply chain disruptions stemming from Japan s earthquake along with continued financial market anxiety due to the European sovereign debt crisis and difficult and protracted U S budget negotiations related to the federal debt ceiling, contributed to the weakness As some of these factors dissipated domestic demand picked up in the second half of 2011 easing U S recession fears In the fourth quarter equities rebounded from their mid-year declines consumer confidence edged up and labor markets showed clear signs of improvement The unemployment rate ended the year at 8 5 percent compared to 9 4 percent at December 31 2010

Despite subdued U S economic growth year-over-year inflation drifted higher over the first three quarters of 2011 lifted in part by the surge in energy costs before edging lower in the fourth quarter Fears of deflation prevalent in 2010 faded as year-over-year core inflation which began 2011 below one percent moved to above two percent by year end Nevertheless bond yields which drifted gradually lower in the first half of 2011 fell during a volatile third quarter amid anxiety over the European sovereign debt crisis exacerbated by the U S debt ceiling debate and fears of recession Despite the Standard & Poor s Rating Services (S&P) ratings downgrade of U S sovereign debt mounting concerns about Europe s financial crisis generated strong demand for U S government securities The Federal Reserve completed its second round of quantitative easing near mid-year Responding to sharp declines in equity markets low consumer expectations and heightened worries about recession the Federal Reserve adopted another financial support program in September 2011 aimed at lowering bond yields The program involved sales of $400 billion of shorter-term (less than three years) government securities and purchases of an equal volume of longer term (six years and over) government bonds Bonds yields held near all-time post-Great Depression lows at year end

Housing activity remained at historically low levels in 2011 and the supply of unsold homes remained high Meanwhile corporate profits continued to grow at a robust pace in 2011 despite slowing from their initial sharp rebound After bottoming in late 2010 commercial and industrial lending also accelerated in 2011

Europe

Europe s financial crisis escalated in 2011 despite a series of initiatives by policymakers and several European nations were experiencing recessionary conditions in the fourth quarter Europe s problems involve unsustainably high public debt in some nations including Greece and Portugal slow growth and significant refinancing risk related to maturing sovereign debt in Italy and excess household debt and sharp declines in wealth stemming from falling home values following unsustainable housing bubbles in other nations including Spain and Ireland These national challenges are closely intertwined with the problems facing Europe s banks which are some of the largest holders of the bonds of troubled European nations During 2011 financial markets became increasingly skeptical that government policies would resolve these problems and risk-averse investors reduced their exposures to bonds of troubled nations driving up their bond yields and to varying degrees restricting access to capital markets This exacerbated already onerous debt service burdens In response European policymakers provided financial support to troubled nations through the European Financial Stability Facility (EFSF) and purchases of sovereign debt by the European Central Bank (ECB) Despite these efforts sharp increases in the bond yields of Spanish and Italian bonds further complicated Europe s financial problems beyond the current capabilities of the EFSF As the magnitude of the financial stresses rose reflected in higher sovereign bond yields and mounting funding shortfalls at select banks the ECB instituted new programs to provide low-cost three-year loans to European banks and expanded collateral eligibility This served to alleviate bank funding pressures toward year end and provided greater liquidity in sovereign debt markets

Asia

Japan s economic environment in 2011 was marked by the trauma of its massive earthquake in early 2011 that caused a dramatic decline in economic activity followed by a quick rebound A sharp decline in consumption and domestic demand was accompanied by temporary production shutdowns of various intermediate and durable goods that disrupted supply chains throughout Asia and the world The ripple effects were pronounced although temporary throughout Asia China continued to grow rapidly throughout 2011 with real GDP growth exceeding nine percent despite elevated inflation and government efforts to constrain price pressures through the tightening of monetary policy and bank credit and regulations that limit speculation and price increases in real estate China s economic growth slowed modestly in the second half of the year reflecting in part slower growth of exports to Europe and other destinations China s inflation also began to subside toward year end Other Asian nations continued to experience strong growth rates

Recent Events

Mortgage Related Matters

Department of Justice/Attorney General Matters

On February 9 2012 we reached agreements in principle (collectively the Servicing Resolution Agreements) with (1) the U S Department of Justice (DOJ) various federal regulatory agencies and 49 state attorneys general to resolve federal and state investigations into certain origination servicing and foreclosure practices (the Global AIP) (2) the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) to resolve certain claims relating to the origination of FHA-insured mortgage loans primarily by Countrywide prior to and for a period following our acquisition of that lender (the FHA AIP) and (3) each of the Federal Reserve and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) regarding civil monetary penalties related to conduct that was the subject of consent orders entered into with the banking regulators in April 2011 (the Consent Order AIPs)

The Servicing Resolution Agreements are subject to ongoing discussions among the parties and completion and execution of definitive documentation as well as required regulatory and court approvals The FHA AIP provides for an upfront cash payment and an additional cash payment if we fail to meet certain principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period Under the terms of the Servicing Resolution Agreements the federal and participating state governments would provide us with releases from liability for certain alleged residential mortgage origination servicing and foreclosure deficiencies

The financial impact of the Servicing Resolution Agreements is not expected to require any additional reserves over existing accruals as of December 31 2011 based on our understanding of the terms of the Servicing Resolution Agreements The refinancing assistance commitment under the Servicing Resolution Agreements is expected to be recognized as lower interest income in future periods as qualified borrowers pay reduced interest rates on loans refinanced The Servicing Resolution Agreements do not cover claims arising out of securitization including representations made to investors respecting mortgage-backed securities (MBS) and certain other claims For additional information see Item 1A Risk Factors and Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Other Mortgage-related Matters on page 63

Private-label Securitization Settlement with the Bank of New York Mellon

On June 28 2011 the Corporation BAC Home Loans Servicing LP (BAC HLS which was subsequently merged with and into Bank of America N A (BANA) in July 2011) and its legacy Countrywide affiliates entered into a settlement agreement with BNY Mellon as trustee (Trustee) to resolve all outstanding and potential claims related to alleged representations and warranties breaches (including repurchase claims) substantially all historical loan servicing claims and certain other historical claims with respect to 525 legacy Countrywide first-lien and five second-lien non government-sponsored enterprise (GSE) residential mortgage-backed securitization trusts (the Covered Trusts) containing loans principally originated between 2004 and 2008 for which BNY Mellon acts as trustee or indenture trustee (the BNY Mellon Settlement) The BNY Mellon Settlement agreement is subject to final court approval and certain other conditions

An investor opposed to the settlement removed the proceeding to the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York On October 19 2011 the district court denied BNY Mellon s motion to remand the proceeding to state court BNY Mellon and the Investor Group petitioned to appeal the denial of this motion and on December 27 2011 the U S Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit accepted the appeal and stated in an amended scheduling order that pursuant to statute it would decide the appeal by February 27 2012 On November 4 2011 the district court entered a written order setting a discovery schedule and discovery is ongoing

It is not currently possible to predict how many of the parties who have appeared in the court proceeding will ultimately object to the BNY Mellon Settlement whether the objections will prevent receipt of final court approval or the ultimate outcome of the court approval process which can include appeals and could take a substantial period of time In particular the conduct of discovery and the resolution of the objections to the settlement and any appeals could also take a substantial period of time and these factors along with the removal of the proceedings to federal court and the associated appeal could materially delay the timing of final court approval Accordingly it is not possible to predict when the court approval process will be completed

For additional information about the BNY Mellon Settlement see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Representations and Warranties on page 56 Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Other Mortgage-related Matters on page 63 and Note 9 - Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements For more information about the risks associated with the BNY Mellon Settlement see Item 1A Risk Factors

Capital Related Matters

We continued to sell certain business units and assets as part of our capital management and enterprise-wide initiatives In November 2011 we sold an aggregate of approximately 10 4 billion common shares of China Construction Bank Corporation (CCB) through private transactions with investors resulting in an aggregate pre-tax gain of $2 9 billion We currently hold approximately one percent of the outstanding common shares of CCB The sale also generated approximately $2 9 billion of Tier 1 common capital and reduced our risk weighted assets by $4 9 billion under Basel I strengthening our Tier 1 common capital ratio by approximately 24 basis points (bps)

In December 2011 we sold our Canadian consumer card portfolio strengthening our Tier 1 common capital ratio by approximately seven bps

In November and December 2011 we entered into separate agreements with certain institutional preferred and trust preferred security holders to exchange shares or depositary shares representing fractional interests in shares of various series of our outstanding preferred stock or trust preferred or hybrid income term securities of various unconsolidated trusts as applicable with an aggregate liquidation preference of $5 8 billion for 400 million shares of our common stock and $2 3 billion aggregate principal amount of our senior notes In connection with the exchanges of trust preferred securities we recorded gains of $1 2 billion The exchanges in aggregate resulted in an increase of $3 9 billion in Tier 1 common capital and increased our Tier 1 common capital ratio approximately 29 bps under Basel I For additional information regarding these exchanges see Note 13 - Long-term Debt and Note 15 - Shareholders Equity to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Overall during 2011 we generated 126 bps of Tier 1 common capital and reduced risk weighted assets by $172 billion including as a result of among other things the exchanges of preferred stock and trust preferred or hybrid securities our sales of CCB shares and the $5 0 billion investment in preferred stock and common stock warrant by Berkshire Hathaway Inc (Berkshire) For additional information on the Berkshire investment see Note 15 - Shareholders Equity to the Consolidated Financial Statements

As credit spreads for many financial institutions including the Corporation have widened during the past year due to global uncertainty and volatility the market value of debt previously issued by financial institutions has decreased This uncertainty in the market evidenced by among other things volatility in credit spreads makes it economically advantageous to consider purchasing and retiring certain of our outstanding debt instruments In 2012 we completed a tender offer to purchase and retire certain subordinated notes for approximately $3 4 billion in cash and will consider additional purchases in the future depending upon prevailing market conditions liquidity and other factors If the purchase of any debt instruments is at an amount less than the carrying value such purchases would be accretive to earnings and capital

We intend to continue to build capital through retaining earnings actively reducing legacy asset portfolios and implementing other capital related initiatives including focusing on reducing both higher risk weighted assets and assets currently deducted or expected to be deducted under Basel III from capital We expect non-core asset sales to play a less prominent role in our capital strategy in future periods We issued approximately 122 million of immediately tradable shares of common stock or approximately $1 0 billion (after tax) to certain employees in February 2012 in lieu of a portion of their 2011 year-end cash incentive We may engage from time to time in privately negotiated transactions involving the issuance of common stock cash or other consideration in exchange for preferred stock and certain trust preferred securities in amounts that are not expected to be material to us either individually or in the aggregate

On December 15 2011 Fitch Ratings (Fitch) downgraded the Corporation s and BANA s long term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Fitch s decision to lower its "support floor" for systemically important U S financial institutions On November 29 2011 S&P downgraded our long-term and short-term debt ratings as well as BANA s long-term debt rating as a result of S&P s implementation of revised methodologies for determining Banking Industry Country Risk Assessments and bank ratings On September 21 2011 Moody s Investors Service Inc (Moody s) downgraded our long-term and short-term debt ratings as well as BANA s long-term debt rating as a result of Moody s lowering the amount of uplift for potential U S government support it incorporates into ratings On February 15 2012 Moody s placed the Corporation s long-term debt ratings and BANA s long-term and short-term debt ratings on review for possible downgrade as part of its review of financial institutions with global capital markets operations Any adjustment to our ratings will be determined based on Moody s review however the agency offered guidance that downgrades to our ratings if any would likely be limited to one notch

Currently our long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks expressed by the rating agencies are as follows Baa1/P-2 (negative) by Moody s A-/A-2 (negative) by S&P and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch The rating agencies could make further adjustments to our ratings at any time and there can be no assurance that additional downgrades will not occur

Under the terms of certain over-the-counter (OTC) derivative contracts and other trading agreements in the event of a downgrade of our credit ratings or certain subsidiaries credit ratings counterparties to those agreements may require us or certain subsidiaries to provide additional collateral or to terminate those contracts or agreements or provide other remedies

For information regarding the risks associated with adverse changes in our credit ratings see Liquidity Risk – Credit Ratings on page 79 Note 4 – Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements and Item 1A Risk Factors

Certain European countries including Greece Ireland Italy Portugal and Spain continue to experience varying degrees of financial stress Uncertainty in the progress of debt restructuring negotiations and the lack of a clear resolution to the crisis has led to continued volatility in European as well as global financial markets and if the situation worsens may further adversely affect these markets In December 2011 the European Central Bank announced initiatives to address European bank liquidity and funding concerns by providing low-cost, three-year loans to banks and expanding collateral eligibility While reducing systemic risk, there remains considerable uncertainty as to future developments regarding the European debt crisis In early 2012, S&P Fitch and Moody s downgraded the credit ratings of several European countries and S&P downgraded the credit rating of the EFSF adding to concerns about investor appetite for continued support in stabilizing the affected countries Our total sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to Greece Italy Ireland Portugal and Spain was $15 3 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $16 6 billion at December 31 2010 Our total net sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to these countries was $10 5 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $12 4 billion at December 31 2010 after taking into account net credit default protection At December 31 2011 and 2010 the fair value of net credit default protection purchased was $4 9 billion and $4 2 billion Losses could still result because our credit protection contracts only pay out under certain scenarios For a further discussion of our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures in Europe see Non-U S Portfolio on page 104 and for more information about the risks associated with our non-sovereign exposures in Europe see Item 1A Risk Factors

Project New BAC

Project New BAC is a two-phase enterprise-wide initiative to simplify and streamline workflows and processes align businesses and expenses more closely with our overall strategic plan and operating principles and increase revenues Phase 1 evaluations which were completed in September 2011 focused on the consumer businesses including Deposits Card Services and CRES and related support, technology and operations functions Phase 2 evaluations began in October 2011 and are focused on Global Commercial Banking GBAM and GWIM and related support technology and operations functions not subject to evaluation in Phase 1 Phase 2 evaluations are expected to continue through April 2012

Implementation of Phase 1 recommendations began in 2011 Phase 1 has a stated goal of a reduction of approximately 30 000 positions with natural attrition and the elimination of unfilled positions expected to represent a significant part of the reduction A stated goal of the full implementation of Phase 1 is to reduce certain costs by $5 billion per year by 2014 and we anticipate that more than 20 percent of these cost savings could be achieved by the end of 2012 As implementation of the Phase 1 recommendations continues and Phase 2 begins reductions in staffing levels in the affected areas are expected to result in some incremental costs including severance

Reductions in the areas subject to evaluation for Phase 2 have not yet been fully identified and accordingly potential cost savings cannot be estimated at this time however they are expected to be lower than Phase 1 because the businesses have lower headcount All aspects of New BAC are expected to be implemented by the end of 2014 There were no material expenses related to New BAC recorded in 2011 For information about the risks associated with Project New BAC see Item 1A Risk Factors

Performance Overview

Net income was $1 4 billion in 2011 compared to a net loss of $2 2 billion in 2010 After preferred stock dividends of $1 4 billion in both 2011 and 2010 net income applicable to common shareholders was $85 million or $0 01 per diluted common share in 2011 compared to a net loss of $3 6 billion or $0 37 per diluted common share in 2010 The principal contributors to the pre-tax net income in 2011 were the following gains of $6 5 billion on the sale of CCB shares (we currently hold approximately one percent of the outstanding common shares) a $7 4 billion reduction in the allowance for credit losses $3 4 billion of gains on sales of debt securities positive fair value adjustments of $3 3 billion related to our own credit spreads on structured liabilities a $1 2 billion gain on the exchange of certain trust preferred securities for common stock and debt and DVA gains on derivatives of $1 0 billion net of hedges These contributors were offset by $15 6 billion in representations and warranties provision litigation expense of $5 6 billion goodwill impairment charges of $3 2 billion $1 8 billion of mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs and $1 1 billion of impairment charges on our merchant services joint venture

Table 2 Summary Income Statement

Diluted earnings (loss)	0.01	(0.37)

(1) Fully taxable-equivalent (FTE) basis is a non-GAAP financial measure Other companies may define or calculate this measure differently For more information on this measure see Supplemental Financial Data on page 33 and for a corresponding reconciliation to a GAAP financial measure see Table IV

Net interest income on a FTE basis decreased $7 1 billion in 2011 to $45 6 billion The decline was primarily due to lower consumer loan balances and yields and decreased investment security yields Lower trading-related net interest income also negatively impacted 2011 results These decreases were partially offset by ongoing reductions in our debt footprint and lower rates paid on deposits The net interest yield on a FTE basis was 2 48 percent for 2011 compared to 2 78 percent for 2010

Noninterest income decreased $9 9 billion in 2011 to $48 5 billion The most significant contributors to the decline were lower mortgage banking income down $11 6 billion largely due to higher representations and warranties provision and a decrease of $3 4 billion in trading account profits These declines were partially offset by the gains on the sale of CCB shares and higher positive fair value adjustments related to our own credit on structured liabilities in 2011 In addition in connection with separate agreements with certain trust preferred security holders to exchange their holdings for common stock and senior notes we recorded gains of $1 2 billion in 2011 For additional information on these exchange agreements see Note 13 – Long-term Debt to the Consolidated Financial Statements

The provision for credit losses decreased $15 0 billion in 2011 to $13 4 billion The provision for credit losses was $7 4 billion lower than net charge-offs for 2011 resulting in a reduction in the allowance for credit losses as portfolio trends continued to improve across most of the consumer and commercial businesses particularly the Card Services and commercial real estate portfolios partially offset by additions to consumer purchased credit-impaired (PCI) loan portfolio reserves This compared to a $5 9 billion reduction in the allowance for credit losses in 2010

Noninterest expense decreased $2 8 billion in 2011 to $80 3 billion The decline was driven by a $9 2 billion decrease in goodwill impairment charges and a $1 2 billion decline in merger and restructuring charges in 2011 Partially offsetting these decreases was a $4 9 billion increase in other general operating expense which included increases of $3 0 billion in litigation expense and $1 5 billion in mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs and an increase of $1 8 billion in personnel costs due to the continued build-out of certain businesses technology costs as well as increases in default-related servicing costs

The income tax benefit on a FTE basis was $704 million on the pre-tax income of $742 million for 2011 compared to income tax expense on a FTE basis of $2 1 billion on the pre-tax loss of $153 million for 2010 For more information, see Financial Highlights – Income Tax Expense on page 34

Total Consolidated	$ 93,467	$ 110,220	$ 1,448	$ (2,238)

(1) Total revenue is net of interest expense and is on a FTE basis, which is a non-GAAP financial measure. For more information on this measure, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 36, and for a corresponding reconciliation to a GAAP financial measure, see Table XV.

Deposits net income decreased compared to the prior year due to a decline in revenue partially offset by lower noninterest expense. The decline in revenue was primarily driven by a decline in service charges reflecting the impact of overdraft policy changes in conjunction with Regulation E that were fully implemented during the third quarter of 2010, partially offset by an increase in net interest income as a result of a customer shift to more liquid products and continued pricing discipline. Noninterest expense decreased due to lower litigation and operating expenses partially offset by an increase in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) expense.

Card Services net income increased compared to the prior year due primarily to a $10.4 billion non-cash, non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge in 2010 and a decrease in the provision for credit losses. The decrease in revenue was driven by lower average loan balances and yields. Noninterest income decreased primarily due to the implementation of the Durbin Amendment, the absence of the gain on the sale of our MasterCard position in 2010 and the implementation of the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 (CARD Act).

CRES net loss increased compared to the prior year primarily due to a decline in revenue and an increase in noninterest expense. Revenue declined due to an increase in representations and warranties provision, lower core production income and a decrease in insurance income due to the sale of Balboa Insurance Company's lender-placed insurance business (Balboa). Noninterest expense increased due to higher litigation expense, increased mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs, higher default-related and other loss mitigation expenses and a higher non-cash, non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge, partially offset by lower insurance and production expenses.

Global Commercial Banking net income increased compared to the prior year primarily due to an improvement in the provision for credit losses. Revenue decreased primarily driven by lower net interest income related to asset and liability management (ALM) activities and lower average loan balances, partially offset by an increase in average deposits. The decrease in the provision for credit losses was driven by improved economic conditions and an accelerated rate of loan resolutions in the commercial real estate portfolio.

GBAM net income decreased compared to the prior year driven by a decline in sales and trading revenue due to a challenging market environment, partially offset by DVA gains, net of hedges. Provision for credit losses decreased driven by the positive impact of the economic environment on the credit portfolio in 2011. Higher noninterest expense was driven primarily by increased costs related to investments in infrastructure. Income tax expense included a charge related to the U.K. corporate income tax rate changes enacted during the year to reduce the carrying value of the deferred tax assets.

GWIM net income increased compared to the prior year driven by higher net interest income, higher asset management fees and lower credit costs, partially offset by higher noninterest expense. Revenue increased driven by higher asset management fees from higher market levels and long-term assets under management (AUM) flows as well as higher net interest income. The provision for credit losses decreased driven by improving portfolio trends. Noninterest expense increased due to higher volume-driven expenses and personnel costs associated with the continued investment in the business.

All Other net income increased compared to the prior year primarily due to higher noninterest income and lower merger and restructuring charges. Noninterest income increased due to an increase in the positive fair value adjustments related to our own credit spreads on structured liabilities as well as the gain on the sale of CCB shares in 2011. The provision for credit losses decreased primarily due to divestitures, improvements in delinquencies, collections and insolvencies in the non-U.S. credit card portfolio and continued run-off in the legacy Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. (Merrill Lynch) commercial portfolio.

Financial Highlights

Net Interest Income

Net interest income on a FTE basis decreased $7.1 billion to $45.6 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The decline was primarily due to lower consumer loan balances and yields and decreased investment security yields, including the acceleration of purchase premium amortization from an increase in modeled prepayment expectations, and increased hedge ineffectiveness. Lower trading-related net interest income also negatively impacted 2011 results.

These decreases were partially offset by ongoing reductions in our debt footprint and lower interest rates paid on deposits. The net interest yield on a FTE basis decreased 30 bps to 2.48 percent for 2011 compared to 2010 as the yield continues to be under pressure due to the aforementioned items and the low rate environment. We expect net interest income to continue to be muted based on the current forward yield curve in 2012.

Card income	$ 7,184	$ 8,108
Service charges	8,864	9,990
Investment and brokerage services	11,626	11,622
Investment banking income	5,317	5,520
Equity investment income	7,999	5,260

Other income	6,269	2,384
Net impairment losses recognized in earnings on available-for-sale debt securities	(399)	(967)
Total noninterest income	$ 48,636	$ 59,697

Noninterest income decreased $9.9 billion to $48.6 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The following highlights the significant changes:

- Card income decreased $924 million primarily due to the implementation of new interchange fee rules under the Durbin Amendment, which became effective on October 1, 2011 and the CARD Act provisions that were implemented during 2010.
- Service charges decreased $1.3 billion largely due to the impact of overdraft policy changes in conjunction with Regulation E, which became effective in the third quarter of 2010.
- Equity investment income increased $2.1 billion. The results for 2011 included $6.5 billion of gains on the sale of CCB shares, $636 million of CCB dividends and a $377 million gain on the sale of our investment in BlackRock, Inc. (BlackRock), partially offset by $1.1 billion of impairment charges on our merchant services joint venture. The prior year included $2.5 billion of net gains which included the sales of certain strategic investments, $2.3 billion of gains in our Global Principal Investments (GPI) portfolio which included both cash gains and fair value adjustments, and $535 million of CCB dividends.
- Trading account profits decreased $3.4 billion primarily due to adverse market conditions and extreme volatility in the credit markets compared to the prior year. DVA gains, net of hedges, on derivatives were $1.0 billion in 2011 compared to $262 million in 2010 as a result of a widening of our credit spreads. In conjunction with regulatory reform measures, GBAM exited its stand alone proprietary trading business as of June 30, 2011. Proprietary trading revenue was $434 million for the six months ended June 30, 2011 compared to $1.4 billion for 2010.
- Mortgage banking income decreased $11.0 billion primarily due to an $8.8 billion increase in the representations and warranties provision which was largely related to the BNY Mellon Settlement. Also contributing to the decline was lower production income due to a reduction in new loan origination volumes, partially offset by an increase in servicing income.
- Other income increased $4.5 billion primarily due to positive fair value adjustments of $3.3 billion related to widening of our own credit spreads on structured liabilities compared to $18 million in 2010. In addition, 2011 included a $771 million gain on the sale of Balboa as well as a $1.2 billion gain on the exchange of certain trust preferred securities for common stock and debt.

Provision for Credit Losses

The provision for credit losses decreased $15.0 billion to $13.4 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The provision for credit losses was $7.4 billion lower than net charge-offs for 2011, resulting in a reduction in the allowance for credit losses driven primarily by lower delinquencies, improved collection rates and fewer bankruptcy filings across the Card Services portfolio and improvement in overall credit quality in the commercial real estate portfolio, partially offset by additions to consumer PCI loan portfolio reserves. This compared to a $5.9 billion reduction in the allowance for credit losses in 2010. We expect reductions in the allowance for credit losses to be lower in 2012.

The provision for credit losses related to our consumer portfolio decreased $11.1 billion to $14.3 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The provision for credit losses related to our commercial portfolio including the provision for unfunded lending commitments decreased $3.9 billion to a benefit of $915 million for 2011 compared to 2010.

Net charge-offs totaled $20.8 billion, or 2.24 percent of average loans and leases for 2011 compared to $34.3 billion, or 3.60 percent for 2010. The decrease in net charge-offs was primarily driven by improvements in general economic conditions that resulted in lower delinquencies, improved collection rates and fewer bankruptcy filings across the Card Services portfolio as well as lower losses in the home equity portfolio driven primarily by fewer delinquent loans. For more information on the provision for credit losses, see Provision for Credit Losses on page 108.

Noninterest Expense

Table 5 Noninterest Expense

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010
Personnel	$ 38,886	$ 35,149
Occupancy	4,748	4,718

Data processing	2,662	2,544
Telecommunications	1,903	1,418
Other general operating	21,101	18,222
Goodwill impairment	3,184	12,400
Merger and restructuring charges	686	1,820
Total noninterest expense	$ 80,176	$ 83,108

Noninterest expense decreased $2.8 billion to $80.3 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The prior year included goodwill impairment charges of $12.4 billion compared to $3.2 billion for 2011.

Personnel expense increased $1.8 billion for 2011 attributable to personnel costs related to the continued build-out of certain businesses, technology costs as well as increases in default-

related servicing Additionally professional fees increased $686 million related to consulting fees for regulatory initiatives as well as higher legal expenses Other general operating expenses increased $4 9 billion largely as a result of a $3 0 billion increase in litigation expense primarily mortgage-related and an increase of $1 6 billion in mortgage related assessments and waivers costs Merger and restructuring expenses decreased $1 2 billion in 2011

Income Tax Expense

The income tax benefit was $1 7 billion on the pre-tax loss of $230 million for 2011 compared to income tax expense of $915 million on the pre-tax loss of $1 3 billion for 2010 These amounts are before FTE adjustments The effective tax rate for 2011 was not meaningful due to a small pre tax loss and for 2010 due to the impact of non-deductible goodwill impairment charges of $12 4 billion

The income tax benefit for 2011 was driven by recurring tax preference items such as tax-exempt income and affordable housing credits a $1 0 billion benefit from the release of the remaining valuation allowance applicable to the Merrill Lynch capital loss carryover deferred tax asset and a benefit of $823 million for planned realization of previously unrecognized deferred tax assets related to the tax basis in certain subsidiaries These benefits were partially offset by the $782 million tax charge for the U K corporate income tax rate reductions referred to below The $3 2 billion of goodwill impairment charges recorded in 2011 were non-deductible

The effective tax rate for 2010 excluding goodwill impairment charges from pre tax income was 8 3 percent In addition to our recurring tax preference items this rate was driven by a $1 7 billion benefit from the release of a portion of the valuation allowance applicable to the Merrill Lynch capital loss carryover deferred tax asset partially offset by the $392 million charge from a one percent reduction to the U K corporate income tax rate enacted during 2010

On July 19 2011 the U K 2011 Finance Bill was enacted which reduced the corporate income tax rate one percent to 26 percent beginning on April 1 2011 and then to 25 percent effective April 1 2012 These rate reductions will favorably affect income tax expense on future U K earnings but also required us to remeasure our U K net deferred tax assets using the lower tax rates As noted above the income tax benefit for 2011 included a $782 million charge for the remeasurement substantially all of which was recorded in GBAM If corporate income tax rates were to be reduced to 23 percent by 2014 as suggested in U K Treasury announcements and assuming no change in the deferred tax asset balance a charge to income tax expense of approximately $400 million for each one percent reduction in the rate would result in each period of enactment (for a total of approximately $800 million)

Period-end balance sheet amounts may vary from average balance sheet amounts due to liquidity and balance sheet management activities primarily involving our portfolios of highly liquid assets that are designed to ensure the adequacy of capital while enhancing our ability to manage liquidity requirements for the Corporation and for our customers and to position the balance sheet in accordance with the Corporation s risk appetite The execution of these activities requires the use of balance sheet and capital related limits including spot average and risk-weighted asset limits particularly in our trading businesses One of our key metrics Tier 1 leverage ratio is calculated based on adjusted quarterly average total assets

Assets

Federal Funds Sold and Securities Borrowed or Purchased Under Agreements to Resell

Federal funds transactions involve lending reserve balances on a short term basis Securities borrowed and securities purchased under agreements to resell are utilized to accommodate customer transactions earn interest rate spreads and obtain securities for settlement Average federal funds sold and securities borrowed or purchased under agreements to resell decreased $11 9 billion or five percent in 2011 attributable to an overall decline in balance sheet usage

Trading Account Assets

Trading account assets consist primarily of fixed income securities including government and corporate debt and equity and convertible instruments Year-end trading account assets decreased $25 4 billion in 2011 primarily due to actions to reduce risk on the balance sheet Average trading account assets decreased $26 4 billion in 2011 primarily due to a reclassification of noninterest-earning equity securities from trading account assets to other assets for average balance sheet purposes

Debt Securities

Debt securities primarily include U S Treasury and agency securities MBS principally agency MBS foreign bonds corporate bonds and municipal debt We use the debt securities portfolio primarily to manage interest rate and liquidity risk and to take advantage of market conditions that create more economically attractive returns on these investments Year-end balances of debt securities decreased $26 6 billion due to agency MBS sales in 2011 Average balances of debt securities increased $13 2 billion due to agency MBS purchases in the second half of 2010 and the first three quarters of 2011 For additional information on available-for-sale (AFS) debt securities see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Loans and Leases

Year-end and average loans and leases decreased $14 2 billion to $926 2 billion and $20 2 billion to $938 1 billion in 2011 The decrease was primarily due to consumer portfolio run-off outpacing new originations and loan portfolio sales partially offset by non-U S commercial growth as international demand continues to remain high For a more detailed discussion of the loan portfolio see Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Allowance for Loan and Lease Losses

Year-end and average allowance for loan lease losses decreased $8 1 billion and $8 0 billion in 2011 primarily due to the impact of the improving economy partially offset by reserve additions in the PCI portfolio throughout 2011 For a more detailed discussion of the Allowance for Loan and Lease Losses see page 109

All Other Assets

Year-end and average other assets decreased $79 3 billion and $105 9 billion in 2011 driven primarily by the sale of strategic investments a reduction in loans held-for-sale (LHFS) and lower mortgage servicing rights (MSRs) Average other assets was also impacted by lower cash balances held at the Federal Reserve

Liabilities

Deposits

Year-end and average deposits increased $22 6 billion and $47 2 billion to $1 0 trillion in 2011 The increase was attributable to growth in our noninterest-bearing deposits

Federal Funds Purchased and Securities Loaned or Sold Under Agreements to Repurchase

Federal funds transactions involve borrowing reserve balances on a short-term basis Securities loaned and securities sold under agreements to repurchase are collateralized borrowing transactions utilized to accommodate customer transactions earn interest rate spreads and finance assets on the balance sheet Year-end and average federal funds purchased and securities loaned or sold under agreements to repurchase decreased $30 5 billion and $81 3 billion in 2011 primarily due to planned funding reductions

Trading Account Liabilities

Trading account liabilities consist primarily of short positions in fixed-income securities including government and corporate debt equity and convertible instruments Year-end and average trading account liabilities decreased $11 5 billion and $7 0 billion in 2011 in line with declines in trading account assets

Commercial Paper and Other Short-term Borrowings

Commercial paper and other short-term borrowings provide an additional funding source Year-end and average commercial paper and other short-term borrowings decreased $24 3 billion to $35 7 billion and $24 8 billion to $51 9 billion in 2011 due to planned reductions in wholesale borrowings During 2011 we reduced to an insignificant amount our use of unsecured short-term borrowings including commercial paper and master notes

Long-term Debt

Year-end and average long-term debt decreased $76 2 billion to $372 3 billion and $69 3 billion to $421 2 billion in 2011 The decreases were attributable to the Corporation s strategy to reduce our debt footprint For additional information on long-term debt, see Note 13 – Long-term Debt to the Consolidated Financial Statements

All Other Liabilities

Year-end all other liabilities decreased $17 9 billion in 2011 driven primarily by a decline in the liability related to collateral held a decrease in lower customer margin credits and liquidation of a consolidated variable interest entity (VIE)

Shareholders' Equity

Year-end shareholders equity increased $1 9 billion The increase was driven primarily by the investment by Berkshire exchanges of certain preferred securities for common stock and debt and positive earnings Average shareholders equity decreased $4 1 billion in 2011 primarily driven by losses late in 2010

Cash Flows Overview

The Corporation's operating assets and liabilities support our global markets and lending activities. We believe that cash flows from operations, available cash balances and our ability to generate cash through short- and long-term debt are sufficient to fund our operating liquidity needs. Our investing activities primarily include the AFS securities portfolio and other short-term investments. Our financing activities reflect cash flows primarily related to increased customer deposits and net long-term debt repayments.

Cash and cash equivalents increased $11.7 billion during 2011 due to sales of non-core assets and net sales of AFS securities partially offset by repayment and maturities of certain long-term debt. Cash and cash equivalents decreased $12.9 billion during 2010 due to repayment and maturities of certain long-term debt and net purchases of AFS securities partially offset by deposit growth.

During 2011, net cash provided by operating activities was $64.5 billion compared to $82.6 billion in 2010. The more significant adjustments to net income (loss) to arrive at cash provided by operating activities included the provision for credit losses, goodwill impairment charges and the net decrease in trading and derivative instruments.

During 2011, net cash provided by investing activities increased to $52.4 billion primarily driven by net sales of debt securities. During 2010, net cash of $30.3 billion was used in investing activities primarily for net purchases of debt securities.

During 2011 and 2010, the net cash used in financing activities of $104.7 billion and $65.4 billion primarily reflected the net decreases in long-term debt as maturities outpaced new issuances.

(1) Exclusive of merger and restructuring charges and goodwill impairment charges.

(2) Due to a net loss applicable to common shareholders for 2010 and 2009, the effect of antidilutive equity instruments was excluded from diluted earnings (loss) per share and average diluted common shares.

(3) Tangible equity ratios and tangible book value per share of common stock are non-GAAP measures. Other companies may define or calculate these measures differently. For additional information on these ratios and corresponding reconciliations to GAAP financial measures, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38 and Table 17.

(4) For more information on the impact of the PCI loan portfolio on asset quality, see Consumer Portfolio Credit Risk Management on page 81 and Commercial Portfolio Credit Risk Management on page 94.

(5) Includes the allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments.

(6) Balances and ratios do not include loans, in aggregate or under the fair value option. For additional information on nonperforming loans, leases and foreclosed properties, see Nonperforming Consumer Loans, Leases and Foreclosed Properties Activity on page 100 and Nonperforming Loans and Leases on page 97 and corresponding Table 36 and Nonperforming Commercial Loans, Leases and Foreclosed Properties Activity on page 100 and corresponding Table 45.

(7) Amounts not reported as nonperforming that are excluded from nonperforming loans, primarily fully guaranteed U.S. government-insured loans purchased from GNMA loans and loans accounted for under the fair value option.

Supplemental Financial Data

We view net interest income and related ratios and analyses on a FTE basis which are non-GAAP financial measures We believe managing the business with net interest income on a FTE basis provides a more accurate picture of the interest margin for comparative purposes To derive the FTE basis net interest income is adjusted to reflect tax-exempt income on an equivalent before tax basis with a corresponding increase in income tax expense For purposes of this calculation we use the federal statutory tax rate of 35 percent The measure ensures comparability of net interest income arising from taxable and tax-exempt sources

As mentioned above certain performance measures including the efficiency ratio and net interest yield utilize net interest income (and thus total revenue) on a FTE basis The efficiency ratio measures the costs expended to generate a dollar of revenue and net interest yield measures the bps we earn over the cost of funds

We also evaluate our business based on certain ratios that utilize tangible equity a non-GAAP financial measure Tangible equity represents an adjusted shareholders equity or common shareholders equity amount which has been reduced by goodwill and intangible assets (excluding MSRs) net of related deferred tax liabilities These measures are used to evaluate our use of equity In addition profitability relationship and investment models all use Return on average tangible shareholders equity (ROTE) as key measures to support our overall growth goals

- Return on average tangible common shareholders equity measures our earnings contribution as a percentage of adjusted common shareholders equity plus any Common Equivalent Securities (CES) The tangible common equity ratio represents adjusted common shareholders equity plus any CES divided by total assets less goodwill and intangible assets (excluding MSRs) net of related deferred tax liabilities
- ROTE measures our earnings contribution as a percentage of adjusted average shareholders equity The tangible equity ratio represents adjusted total shareholders equity divided by total assets less goodwill and intangible assets (excluding MSRs) net of related deferred tax liabilities
- Tangible book value per common share represents adjusted ending common shareholders equity divided by ending common shares outstanding

In addition we evaluate our business segment results based on measures that utilize return on average economic capital a non-GAAP financial measure including the following

- Return on average economic capital for the segments is calculated as net income adjusted for cost of funds and earnings credits and certain expenses related to intangibles divided by average economic capital
- Economic capital represents allocated equity less goodwill and a percentage of intangible assets (excluding MSRs)

The aforementioned supplemental data and performance measures are presented in Tables 7 and 8 and Statistical Tables XII and XIV In addition in Table 8 and Statistical Table XIV we have excluded the impact of goodwill impairment charges of $3 2 billion and $12 4 billion recorded in 2011 and 2010 when presenting certain of these metrics Accordingly these are non-GAAP financial measures

Statistical Tables XV XVI and XVII provide reconciliations of these non-GAAP financial measures with financial measures defined by GAAP We believe the use of these non-GAAP financial measures provides additional clarity in assessing the results of the Corporation and our segments Other companies may define or calculate these measures and ratios differently

Core Net Interest Income

We manage core net interest income which is reported net interest income on a FTE basis adjusted for the impact of market-based activities As discussed in the GBAM business segment section on page 49 we evaluate our market-based results and strategies on a total market-based revenue approach by combining net interest income and non-interest income for GBAM An analysis of core net interest income core average earning assets and core net interest yield on earning assets all of which adjust for the impact of market-based activities from reported net interest income on a FTE basis is shown below We believe the use of this non-GAAP presentation in Table 9 provides additional clarity in assessing our results

Table 9 Core Net Interest Income

Net interest yield contribution (FTE basis)
As reported (1)	2.49%	2 78%
Impact of market-based activities (2)	0.52	0 71
Core net interest yield on earning assets	2.01%	3 49%

(1) Net interest income and net interest yield include loan earned on overnight deposits placed with the Federal Reserve of $186 million and $368 million for 2011 and 2010

(2) Represents the impact of market-based amounts included in GBAM

Core net interest income decreased $6 5 billion to $41 8 billion for 2011 compared to 2010 The decline was primarily due to lower consumer loan balances and yields and decreased investment security yields including the acceleration of purchase premium amortization from an increase in modeled prepayment expectations and increased hedge ineffectiveness These decreases were partially offset by ongoing reductions in our debt footprint and lower interest rates paid on deposits

Core average earning assets increased $1 1 billion to $1 385 9 billion for 2011 compared to 2010 The increase was primarily due to growth in investment securities partially offset by declines in consumer loans

Core net interest yield decreased 48 bps to 3 01 percent for 2011 compared to 2010 primarily due to the factors noted above In addition the yield curve flattened significantly with long-term rates near historical lows at December 31 2011 This has resulted in net interest yield compression as assets have repriced down and liability yields have declined less significantly due to the absolute low level of short-end rates

Business Segment Operations

Segment Description and Basis of Presentation

We report the results of our operations through six business segments Deposits, Card Services CRES, Global Commercial Banking, GBAM and GWIM with the remaining operations recorded in All Other

We prepare and evaluate segment results using certain non-GAAP financial measures many of which are discussed in Supplemental Financial Data on page 38 We begin by evaluating the operating results of the segments which by definition exclude merger and restructuring charges

The management accounting and reporting process derives segment and business results by utilizing allocation methodologies for revenue and expense The net income derived for the businesses is dependent upon revenue and cost allocations using an activity-based costing model funds transfer pricing and other methodologies and assumptions management believes are appropriate to reflect the results of the business

Total revenue net of interest expense includes net interest income on a FTE basis and noninterest income The adjustment of net interest income to a FTE basis results in a corresponding increase in income tax expense The segment results also reflect certain revenue and expense methodologies that are utilized to determine net income The net interest income of the businesses includes the results of a funds transfer pricing process that matches assets and liabilities with similar interest rate sensitivity and maturity characteristics For presentation purposes in segments where the total of liabilities and equity exceeds assets which are generally deposit-taking segments we allocate assets to match liabilities Net interest income of the business segments also includes an allocation of net interest income generated by certain of our ALM activities

Our ALM activities include an overall interest rate risk management strategy that incorporates the use of various derivatives and cash instruments to manage fluctuations in earnings and capital that are caused by interest rate volatility Our goal is to manage interest rate sensitivity so that movements in interest rates do not significantly adversely affect earnings and capital The majority of our ALM activities are allocated to the business segments and fluctuate based on performance ALM activities include external product pricing decisions including deposit pricing strategies the effects of our internal funds transfer pricing process and the net effects of other ALM activities

Certain expenses not directly attributable to a specific business segment are allocated to the segments The most significant of these expenses include data and item processing costs and certain centralized or shared functions Data processing costs are allocated to the segments based on equipment usage Item processing costs are allocated to the segments based on the volume of items processed for each segment The costs of certain centralized or shared functions are allocated based on methodologies that reflect utilization

Equity is allocated to business segments and related businesses using a risk-adjusted methodology incorporating each segment's credit market interest rate strategic and operational risk components The nature of these risks is discussed further on page 68 We benefit from the diversification of risk across these components which is reflected as a reduction to allocated equity for each segment The total amount of average allocated equity reflects both risk-based capital and the portion of goodwill and intangibles specifically assigned to the business segments The risk-adjusted methodology is periodically refined and such refinements are reflected as changes to allocated equity in each segment

For more information on selected financial information for the business segments and reconciliations to consolidated total revenue net income (loss) and year-end total assets see Note 26 – Business Segment Information to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Deposits includes the results of consumer deposit activities which consist of a comprehensive range of products provided to consumers and small businesses Our deposit products include traditional savings accounts money market savings accounts CDs and IRAs noninterest- and interest-bearing checking accounts as well as investment accounts and products Deposit products provide a relatively stable source of funding and liquidity for the Corporation We earn net interest spread revenue from investing this liquidity in earning assets through client-facing lending and ALM activities The revenue is allocated to the deposit products using our funds transfer pricing process which takes into account the interest rates and implied maturity of the deposits

Deposits also generates fees such as account service fees non-sufficient funds fees overdraft charges and ATM fees as well as investment and brokerage fees from Merrill Edge accounts Merrill Edge is an integrated investing and banking service targeted at clients with less than $250 000 in total assets Merrill Edge provides team based investment advice and guidance brokerage services a self-directed online investing platform and key banking capabilities including access to the Corporation's network of banking centers and ATMs Deposits includes the net impact of migrating customers and their related deposit balances between Deposits and other client managed businesses

Net income decreased $170 million to $1 2 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 due to a decrease in revenue partially offset by a decrease in noninterest expense Revenue of $12 7 billion was down $873 million from a year ago primarily driven by a decline in service charges reflecting the impact of overdraft policy changes in conjunction with Regulation E that were fully implemented during the third quarter of 2010 This was partially offset by an increase in net interest income due to a customer shift to more liquid products and continued pricing discipline Noninterest expense decreased $563 million or five percent to $10 6 billion due to lower litigation and operating expenses partially offset by an increase in FDIC expense

Average deposits increased $6 2 billion from a year ago driven by a customer shift to more liquid products in a low interest rate environment as checking traditional savings and money market savings grew $23 6 billion Growth in liquid products was partially offset by a decline in average time deposits of $17 4 billion As a result of the shift in the mix of deposits and our continued pricing discipline rates paid on average deposits declined by 16 bps to 27 bps in 2011 compared to 2010

Card Services is one of the leading issuers of credit and debit cards in the U S to consumers and small businesses providing a broad offering of lending products including co-branded and affinity products During 2011 we sold our Canadian consumer card business and we are evaluating our remaining international consumer card operations In light of these actions the international consumer card business results were moved to All Other prior period results have been reclassified and the Global Card Services business segment was renamed Card Services

During 2010 and 2011 Card Services was negatively impacted by provisions of the CARD Act. The majority of the provisions of the CARD Act became effective on February 22 2010 while certain provisions became effective in the third quarter of 2010 The CARD Act has negatively impacted net interest income due to restrictions on our ability to reprice credit cards based on risk and card income due to restrictions imposed on certain fees

On June 29 2011 the Federal Reserve adopted a final rule with respect to the Durbin Amendment, effective October 1 2011 that established the maximum allowable interchange fees a bank can receive for a debit card transaction The Federal Reserve also adopted a rule to allow a debit card issuer to recover one cent per transaction for fraud prevention purposes if the issuer complies with certain fraud-related requirements with which we are currently in compliance In addition the Federal Reserve approved rules governing routing and exclusivity requiring issuers to offer two unaffiliated networks for routing transactions on each debit or prepaid product which are effective April 1 2012 For more information on the final interchange rules see Regulatory Matters on page 66 The new interchange fee rules resulted in a reduction of debit card revenue in the fourth quarter of 2011 of $430 million

Net income increased $12 8 billion to $5 8 billion in 2011 primarily due to the $10 4 billion goodwill impairment charge in 2010 and a $7 9 billion decrease in the provision for credit losses in 2011 This was partially offset by a decrease in revenue of $4 2 billion or 19 percent to $18 1 billion in 2011 compared to 2010

Net interest income decreased $2 9 billion or 20 percent to $11 5 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 driven by lower average loan balances and yields The net interest yield decreased 81 bps to 9 04 percent due to charge-offs and paydowns of higher interest rate products Noninterest income decreased $1 3 billion or 16 percent, to $6 6 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 due to the implementation of the Durbin Amendment on October 1 2011 the gain on the sale of our MasterCard position in 2010 and the implementation of the CARD Act in 2010

The provision for credit losses decreased $7 9 billion to $3 1 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 reflecting improving delinquencies and collections and fewer bankruptcies as a result of improving economic conditions and lower loan balances For more information on the provision for credit losses see Provision for Credit Losses on page 108

The return on average economic capital increased due to higher net income and a decrease in average economic capital Average economic capital decreased 29 percent due to lower levels of credit risk from a decline in loan balances as well as an improvement in credit quality Average allocated equity decreased primarily due to the $10 4 billion goodwill impairment charge in 2010 as well as the same reasons as the decrease in economic capital For more information regarding economic capital and allocated equity see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38

Average loans decreased $19 0 billion or 13 percent in 2011 compared to 2010 driven by higher payments charge-offs continued run-off of non-core portfolios and the impact of portfolio divestitures during 2011

CRES was realigned effective January 1 2011 and its activities are now referred to as Home Loans Legacy Asset Servicing and Other This realignment allows CRES management to lead the ongoing home loan business while also providing greater focus and transparency on legacy mortgage issues

CRES generates revenue by providing an extensive line of consumer real estate products and services to customers nationwide CRES products include fixed- and adjustable-rate first-lien mortgage loans for home purchase and refinancing needs home equity lines of credit (HELOC) and home equity loans First mortgage products are either sold into the secondary mortgage market to investors while we retain MSRs and the Bank of America customer relationships or are held on our balance sheet in All Other for ALM purposes HELOC and home equity loans are retained on the CRES balance sheet CRES services mortgage loans including those loans it owns loans owned by other business segments and All Other, and loans owned by outside investors

The financial results of the on-balance sheet loans are reported in the business segment that owns the loans or All Other CRES is not impacted by the Corporation's first mortgage production retention decisions as CRES is compensated for loans held for ALM purposes on a management accounting basis with a corresponding offset recorded in All Other, and for servicing loans owned by other business segments and All Other

CRES includes the impact of transferring customers and their related loan balances between GWIM and CRES based on client segmentation thresholds For more information on the migration of customer balances see GWIM on page 52

Home Loans

Home Loans products are available to our customers through our retail network of approximately 5 700 banking centers mortgage loan officers in approximately 500 locations and a sales force offering our customers direct telephone and online access to our products These products were also offered through our correspondent lending channel however we exited this channel in late 2011 In 2011 we also exited the reverse mortgage origination business In October 2010 we exited the first mortgage wholesale acquisition channel These strategic changes were made to allow greater focus on our direct to consumer channels deepen relationships with existing customers and use mortgage products to acquire new relationships

Home Loans includes ongoing loan production activities certain servicing activities and the CRES home equity portfolio not originally selected for inclusion in the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio Servicing activities include collecting cash for principal interest and escrow payments from borrowers and disbursing customer draws for lines of credit and accounting for and remitting principal and interest payments to investors and escrow payments to third parties along with responding to non-default related customer inquiries Home Loans also included insurance operations through June 30 2011 when the ongoing insurance business was transferred to Card Services following the sale of Balboa

Due to the realignment of CRES the composition of the Home Loans loan portfolio does not currently reflect a normalized level of credit losses and noninterest expense which we expect will develop over time

Legacy Asset Servicing

Legacy Asset Servicing is responsible for servicing and managing the exposures related to selected residential mortgage home equity and discontinued real estate loan portfolios These selected loan portfolios include owned loans and loans serviced for others including loans held in other business segments and All Other (collectively the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio) The Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio includes residential mortgage loans home equity loans and discontinued real estate loans that would not have been originated under our underwriting standards at December 31 2010 Countrywide loans that were impaired at the time of acquisition (the Countrywide PCI portfolio) as well as certain loans that met a pre-defined delinquency status or probability of default threshold as of January 1 2011 are also included in the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio Since determining the pool of loans to be included in the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio as of January 1 2011 the criteria have not changed for this portfolio However the criteria for inclusion of certain assets and liabilities in the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio will continue to be evaluated over time

Legacy Asset Servicing results reflect the net cost of legacy exposures that is included in the results of CRES including representations and warranties provision litigation costs and financial results of the CRES home equity portfolio selected as part of the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio In addition certain revenues and expenses on loans serviced for others including loans serviced for other business segments and All Other are included in Legacy Asset Servicing results The results of the Legacy Asset Servicing residential mortgage and discontinued real estate portfolios are recorded primarily in All Other

Our home retention efforts are part of our servicing activities along with supervising foreclosures and property dispositions These default-related activities are performed by Legacy Asset Servicing In an effort to help our customers avoid foreclosure Legacy Asset Servicing evaluates various workout options prior to foreclosure sales which combined with our temporary halt of foreclosures announced in October 2010 has resulted in elongated default timelines For additional information on our servicing activities and foreclosures see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Other Mortgage-related Matters on page 63

The total owned loans in the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio decreased $15 7 billion in 2011 to $154 9 billion at December 31 2011 of which $60 0 billion are reflected on the balance sheet of Legacy Asset Servicing within CRES and the remainder are held on the balance sheet of All Other

The Other component within CRES includes the results of MSR activities including net hedge results together with any related assets or liabilities used as economic hedges The change in the value of the MSRs reflects the change in discount rates and prepayment speed assumptions as well as the effect of changes in other assumptions including the cost to service These amounts are not allocated between Home Loans and Legacy Asset Servicing since the MSRs are managed as a single asset For additional information on MSRs see Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights to the Consolidated Financial Statements Goodwill assigned to CRES was included in Other however the remaining balance of goodwill was written off in its entirety in 2011

CRES Results

The CRES net loss increased $10 6 billion to $19 5 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 Revenue declined $13 5 billion to a loss of $3 2 billion due in large part to a decrease of $11 4 billion in mortgage banking income driven by an increase in representations and warranties provision of $8 8 billion and a decrease in core production income of $3 4 billion in 2011

The representations and warranties provision in 2011 included $8 6 billion related to the BNY Mellon Settlement and $7 0 billion related to other exposures For additional information on representations and warranties see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Representations and Warranties on page 56 and Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements The decrease in core production income was due to a decline in loan funding volume caused primarily by a drop in market share which reflected decisions to price certain loan products in order to align the volume of new loan applications with our underwriting capacity in both the retail and correspondent channels and our exit from the correspondent channel in late 2011 Also contributing to the decline in revenue was a $1 3 billion decrease in insurance income due to the sale of Balboa in 2011 and a decline in net interest income primarily due to lower average LHFS balances Revenue for 2011 also included a pre-tax gain on the sale of Balboa of $752 million net of an inter-segment advisory fee

The provision for credit losses decreased $4 0 billion to $4 5 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 driven primarily by improving portfolio trends including lower reserve additions in the Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio

Noninterest expense increased $7 0 billion to $21 9 billion in 2011 compared to 2010 primarily due to a $3 6 billion increase in litigation expense $1 6 billion higher mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs higher default-related and other loss mitigation servicing expenses and a non-cash non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge of $2 6 billion in 2011 compared to a $2 0 billion goodwill impairment charge in 2010

In 2011 we recorded $1 8 billion of mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs which included $1 3 billion for compensatory fees as a result of elongated default timelines These increases were partially offset by a decrease of $1 1 billion in insurance expense due to the sale of Balboa and a decline of $640 million in production expense primarily due to lower origination volumes

Compensatory fees are fees that we expect to be assessed by the government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae (FNMA) and Freddie Mac (FHLMC) (collectively the GSEs) as a result of foreclosure delays pursuant to first mortgage seller/servicer guides with the GSEs which provide timelines to complete the liquidation of delinquent loans In instances where we fail to meet these timelines our agreements provide the GSEs with the option to assess compensatory fees The remainder of the mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs are out-of-pocket costs that we do not expect to recover We expect these costs will remain elevated as additional loans are delayed in the foreclosure process We also expect that continued elevated costs including costs related to resources necessary to perform the foreclosure process assessments and to implement other operational changes will continue

Average economic capital decreased 30 percent due to a reduction in credit risk driven by lower loan balances and the sale of Balboa Average allocated equity decreased for the same reasons as economic capital as well as the goodwill impairment charges in 2011 and 2010 For more information regarding economic capital and allocated equity see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38

Mortgage Banking Income

CRES mortgage banking income is categorized into production and servicing income Core production income is comprised of revenue from the fair value gains and losses recognized on our interest rate lock commitments (IRLCs) and LHFS the related secondary market execution and costs related to representations and warranties in the sales transactions along with other obligations incurred in the sales of mortgage loans In addition production income includes revenue which is offset in All Other for transfers of mortgage loans from CRES to the ALM portfolio related to the Corporation's mortgage production retention decisions Ongoing costs related to representations and warranties and other obligations that were incurred in the sales of mortgage loans in prior periods are also included in production income

Servicing income includes income earned in connection with servicing activities and MSR valuation adjustments net of economic hedge activities The costs associated with our servicing activities are included in noninterest expense

The table below summarizes the components of mortgage banking income

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010
Production loss
Core production revenue	$ 2,797	$ 6 182
Representations and warranties provision	(15,581)	(6 785)
Total production loss	(12,784)	(603)
Servicing income
Servicing fees	5,000	5 475
Impact of customer payments (1)	(2,621)	(3 750)
Fair value changes of MSRs net of economic hedge results (2)	806	376
Other servicing-related revenue	907	675
Total net servicing income	4,091	3 787
Total CRES mortgage banking income (loss)	(8,693)	3 184
Eliminations (3)	(997)	(430)
Total consolidated mortgage banking income (loss)	$ (9,690)	$ 2 754

(1) Represents the change in the market value of the MSR asset due to the impact of customer payments received during the year
(2) Includes sale of MSRs
(3) Includes the effect of transfers of mortgage loans from CRES to the ALM portfolio in All Other

Core production revenue of $2 8 billion in 2011 decreased $3 4 billion from 2010 due primarily to lower new loan origination volumes The 52 percent decline in new loan originations was caused primarily by a drop in market share as previously discussed combined with the decline in the overall market demand for mortgages from 2010 to 2011 The representations and warranties provision increased $8 8 billion to $15 6 billion in 2011 due to the BNY Mellon Settlement and other exposures

Net servicing income increased $834 million in 2011 due to a lower impact of customer payments partially offset by lower servicing fees driven by a decline in the servicing portfolio Improved MSR results net of hedges also contributed to the increase in net servicing income

Mortgage servicing rights
Balance	7,876	14,900
Capitalized mortgage servicing rights (% of loans serviced for investors)	84 bps	92 bps

(1) In addition to loan production in CRES, the remaining first mortgage and home equity loan production is primarily in All Other
(2) Servicing of residential mortgage loans, home equity lines of credit, home equity loans and discontinued real estate mortgage loans
(3) The total Corporation mortgage servicing portfolio included $1,029 billion in Home Loans and $734 billion in Legacy Asset Servicing at December 31, 2011. The total Corporation mortgage loans serviced for investors included $831 billion in Home Loans and $648 billion in Legacy Asset Servicing at December 31, 2011.

First mortgage production was $151.8 billion in 2011 compared to $298.0 billion in 2010 with the decrease primarily due to a reduction in both the correspondent and retail sales channels. Additionally, the overall industry market demand for mortgages dropped by approximately 17 percent in 2011 contributing to the decline in mortgage production. We expect our market share of mortgage originations in 2012 to be lower than our market share in 2011 due to our exit from the correspondent channel.

Home equity production was $4.4 billion in 2011 compared to $8.4 billion in 2010 with the decrease primarily due to a decline in reverse mortgage originations based on our decision to exit this business in 2011.

At December 31, 2011, the consumer MSR balance was $7.4 billion, which represented 54 bps of the related unpaid principal balance compared to $14.9 billion or 92 bps of the related unpaid principal balance at December 31, 2010. The decline in the consumer MSR balance was primarily driven by lower mortgage rates, which resulted in higher forecasted prepayment speeds, combined with the impact of elevated expected costs to service delinquent loans, which reduced expected cash flows and the value of the MSRs, and MSR sales. In addition, the MSRs declined as a result of customer payments. These declines were partially offset by adjustments to prepayment models to reflect muted refinancing activity relative to historic norms and by the addition of new MSRs recorded in connection with sales of loans. During 2011, MSRs in the amount of $896 million were sold. Gains recognized on these transactions were not significant. These sales were undertaken to reduce the balance of MSRs, lower our default-related servicing costs and reduce risk in certain portfolios in preparation of the implementation of Basel III. For additional information on Basel III, see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital Changes on page 73 and, for information on MSRs and the related hedge instruments, see Mortgage Banking Risk Management on page 119 and Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Global Commercial Banking provides a wide range of lending-related products and services, integrated working capital management and treasury solutions to clients through our network of offices and client relationship teams along with various product partners. Our clients include business banking and middle-market companies, commercial real estate firms and governments and are generally defined as companies with annual sales up to $2 billion. Our lending products and services include commercial loans and commitment facilities, real estate lending, asset-based lending and indirect consumer loans. Our capital management and treasury solutions include treasury management, foreign exchange and short-term investing options. Effective in 2011, management responsibility for the merchant services joint venture, Banc of America Merchant Services, LLC was moved from GBAM to Global Commercial Banking where it more closely aligns with the business model. Prior periods have been reclassified to reflect this change. In 2011, we recorded $1.1 billion of impairment charges on our investment in the joint venture. Because of the recent transfer of the joint venture to Global Commercial Banking, the impairment charges were recorded in All Other. For additional information, see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Net income increased $1.2 billion to $4.4 billion in 2011 from 2010 primarily driven by an improvement in the provision for credit losses, offset by lower revenue and higher expenses.

Revenue decreased $673 million primarily driven by lower net interest income related to ALM activities and lower average loan balances, partially offset by an increase in average deposits as clients continue to maintain high levels of liquidity. Noninterest income increased $158 million, largely due to a gain on the termination of a purchase contract, an increase in tax credit and commercial card income, and higher investment gains in the commercial real estate portfolio.

The provision for credit losses decreased $2.6 billion to a benefit of $634 million for 2011 compared to 2010. The decrease was driven by improved economic conditions and an accelerated rate of loan resolutions in the commercial real estate portfolio.

Noninterest expense increased $104 million, driven primarily by higher FDIC expense.

The return on average economic capital increased due to higher net income and the 12 percent decrease in average economic capital. Economic capital decreased due to declining loan balances and improvements in credit quality. Average allocated equity decreased due to the same reasons as economic capital. For more information regarding economic capital and allocated equity, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38.

Global Commercial Banking Revenue

Global Commercial Banking revenue can also be categorized into treasury services revenue primarily from capital and treasury management and business lending revenue derived from credit related products and services as shown in the table below

Global Treasury Services	$ 4,884	$ 4 741

Total average deposits	$ 180,182	$ 148 838
Total average loans and leases	189,415	203 824

Treasury services revenue increased $113 million to $4 9 billion driven by increased net interest income from the funding benefit of increased deposits partially offset by lower treasury service charges As clients manage through current economic conditions we have seen usage of certain treasury services decline and increased conversion of paper to electronic services These actions combined with our clients leveraging compensating balances to offset fees have decreased treasury service charges

Business lending revenue decreased $786 million to $5 7 billion due to lower net interest income related to ALM activities and lower loan balances Average loan and lease balances decreased $14 4 billion to $189 4 billion as commercial real estate net paydowns and sales outpaced new originations and renewals

Net income decreased $3 3 billion to $3 0 billion in 2011 primarily driven by a decline of $4 2 billion in sales and trading revenue The decrease in sales and trading revenue was due to a challenging market environment partially offset by DVA gains net of hedges In 2011 DVA gains net of hedges were $1 0 billion compared to $262 million in 2010 due to the widening of our credit spreads

The provision for credit losses decreased $130 million to a benefit of $296 million in 2011 from a benefit of $166 million in 2010 driven by the positive impact of the economic environment on the credit portfolio Noninterest expense increased $644 million driven primarily by higher costs related to investments in infrastructure

Income tax expense included a $774 million charge to reduce the carrying value of the deferred tax assets as a result of a reduction in the U.K. corporate income tax rate enacted during 2011 compared to a charge of $388 million for a rate reduction enacted in 2010. For additional information related to the U.K. corporate income tax rate reduction, see Financial Highlights – Income Tax Expense on page 34.

The return on average economic capital decreased due to lower net income partially offset by a 33 percent decrease in average economic capital due to reductions in credit risk driven by improved risk ratings, lower counterparty credit risk and a decline in market risk related trading exposures. Average allocated equity decreased due to the same reasons as economic capital. For more information regarding economic capital and allocated equity, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38.

Sales and trading revenue and investment banking fees may continue to be adversely affected in 2012 by lower client activity and challenging market conditions as a result of, among other things, the European sovereign debt crisis, uncertainty regarding the outcome of the evolving domestic regulatory landscape, our credit ratings and market volatility.

Components of Global Banking & Markets

Sales and Trading Revenue

Sales and trading revenue is segregated into fixed income, including investment and non-investment grade corporate debt obligations, commercial mortgage-backed securities, residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS), swaps and collateralized debt obligations (CDOs), currencies, including interest rate and foreign exchange contracts, commodities, including primarily futures, forwards and options, and equity income from equity-linked derivatives and cash equity activity.

Fixed income, currencies and commodities	$ 8,666	$ 12,857
Equity income	3,968	4,155
Total sales and trading revenue	$ 12,634	$ 17,012

(1) Includes a FTE adjustment of $372 million and $274 million for 2011 and 2010. For additional information on sales and trading revenue, including sales and trading investment and brokerage services and net interest income, see Note 4 – Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Fixed income, currencies and commodities (FICC) revenue decreased $4.0 billion or 31 percent, to $8.9 billion in 2011 compared to 2010, primarily due to lower client activity and continued adverse market conditions impacting our mortgage products, credit and rates and currencies businesses, partially offset by DVA gains, net of hedges. Equity income decreased $187 million or five percent, to $4.0 billion in 2011 compared to 2010, primarily due to lower equity derivative trading volumes. Sales and trading revenue included total commissions and brokerage fee revenue of $2.3 billion ($2.2 billion from equities and $144 million from FICC) in 2011 compared to $2.4 billion ($2.2 billion from equities and $148 million from FICC) in 2010.

In conjunction with regulatory reform measures and our initiative to optimize our balance sheet, we exited our stand-alone proprietary trading business as of June 30, 2011, which involved trading activities in a variety of products including stocks, bonds, currencies and commodities. Proprietary trading revenue was $434 million for the six months ended June 30, 2011, compared to $1.4 billion for 2010. For additional information on restrictions on proprietary trading, see Regulatory Matters – Limitations on Proprietary Trading on page 66.

Investment Banking Fees

Product specialists within GBAM provide advisory services and underwrite and distribute debt and equity issuances and other loan products. The table below presents total investment banking fees for GBAM, which represent a majority of the Corporation's total investment banking income, with the remainder reported in GWIM and Global Commercial Banking.

Advisory (2)	$ 1,346	$ 1,018
Debt issuance	2,696	3,059
Equity issuance	1,900	1,329
Total investment banking fees	$ 5,942	$ 5,406

(1) Includes self-led deals of $372 million and $364 million for 2011 and 2010.
(2) Advisory includes fees on debt and equity advisory services and mergers and acquisitions.

Investment banking fees decreased $164 million in 2011 compared to 2010, primarily driven by lower debt issuance fees due to challenging market conditions, partially offset by higher advisory fees.

Global Corporate Banking

Client relationship teams along with product partners work with our customers to provide a wide range of lending-related products and services, integrated working capital management and treasury solutions through the Corporation's global network of offices. The table below presents total net revenue, total average deposits and total average loans and leases for Global Corporate Banking.

Global Treasury Services	$ 2,448	$ 2,259
Business Lending	3,092	3,272
Total revenue, net of interest expense	$ 5,540	$ 5,531
Total average deposits	$ 108,093	$ 90,083
Total average loans and leases	87,946	81,415

Global Corporate Banking revenue of $5.5 billion for 2011 remained in line with 2010. Global Treasury Services revenue increased $189 million in 2011 compared to 2010 as growth in U.S. and non-U.S. deposit volumes was partially offset by a challenging rate environment. Business Lending revenues decreased $180 million in 2011 as growth in loans was offset by a declining rate environment and lower accretion on acquired portfolios due to the impact of prepayments in prior periods.

Global Corporate Banking average deposits increased 21 percent in 2011 compared to 2010 as balances continued to grow due to clients' excess liquidity and limited alternative investment options. Average loan and lease balances in Global Corporate Banking increased 20 percent in 2011 due to growth in the commercial loan and non-U.S. trade finance portfolios driven by continuing international demand and improved domestic momentum.

Collateralized Debt Obligation and Monoline Exposure

CDO vehicles hold diversified pools of fixed-income securities and issue multiple tranches of debt securities including commercial paper and mezzanine and equity securities. Our CDO-related exposure can be divided into funded and unfunded super senior liquidity commitment exposure and other super senior exposure including cash positions and derivative contracts. For more information on our CDO positions see Note 8 – Securitizations and Other Variable Interest Entities to the Consolidated Financial Statements. Super senior exposure represents the most senior class of notes that are issued by the CDO vehicles and benefits from the subordination of all other securities issued by the CDO vehicles. In 2011, we recorded losses of $86 million from our CDO related exposure compared to losses of $573 million in 2010.

At December 31, 2011, our super senior CDO exposure before consideration of insurance, net of write-downs, was $376 million, comprised solely of trading account assets compared to $2.0 billion, comprised of $1.3 billion in trading account assets and $675 million in AFS debt securities at December 31, 2010. Of our super senior CDO exposure at December 31, 2011, $224 million was hedged and $152 million was unhedged compared to $772 million hedged and $1.2 billion unhedged at December 31, 2010. At December 31, 2011, there were no unrealized losses recorded in accumulated other comprehensive income (OCI) on super senior cash positions and retained positions from liquidated CDOs compared to $466 million at December 31, 2010. The change was the result of sales of ABS CDOs.

With the Merrill Lynch acquisition, we acquired a loan that is collateralized by U.S. super senior ABS CDOs and recorded in All Other. For additional information, see All Other on page 54.

Excluding amounts related to transactions with a single counterparty which were transferred to other assets as discussed below, the table below presents our original total notional, mark-to-market receivable and credit valuation adjustment for credit default swaps (CDS) and other positions with monolines.

Credit Default Swaps with Monoline Financial Guarantors

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010
Notional	$ 21,070	$ 38,424
Mark-to-market or guarantor receivable	$ 1,798	$ 9,201
Credit valuation adjustment	(417)	(5,275)
Total	$ 1,349	$ 3,926
Credit valuation adjustment %	24%	57%
Gains (losses)	$ 116	$ (24)

Total monoline exposure, net of credit valuation adjustments, decreased $2.6 billion to $1.3 billion at December 31, 2011, driven by terminated monoline contracts and the reclassification of certain exposures. During 2011, we terminated all of our monoline contracts referencing super senior ABS CDOs and reclassified net monoline exposure with a carrying value of $1.3 billion ($4.7 billion gross receivable less impairment) at December 31, 2011 from derivative assets to other assets because of the inherent default risk. Because these contracts no longer provide a hedge benefit, they are no longer considered derivative trading instruments. This exposure relates to a single counterparty and is recorded at fair value based on current net recovery projections. The net recovery projections take into account the present value of projected payments expected to be received from the counterparty.

GWIM consists of three primary businesses: Merrill Lynch Global Wealth Management (MLGWM), U.S. Trust, Bank of America Private Wealth Management (U.S. Trust), and Retirement Services.

MLGWM's advisory business provides a high-touch client experience through a network of more than 17,000 financial advisors focused on clients with over $250,000 in total investable assets. MLGWM provides tailored solutions to meet our clients' needs through a full set of brokerage, banking and retirement products in both domestic and international locations.

U.S. Trust, together with MLGWM's Private Banking & Investments Group, provides comprehensive wealth management solutions targeted at wealthy and ultra-wealthy clients with investable assets of more than $5 million, as well as customized solutions to meet clients' wealth structuring, investment management, trust and banking needs, including specialty asset management services.

Retirement Services partners with financial advisors to provide institutional and personal retirement solutions, including investment management, administration, recordkeeping and custodial services for 401(k) pension, profit-sharing, equity award and non-qualified deferred compensation plans. Retirement Services also provides comprehensive investment advisory services to individuals, small to large corporations and pension plans.

In 2011, revenue from MLGWM was $13.5 billion, up eight percent from 2010, driven by an increase in asset management fees due to higher average market levels and long-term AUM flows, as well as higher net interest income. Revenue from U.S. Trust was $2.7 billion, which remained relatively unchanged from 2010, as an increase in asset management fees primarily from higher market levels was partially offset by lower net interest income. Revenue from Retirement Services was $1.0 billion, up 11 percent compared to 2010, primarily due to higher market levels.

GWIM results are impacted by the migration of clients and their related deposit and loan balances to or from Deposits, CRES and the ALM portfolio, as presented in the Migration Summary table. Migration in 2011 included the movement of balances to Merrill Edge, which is in Deposits. Subsequent to the date of the migration, the associated net interest income, noninterest income and noninterest expense are recorded in the business to which the clients migrated.

Net income increased $295 million, or 22 percent, to $1.6 billion in 2011 compared to 2010, driven by higher net interest income, higher asset management fees and lower credit costs, partially offset by higher noninterest expense. Net interest income increased $359 million, or six percent, to $6.0 billion as the impact of higher average deposit balances more than offset the impact of a lower rate environment. Noninterest income increased $718 million, or seven percent, to $11.8 billion, primarily due to higher asset management fees driven by higher average market levels in 2011 compared to 2010 and continued long-term AUM flows. The provision for credit losses decreased $248 million, or 38 percent, to $398 million, driven by improving portfolio trends. Noninterest expense increased $1.2 billion, or nine percent, to $14.4 billion due to increased volume-driven expenses and personnel costs associated with continued investment in the business.

Client Balances

The table below presents client balances which consist of AUM, client brokerage assets, assets in custody, client deposits, and loans and leases.

Client Balances by Type

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010
Assets under management	$ 647,186	$ 643,343
Brokerage assets	1,034,186	1,084,518
Assets in custody	107,889	114,721
Deposits	256,629	257,982
Loans and leases	103,489	100,724
Total client balances	$ 2,149,799	$ 2,181,288

The decrease in client balances was driven by lower broad based market levels at December 31, 2011 compared to December 31, 2010, partially offset by client inflows, particularly into long-term AUM.

(1) For presentation purposes, in segments where the total of liabilities and equity exceeds assets, which are generally deposit-taking segments, we allocate assets to those segments to match liabilities (i.e., deposits) and allocated equity. Such allocated assets were $462.2 billion and $612.2 billion for 2011 and 2010, and $521.7 billion and $478.5 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010. The offsetting net asset or liability amounts of less than total loans and leases in All Other.

(2) Represents the economic capital assigned to All Other as well as the remaining portion of equity not specifically allocated to the business segments. Allocated equity fluctuated due to excess capital not being assigned to the business segments.

n/m = not meaningful

All Other consists of two broad groupings Equity Investments and Other. Equity Investments includes GPI, Strategic and other investments, and Corporate Investments. Other includes liquidating businesses, merger and restructuring charges, ALM functions such as the residential mortgage portfolio and investment securities and related activities including economic hedges and gains/losses on structured liabilities, the impact of certain allocation methodologies and accounting hedge ineffectiveness. Other also includes certain residential mortgage and discontinued real estate loans that are managed by Legacy Asset Servicing within CRES. During 2011, we sold our Canadian consumer card business and we are evaluating our remaining international consumer card operations. As a result of these actions, we reclassified results from these businesses, including prior periods, from Card Services to All Other. For additional information on the other activities included in All Other, see Note 26 – Business Segment Information to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

All Other reported net income of $5.0 billion in 2011 compared to $1.5 billion in 2010 with the increase primarily due to higher noninterest income and lower merger and restructuring charges. Noninterest income increased due to positive fair value adjustments related to our own credit on structured liabilities of $3.3 billion in 2011 compared to $18 million in 2010. Equity investment income increased $2.5 billion as a result of a $6.5 billion gain from the sale of CCB shares (we currently hold approximately one percent of the outstanding common shares) partially offset by $1.1 billion of impairment charges on our merchant services joint venture and a decrease of $1.9 billion in GPI income. A non-cash, non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge of $581 million was taken during the fourth quarter of 2011 as a result of a change in the estimated value of the European consumer card business. The prior year included $1.2 billion of gains on the sales of certain strategic investments. The provision for credit losses decreased $150 million to $6.2 billion driven by lower balances due primarily to divestitures, improvements in delinquencies, collections and insolvencies in the non-U.S. credit card portfolio and continued run-off in the legacy Merrill Lynch commercial portfolio. These increases were largely offset by reserve additions to the Countrywide PCI discontinued real estate and residential mortgage portfolios and higher credit costs related to the non-PCI residential mortgage portfolio due primarily to the continuing decline in home prices.

The income tax benefit was $879 million compared to a benefit of $3.9 billion for 2010. The factors affecting taxes in All Other are discussed more fully in Financial Highlights – Income Tax Expense on page 34.

With the Merrill Lynch acquisition, we acquired a loan that is collateralized by U.S. super senior ABS CDOs with a current carrying value of $3.1 billion at December 31, 2011, down from $4.2 billion at December 31, 2010 primarily due to paydowns. The loan is recorded in All Other and all scheduled payments on the loan have been received to date. The loan matures in September 2023. For more information on our CDO exposure, see GBAM – Collateralized Debt Obligation and Monoline Exposure on page 51.

The tables below present the components of the equity investments in All Other at December 31, 2011 and 2010, and also a reconciliation to the total consolidated equity investment income for 2011 and 2010.

Total equity investment income included in All Other	7,087	4 549
Total equity investment income included in the business segments	826	711
Total consolidated equity investment income	$ 7,869	$ 5 260

Equity investments included in All Other decreased $27.3 billion during 2011 consistent with our continued efforts to reduce non-core assets including reducing both higher risk-weighted assets and assets currently deducted or expected to be deducted under Basel III from regulatory capital. For more information, see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital Changes on page 73.

GPI is comprised of a diversified portfolio of investments in private equity, real estate and other alternative investments. These investments are made either directly in a company or held through a fund with related income recorded in equity investment income. GPI had unfunded equity commitments of $710 million and $1.4 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010 related to certain of these investments. The Corporation has actively reduced these commitments in a series of transactions involving its private equity fund investments.

Strategic and other investments included in All Other decreased $21.2 billion during 2011. The decrease was primarily the result of the sale of CCB shares and all of our investment in BlackRock during 2011. In connection with the sale of our investment in CCB, we recorded gains of $6.5 billion. At December 31, 2011 and 2010, we owned 2.0 billion shares and 25.6 billion shares, representing approximately one percent and 10 percent of CCB. Sales restrictions on the remaining 2.0 billion CCB shares continue until August 2013 and accordingly these shares are carried at cost. At December 31, 2011 and 2010, the cost basis of our total investment in CCB was $716 million and $9.2 billion, the carrying value was $716 million and $19.7 billion, and the fair value was $1.4 billion and $20.8 billion. During 2011 and 2010, we recorded dividends of $836 million and $535 million from CCB. During 2011, we sold our remaining ownership interest of approximately 13.6 million preferred shares, or seven percent of BlackRock, in connection with the sale, we recorded a gain of $377 million. For more information, see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

During 2011, we recorded $1.1 billion of impairment charges on our merchant services joint venture. The joint venture had a carrying value of $3.4 billion and $4.7 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010, with the reduction in carrying value primarily the result of the impairment charges. The impairment charges were based on the ongoing financial performance of the joint venture and updated forecasts of its long-term financial performance. Because of the recent transfer of the joint venture investment from GBAM to Global Commercial Banking, the impairment charges were recorded in All Other. For additional information, see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations

We have contractual obligations to make future payments on debt and lease agreements. Additionally, in the normal course of business, we enter into contractual arrangements whereby we commit to future purchases of products or services from unaffiliated parties. Obligations that are legally binding agreements whereby we agree to purchase products or services with a specific minimum quantity defined at a fixed, minimum or variable price over a specified period of time are defined as purchase obligations. Included in purchase obligations are commitments to purchase loans of $2.5 billion and vendor contracts of $15.7 billion. The most significant vendor contracts include communication services, processing services and software contracts. Other long-term liabilities include our contractual funding obligations related to the Qualified Pension Plans, Non-U.S. Pension Plans, Nonqualified and Other Pension Plans and Postretirement Health and Life Plans (the Plans). Obligations to the Plans are based on the current and projected obligations of the Plans' participant populations, the Plans' performance, the Plans' assets and any participant contributions, if applicable. During 2011 and 2010, we contributed $287 million and $395 million to the Plans, and we expect to make at least $337 million of contributions during 2012.

Debt, lease, equity and other obligations are more fully discussed in Note 13 – Long-term Debt and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements. The Plans are more fully discussed in Note 19 – Employee Benefit Plans to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

We enter into commitments to extend credit, such as loan commitments, standby letters of credit (SBLCs) and commercial letters of credit, to meet the financing needs of our customers. For a summary of the total unfunded, off-balance sheet credit extension commitment amounts by expiration date, see the table in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Representations and Warranties

We securitize first-lien residential mortgage loans generally in the form of MBS guaranteed by the GSEs or by Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) in the case of the FHA-insured, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA)-guaranteed and Rural Housing Service-guaranteed mortgage loans. In addition, in prior years, legacy companies and certain subsidiaries sold pools of first-lien residential mortgage loans and home equity loans as private-label securitizations (in certain of these securitizations, monolines or financial guarantee providers insured all or some of the securities) or in the form of whole loans. In connection with these transactions, we or our subsidiaries or legacy companies make or have made various representations and warranties. Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in the requirement to repurchase mortgage loans or to otherwise make whole or provide other remedies to the GSEs, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), with respect to FHA-insured loans, VA, whole-loan buyers, securitization trusts, monoline insurers or other financial guarantors (collectively, repurchases). In such cases, we would be exposed to any credit loss on the repurchased mortgage loans after accounting for any mortgage insurance (MI) or mortgage guaranty payments that we may receive.

Subject to the requirements and limitations of the applicable sales and securitization agreements, these representations and warranties can be enforced by the GSEs, HUD, VA, the whole-loan buyer, the securitization trustee or others as governed by the applicable agreement or, in certain first-lien and home equity securitizations where monoline insurers or other financial guarantee providers have insured all or some of the securities issued, by the monoline insurer or other financial guarantor. In the case of loans sold to parties other than the GSEs or GNMA, the contractual liability to repurchase typically arises only if there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or investors in the loan or of the monoline insurer or other financial guarantor (as applicable). Contracts with the GSEs do not contain equivalent language, while GNMA generally limits repurchases to loans that are not insured or guaranteed as required.

For additional information about accounting for representations and warranties and our representations and warranties claims and exposures, see Recent Events – Private-label Securitization Settlement with the Bank of New York Mellon, Complex Accounting Estimates – Representations and Warranties, Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements and Item 1A. Risk Factors.

Representations and Warranties Bulk Settlement Actions

Beginning in the fourth quarter of 2010, we have settled or entered into agreements to settle certain bulk representations and warranties claims with a trustee for certain legacy Countrywide private-label securitization trusts (the BNY Mellon Settlement), a monoline insurer (the Assured Guaranty Settlement) and with each of the GSEs (the GSE Agreements). We have vigorously contested any request for repurchase when we conclude that a valid basis for repurchase does not exist and will continue to do so in the future. However, in an effort to resolve these legacy mortgage-related issues, we have reached bulk settlements or agreements for bulk settlements, including settlement amounts which have been material, with the above-referenced counterparties in lieu of a loan-by-loan review process. We may reach other settlements in the future if opportunities arise on terms we believe to be advantageous. For a summary of the larger bulk settlement actions we have taken beginning in 2010 and the related impact on the representations and warranties provision and liability, see Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements. As indicated in Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements, these bulk settlements generally do not cover all transactions with the relevant counterparties or all potential claims that may arise, including in some instances securities law, fraud and servicing claims, and our liability in connection with the transactions and claims not covered by these settlements could be material.

Recent Developments Related to the BNY Mellon Settlement

Under an order entered by the court in connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement, potentially interested persons had the opportunity to give notice of intent to object to the settlement (including on the basis that more information was needed) until August 30, 2011. Approximately 44 groups or entities appeared prior to the deadline, two of those groups or entities have subsequently withdrawn from the proceeding, and one motion to intervene was denied. Certain of these groups or entities filed notices of intent to object, made motions to intervene, or both filed notices of intent to object and made motions to intervene. The parties filing motions to intervene include the Attorneys General of the states of New York and Delaware, whose motions to intervene were granted. Parties who filed notices stating that they wished to obtain more information about the settlement include the FDIC and the Federal Housing Finance Agency. We are not a party to the proceeding.

Certain of the motions to intervene and/or notices of intent to object allege various purported bases for opposition to the settlement, including challenges to the nature of the court proceeding and the lack of an opt-out mechanism, alleged conflicts of interest on the part of the institutional investor group and/or the Trustee, the inadequacy of the settlement amount, and the method of allocating the settlement amount among the Covered Trusts, while other motions do not make substantive objections but state that they need more information about the settlement. An investor opposed to the settlement removed the proceeding to federal court. On October 19, 2011, the federal court denied BNY Mellon's motion to remand the proceeding to state court. BNY Mellon, as well as the investors that have intervened in support of the BNY Mellon Settlement, petitioned to appeal the denial of this motion. On November 4, 2011, the district court entered a written order setting a discovery schedule, and discovery is ongoing. On December 27, 2011, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit accepted the appeal and stated in an amended scheduling order that, pursuant to statute, it would rule on the appeal by February 27, 2012.

It is not currently possible to predict how many of the parties who have appeared in the court proceeding will ultimately object to the BNY Mellon Settlement, whether the objections will prevent receipt of final court approval or the ultimate outcome of the court approval process, which can include appeals and could take a substantial period of time. In particular, conduct of discovery and the resolution of the objections to the settlement and any appeals could take a substantial period of time, and these factors could materially delay the timing of final court approval. Accordingly, it is not possible to predict when the court approval process will be completed.

If final court approval is not obtained by December 31, 2015, we and legacy Countrywide may withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement, if the Trustee consents. The BNY Mellon Settlement also provides that if Covered Trusts representing unpaid principal balance exceeding a specified amount are excluded from the final BNY Mellon Settlement based on investor objections or otherwise, we and legacy Countrywide have the option to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement pursuant to the terms of the BNY Mellon Settlement agreement.

There can be no assurance that final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement will be obtained, that all conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be satisfied or, if certain conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement permitting withdrawal are met, that we and legacy Countrywide will not determine to withdraw from the settlement. If final court approval is not obtained or if we and legacy Countrywide determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement in accordance with its terms, our future representations and warranties losses could be substantially different than existing accruals and the estimated range of possible loss over existing accruals described under Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Experience with Investors Other than Government-sponsored Enterprises on page 61. For more information about the risks associated with the BNY Mellon Settlement, see Item 1A. Risk Factors.

Unresolved Claims Status

At December 31, 2011, our total unresolved repurchase claims were approximately $14.3 billion compared to $10.7 billion at December 31, 2010. These repurchase claims include $1.7 billion in demands from investors in the Covered Trusts received in 2010 but otherwise do not include any repurchase claims related to the Covered Trusts. During 2011, we received $17.5 billion in new repurchase claims, including $14.3 billion in new repurchase claims submitted by the GSEs for both legacy Countrywide originations not covered by the GSE Agreements and legacy Bank of America originations, and $3.2 billion in repurchase claims related to non-GSE transactions. During 2011, $14.1 billion in claims were resolved primarily with the GSEs and through the Assured Guaranty Settlement. Of the claims resolved, $7.5 billion were resolved through rescissions and $6.6 billion were resolved through mortgage repurchase and make whole payments. The GSEs' repurchase requests, standards for rescission of repurchase requests and resolution processes have become increasingly inconsistent with the GSEs' own past conduct and our interpretation of contractual liabilities. These developments have resulted in an increase in claims outstanding from the GSEs. Claims outstanding from the monolines declined as a result of the Assured Guaranty Settlement, and new claims from other monolines declined significantly during 2011, which we believe was due in part to the monolines focusing recent efforts towards litigation. Outstanding claims from whole-loan private-label

securitization and other investors increased during 2011 primarily as a result of the increase in repurchase claims received from trustees in non-GSE transactions Generally the volume of unresolved repurchase claims from the FHA and VA for loans in GNMA guaranteed securities is not significant because the requests are limited in number and are typically resolved quickly For additional information concerning FHA-insured loans see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations - Other Mortgage-related Matters on page 63

In addition to repurchase claims we receive notices from mortgage insurance companies of claim denials cancellations or coverage rescission (collectively MI rescission notices) and the amount of such notices have remained elevated When there is disagreement with the mortgage insurer as to the resolution of a MI rescission notice meaningful dialogue and negotiation are generally necessary between the parties to reach a conclusion on an individual notice The level of engagement of the mortgage insurance companies varies and on-going litigation involving some of the mortgage insurance companies over individual and bulk rescissions or claims for rescission limits our ability to engage in constructive dialogue leading to resolution

For loans sold to GSEs or private-label securitization trusts (including those wrapped by the monoline bond insurers) a MI rescission may give rise to a claim for breach of the applicable representations and warranties depending on the governing sale contracts In those cases where the governing contracts contain a MI-related representation and warranty which upon rescission requires us to repurchase the affected loan or indemnify the investor for the related loss we realize the loss without the benefit of MI If we are required to repurchase a loan or indemnify the investor as a result of a different breach of representations and warranties and there has been a MI rescission or if we hold the loan for investment we realize the loss without the benefit of MI In addition mortgage insurance companies have in some cases asserted the ability to curtail MI payments which in these cases would reduce the MI proceeds available to reduce such loss on the loan While a legitimate MI rescission may constitute a valid basis for repurchase or other remedies under the GSE agreements and a small number of private-label MBS securitizations and a MI rescission notice may result in a repurchase request we believe MI rescission notices in and of themselves are not valid repurchase requests

At December 31 2011 we had approximately 90 000 open MI rescission notices compared to 72 000 at December 31 2010 Through December 31 2011 26 percent of the MI rescission notices received have been resolved Of those resolved 24 percent were resolved through our acceptance of the MI rescission 46 percent were resolved through reinstatement of coverage or payment of the claim by the mortgage insurance company and 30 percent were resolved on an aggregate basis through settlement policy commutation or similar arrangement As of December 31 2011 74 percent of the MI rescission notices we have received have not yet been resolved Of those not yet resolved 48 percent are implicated by ongoing litigation where no loan-level review is currently contemplated (nor required to preserve our legal rights) In this litigation the litigating mortgage insurance companies are also seeking bulk rescission of certain policies separate and apart from loan-by-loan denials or rescissions We are in the process of reviewing 11 percent of the remaining open MI rescission notices and we have reviewed and are contesting the MI rescission with respect to 89 percent of these remaining open MI rescission notices Of the remaining open MI rescission notices 29 percent are also the subject of ongoing litigation although at present these MI rescissions are being processed in a manner generally consistent with those not affected by litigation

Representations and Warranties Liability

The liability for representations and warranties and corporate guarantees is included in accrued expenses and other liabilities on the Consolidated Balance Sheet and the related provision is included in mortgage banking income (loss) The methodology used to estimate the liability for representations and warranties is a function of the representations and warranties given and considers a variety of factors which include depending on the counterparty actual defaults estimated future defaults historical loss experience estimated home prices other economic conditions estimated probability that a repurchase claim will be received consideration of whether presentation thresholds will be met number of payments made by the borrower prior to default and estimated probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased as well as other relevant facts and circumstances such as bulk settlements and identity of the counterparty or type of counterparty as we believe appropriate In the case of private-label securitizations our estimate considers implied repurchase experience based on the BNY Mellon Settlement adjusted to reflect differences between the Covered Trusts and the remainder of the population of private-label securitizations and assumes that the conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be met The estimate of the liability for representations and warranties is based on currently available information significant judgment and a number of factors including those set forth above that are subject to change

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the liability was $15 9 billion and $5 4 billion For 2011 the provision for representations and warranties and corporate guarantees was $15 6 billion compared to $6 8 billion in 2010 Of the $15 6 billion provision recorded in 2011 $8 6 billion was attributable to the BNY Mellon Settlement and $7 0 billion was related to other exposures The BNY Mellon Settlement led to the determination that we had sufficient experience to record a liability related to our exposure on certain other private-label securitizations This determination combined with higher estimated GSE repurchase rates were the primary drivers of the balance of the provision in 2011 GSE repurchase rates increased driven by higher than expected claims during 2011 including claims on loans that defaulted more than 18 months prior to the repurchase request and on loans where the borrower has made a significant number of payments (e g at least 25 payments) in each case in numbers that were not expected based on historical claims Changes to any one of these factors could significantly impact the estimate of the liability and could have a material adverse impact on our results of operations for any particular period

Estimated Range of Possible Loss

Government-sponsored Enterprises

Our estimated liability as of December 31 2011 for obligations under representations and warranties with respect to GSE exposures is necessarily dependent on and limited by our historical claims experience with the GSEs It includes our understanding of our agreements with the GSEs and projections of future defaults as well as certain other assumptions and judgmental factors Accordingly future provisions associated with obligations under representations and warranties made to the GSEs may be materially impacted if actual experiences are different from our assumptions The GSEs repurchase requests standards for rescission of repurchase requests and resolution processes have become increasingly inconsistent with the GSE s own past conduct and the Corporation s interpretation of its contractual obligations These developments have resulted in an increase in claims outstanding from the GSEs We intend to repurchase loans to the extent required under the contracts and standards that govern our relationships with the GSEs While we are seeking to resolve our differences with the GSEs concerning each party s interpretation of the requirements of the governing contracts whether we will be able to achieve a resolution of these differences on acceptable terms and timing thereof is subject to significant uncertainty

We are not able to predict changes in the behavior of the GSEs based on our past experiences Therefore it is not possible to reasonably estimate a possible loss or range of possible loss with respect to any such potential impact in excess of current accrued liabilities See Complex Accounting Estimates – Representations and Warranties on page 125 for information related to the sensitivity of the assumptions used to estimate our liability for obligations under representations and warranties

Non-Government-sponsored Enterprises

The population of private-label securitizations included in the BNY Mellon Settlement encompasses almost all legacy Countrywide first-lien private-label securitizations including loans originated principally in the 2004 through 2008 vintages For the remainder of the population of private-label securitizations we believe it is probable that other claimants in certain types of securitizations may come forward with claims that meet the requirements of the terms of the securitizations We have seen an increased trend in requests for loan files from private label securitization trustees and an increase in repurchase claims from private-label securitization trustees that meet the required standards We believe that the provisions recorded in connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement and the additional non-GSE representations and warranties provisions recorded in 2011 have provided for a substantial portion of our non-GSE representations and warranties exposure However it is reasonably possible that future representations and warranties losses may occur in excess of the amounts recorded for these exposures In addition we have not recorded any representations and warranties liability for certain potential monoline exposures and certain potential whole loan and other private-label securitization exposures We currently estimate that the range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31 2011 could be up to $5 billion over existing accruals The estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties does not represent a probable loss and is based on currently available information significant judgment and a number of assumptions including those set forth below that are subject to change

The methodology used to estimate the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding range of possible loss considers a variety of factors including our experience related to actual defaults projected future defaults historical loss experience estimated home prices and other economic conditions Among the factors that impact the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss are (1) contractual loss causation requirements (2) the representations and warranties provided and (3) the requirement to meet certain presentation thresholds The first factor is based on our belief that a non-GSE contractual liability to repurchase a loan generally arises only if the counterparties prove there is a breach of representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or all investors or the monoline insurer (as applicable) in a securitization trust and accordingly we believe that the repurchase claimants must prove that the alleged representations and warranties breach was the cause of the loss The second factor is related to the fact that non-GSE securitizations include different types of representations and warranties than those provided to the GSEs We believe the non-GSE securitizations representations and warranties are less rigorous and actionable than the explicit provisions of the comparable agreements with the GSEs without regard to any variations that may have arisen as a result of dealings with the GSEs The third factor is related to the fact that certain presentation thresholds need to be met in order for any repurchase claim to be asserted on the initiative of investors under the non-GSE agreements A securitization trustee may investigate or demand repurchase on its own action and most agreements contain a threshold for example 25 percent of the voting rights per trust that allows investors to declare a servicing event of default under certain circumstances or to request certain action such as requesting loan files that the trustee may choose to accept and follow exempt from liability provided the trustee is acting in good faith If there is an uncured servicing event of default and the trustee fails to bring suit during a 60-day period then under most agreements investors may file suit In addition to this most agreements also allow investors to direct the securitization trustee to investigate loan files or demand the repurchase of loans if security holders hold a specified percentage for example 25 percent of the voting rights of each tranche of the outstanding securities Although we continue to believe that presentation thresholds are a factor in the determination of probable loss given the BNY Mellon Settlement the estimated range of possible loss assumes that the presentation threshold can be met for all of the non-GSE securitization transactions

In addition in the case of private-label securitizations our estimate considers implied repurchase experience based on the BNY Mellon Settlement adjusted to reflect differences between the Covered Trusts and the remainder of the population of private-label securitizations and assumes that the conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be satisfied For additional information about the methodology used to estimate the non-GSE representations and warranties liability and the corresponding range of possible loss see Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Future provisions and/or ranges of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties may be significantly impacted if actual experiences are different from our assumptions in our predictive models including without limitation those regarding ultimate resolution of the BNY Mellon Settlement estimated repurchase rates economic conditions estimated home prices consumer and counterparty behavior and a variety of other judgmental factors Adverse developments with respect to one or more of the assumptions underlying the liability for representations and warranties and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss could result in significant increases to future provisions and this estimated range of possible loss For example if courts were to disagree with our interpretation that the underlying agreements require a claimant to prove that the representations and warranties breach was the cause of the loss it could significantly impact this estimated range of possible loss Additionally if recent court rulings related to monoline litigation including one related to us that have allowed sampling of loan files instead of requiring a loan-by-loan review to determine if a representations and warranties breach has occurred are followed generally by the courts private-label securitization investors may view litigation as a more attractive alternative as compared to a loan-by-loan review For additional information regarding these issues see MBIA litigation in Litigation and Regulatory Matters in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements Finally although we believe that the representations and warranties typically given in non-GSE transactions are less rigorous and actionable than those given in GSE transactions we do not have significant loan-level experience in non-GSE transactions to measure the impact of these differences on the probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased

The liability for obligations under representations and warranties with respect to GSE and non-GSE exposures and the corresponding estimated range of possible loss for non-GSE representations and warranties exposures do not include any losses related to litigation matters disclosed in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements nor do they include any separate foreclosure costs and related costs assessments and compensatory fees or any possible losses related to potential claims for breaches of performance of servicing obligations (except as such losses are included as potential costs of the BNY Mellon Settlement) potential securities law or fraud claims or potential indemnity or other claims against us including claims related to loans insured by the FHA We are not able to reasonably estimate the amount of any possible loss with respect to any such servicing securities law (except to the extent reflected in the aggregate range of possible loss for litigation and regulatory matters disclosed in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements) fraud or other claims against us however such loss could be material

Government-sponsored Enterprises Experience

Our current repurchase claims experience with the GSEs is predominantly concentrated in the 2004 through 2008 origination vintages where we believe that our exposure to representations and warranties liability is most significant Our repurchase claims experience related to loans originated prior to 2004 has not been significant and we believe that the changes made to our operations and underwriting policies have reduced our exposure related to loans originated after 2008

Bank of America and legacy Countrywide sold approximately $1 1 trillion of loans originated from 2004 through 2008 to the GSEs As of December 31 2011 11 percent of the loans in these vintages have defaulted or are 180 days or more past due (severely delinquent) At least 25 payments have been made on approximately 65 percent of severely delinquent or defaulted loans Through December 31 2011 we have received $32 4 billion in repurchase claims associated with these vintages representing approximately three percent of the loans sold to the GSEs in these vintages Including the agreement reached with FNMA on December 31 2010 we have resolved $25 7 billion of these claims with a net loss experience of approximately 31 percent The claims resolved and the loss rate do not include $839 million in claims extinguished as a result of the agreement with FHLMC due to the global nature of the agreement and specifically the absence of a formal apportionment of the agreement amount between current and future claims Our collateral loss severity rate on approved repurchases has averaged approximately 45 to 55 percent

Table 11 highlights our experience with the GSEs related to loans originated from 2004 through 2008 Outstanding GSE claims increased to $6 3 billion primarily attributable to $14 3 billion in new repurchase claims submitted by the GSEs for both legacy Countrywide originations not covered by the GSE Agreements and legacy Bank of America originations The high level of new claims was partially offset by the resolution of claims with the GSEs

The GSEs repurchase requests standards for rescission of repurchase requests and resolution processes have become increasingly inconsistent with their past conduct as well as our interpretation of our contractual obligations Notably in recent periods we have been experiencing elevated levels of new claims from the GSEs including claims on loans on which borrowers have made a significant number of payments (e g at least 25 payments) or on loans which had defaulted more than 18 months prior to the repurchase request in each case in numbers that were not expected based on historical experience Also the criteria and the processes by which the GSEs are ultimately willing to resolve claims have changed in ways that are unfavorable to us These developments have resulted in an increase in claims outstanding from the GSEs We intend to repurchase loans to the extent required under the contracts and standards that govern our relationships with the GSEs While we are seeking to resolve our differences with the GSEs concerning each party's interpretation of the requirements of the governing contracts whether we will be able to achieve a resolution of these differences on acceptable terms and timing thereof is subject to significant uncertainty

Beginning in February 2012 we are no longer delivering purchase money and non-MHA refinance first lien residential mortgage products into FNMA MBS pools because of the expiration and mutual non-renewal of certain contractual delivery commitments and variances that permit efficient delivery of such loans to FNMA While we continue to have a valid agreement with FNMA permitting the delivery of purchase money and non-MHA refinance first lien residential mortgage products without such contractual variances the delivery of such products without contractual delivery commitments and variances would involve time and expense to implement the necessary operational and systems changes and otherwise present practical operational issues The non-renewal of these variances was influenced in part by our ongoing differences with FNMA in other contexts including repurchase claims We do not expect this change to have a material impact on our CRES business as we expect to rely on other sources of liquidity to actively extend mortgage credit to our customers including continuing to deliver such products into FHLMC MBS pools Additionally we continue to deliver MHA refinancing products into FNMA MBS pools and continue to engage in dialogue to attempt to address these differences

On June 30 2011 FNMA issued an announcement requiring servicers to report effective October 1 2011 all MI rescission notices with respect to loans sold to FNMA The announcement also confirmed FNMA's view of its position that a mortgage insurance company's issuance of a MI rescission notice constitutes a breach of the lender's representations and warranties and permits FNMA to require the lender to repurchase the mortgage loan or promptly remit a make-whole payment covering FNMA's loss even if the lender is contesting the MI rescission notice A related announcement included a ban on bulk settlements with mortgage insurers that provide for loss sharing in lieu of rescission According to FNMA's announcement through June 30 2012 lenders have 90 days to appeal FNMA's repurchase request and 30 days (or such other time frame specified by FNMA) to appeal after that date According to FNMA's announcement in order to be successful in its appeal a lender must provide documentation confirming reinstatement or continuation of coverage This announcement could result in more repurchase requests from FNMA than the assumptions in our estimated liability contemplate We also expect that in many cases (particularly in the context of individual or bulk rescissions being contested through litigation) we will not be able to resolve MI rescission notices with the mortgage insurance companies before the expiration of the appeal period prescribed by the FNMA announcement We have informed FNMA that we do not believe that the new policy is valid under our contracts with FNMA and that we do not intend to repurchase loans under the terms set forth in the new policy Our pipeline of outstanding repurchase claims from the GSEs resulting solely on MI rescission notices has increased during 2011 by $935 million to $1 2 billion at December 31 2011 If we are required to abide by the terms of the new FNMA policy our representations and warranties liability will likely increase

Experience with Investors Other than Government-sponsored Enterprises

In prior years legacy companies and certain subsidiaries have sold pools of first-lien mortgage loans and home equity loans as private-label securitizations or in the form of whole loans As detailed in Table 12 legacy companies and certain subsidiaries sold loans originated from 2004 through 2008 with an original principal balance of $963 billion to investors other than GSEs (although the GSEs are investors in certain private-label securitizations) of which approximately $506 billion in principal has been paid and $239 billion has defaulted or are severely delinquent at December 31 2011

As it relates to private-label securitizations a contractual liability to repurchase mortgage loans generally arises only if counterparties prove there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or all investors in a securitization trust or of the monoline insurer or other financial guarantor (as applicable) We believe that the longer a loan performs the less likely it is that an alleged representations and warranties breach had a material impact on the loan's performance or that a breach even exists Because the majority of the borrowers in this population would have made a significant number of payments if they are not yet 180 days or more past due we believe that the principal balance at the greatest risk for repurchase claims in this population of private-label securitization investors is a combination of loans that have already defaulted and those that are currently severely delinquent Additionally the obligation to repurchase loans also requires that counterparties have the contractual right to demand repurchase of the loans (presentation thresholds) While we believe the agreements for private-label securitizations generally contain less rigorous representations and warranties and place higher burdens on investors seeking repurchases than the explicit provisions of the comparable agreements with the GSEs without regard to any variations that may have arisen as a result of dealings with the GSEs the agreements generally include a representation that underwriting practices were prudent and customary

Any amounts paid related to repurchase claims from a monoline insurer are paid to the securitization trust and are applied in accordance with the terms of the governing securitization documents which may include use by the securitization trust to repay any outstanding monoline advances or reduce future advances from the monolines To the extent that a monoline has not advanced funds or does not anticipate that it will be required to advance funds to the securitization trust the likelihood of receiving a repurchase claim from a monoline may be reduced as the monoline would receive limited or no benefit from the payment of repurchase claims Moreover some monolines are not currently performing their obligations under the financial guaranty policies they issued which may in certain circumstances impact their ability to present repurchase claims although in those circumstances investors may be able to bring claims if contractual thresholds are met

Table 12 details the population of loans originated between 2004 and 2008 and the population of loans sold as whole loans or in non agency securitizations by entity and product together with the defaulted and severely delinquent loans stratified by the number of payments the borrower made prior to default or becoming severely delinquent at December 31 2011 As shown in Table 12 at least 25 payments have been made on approximately 63 percent of the defaulted and severely delinquent loans We believe many of the defaults observed in these securitizations have been and continue to be driven by external factors like the substantial depreciation in home prices persistently high unemployment and other negative economic trends diminishing the likelihood that any loan defect (assuming one exists at all) was the cause of a loan s default As of December 31 2011 approximately 25 percent of the loans sold to non-GSEs that were originated between 2004 and 2008 have defaulted or are severely delinquent Of the original principal balance for Countrywide $409 billion is included in the BNY Mellon Settlement

Monoline Insurers

Legacy companies sold $184 5 billion of loans originated between 2004 and 2008 into monoline-insured securitizations which are included in Table 12 including $103 9 billion of first lien mortgages and $80 6 billion of home equity mortgages Of these balances $45 9 billion of the first-lien mortgages and $50 4 billion of the home equity mortgages have been paid in full and $36 3 billion of the first-lien mortgages and $16 7 billion of the home equity mortgages have defaulted or are severely delinquent at December 31 2011 At least 25 payments have been made on approximately 60 percent of the defaulted and severely delinquent loans Of the first-lien mortgages sold $39 1 billion or 38 percent were sold as whole loans to other institutions which subsequently included these loans with those of other originators in private-label securitization transactions in which the monolines typically insured one or more securities Through December 31 2011 we have received $6 0 billion of representations and warranties claims related to the monoline-insured transactions Of these repurchase claims $2 0 billion were resolved through the Assured Guaranty Settlement $813 million were resolved through repurchase or indemnification with losses of $703 million and $138 million were rescinded by the investor or paid in full The majority of these resolved claims related to home equity mortgages Experience with most of the monoline insurers has varied in terms of process and experience with these counterparties has not been predictable

At December 31 2011 for loans originated between 2004 and 2008 the unpaid principal balance of loans related to unresolved monoline repurchase claims was $3 1 billion substantially all of which we have reviewed and declined to repurchase based on an assessment of whether a material breach exists At December 31 2011 the unpaid principal balance of loans in these vintages for which the monolines had requested loan files for review but for which no repurchase claim had been received was $6 1 billion excluding loans that had been paid in full and file requests for loans included in the trusts settled with Assured Guaranty There will likely be additional requests for loan files in the future leading to repurchase claims

We have had limited experience with the monoline insurers other than Assured Guaranty in the repurchase process as each of these monoline insurers has instituted litigation against legacy Countrywide and/or Bank of America which limits our ability to enter into constructive dialogue with these monolines to resolve the open claims It is not possible at this time to reasonably estimate probable future repurchase obligations with respect to those monolines with whom we have limited repurchase experience and therefore no representations and warranties liability has been recorded in connection with these monolines other than a liability for repurchase claims where we have determined that there are valid loan defects Our estimated range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31 2011 included possible losses related to these monoline insurers

Whole Loans and Private-label Securitizations

Legacy entities and to a lesser extent Bank of America sold loans to investors as whole loans or via private-label securitizations The majority of the loans sold were included in private-label securitizations including third-party sponsored transactions The loans sold with total principal balance of $778 2 billion included in Table 12 were originated between 2004 and 2008 of which $409 4 billion have been paid in full and $186 1 billion are defaulted or severely delinquent at December 31 2011 In connection with these transactions we provided representations and warranties and the whole-loan investors may retain those rights even when the whole loans were aggregated with other collateral into private-label securitizations sponsored by the whole-loan investors At least 25 payments have been made on approximately 64 percent of the defaulted and severely delinquent loans We have received approximately $10 9 billion of representations and warranties claims from whole-loan investors and private-label securitization investors related to these vintages including $6 1 billion from whole loan investors $2 2 billion from private-label securitization trustees $1 7 billion in claims from private-label securitization investors in the Covered Trusts received in 2010 and $819 million from one private-label securitization counterparty which were submitted prior to 2008 In private-label securitizations certain representation thresholds need to be met in order for any repurchase claim to be asserted by the investors The majority of the claims that we have received outside of those from the GSEs and monolines are from third party whole-loan investors However the amount of claims received from private-label securitization trustees that meet the required standards has been increasing In 2011 we received $2 1 billion of repurchase claims from private-label securitization trustees In addition there has been an increase in requests for loan files from private-label securitization trustees as well as requests for tolling agreements to toll the applicable statutes of limitation relating to representations and warranties claims and we believe it is likely that these requests will lead to an increase in repurchase claims from private-label securitization trustees that meet the required standards

We have resolved $6 1 billion of the claims received from whole-loan investors and private-label securitization investors with losses of $1 4 billion Approximately $2 8 billion of these claims were resolved through repurchase or indemnification and $3 3 billion were rescinded by the investor Claims outstanding related to these vintages totaled $4 8 billion including $2 8 billion that have been reviewed where it is believed a valid defect has not been identified which would constitute an actionable breach of representations and warranties and $2 0 billion that are in the process of review

Certain whole-loan investors have engaged with us in a consistent repurchase process and we have used that experience to record a liability related to existing and future claims from such counterparties The BNY Mellon Settlement led to the determination in the second quarter of 2011 that we had sufficient experience to record a liability related to our exposure on certain other private-label securitizations However the BNY Mellon Settlement did not provide sufficient experience related to certain private-label securitizations sponsored by third-party whole-loan investors As it relates to certain private-label securitizations sponsored by third-party whole-loan investors and certain other whole loan sales it is not possible to determine whether a loss has occurred or is probable and therefore no representations and warranties liability has been recorded in connection with these transactions Our estimated range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure as of December 31 2011 included possible losses related to these whole loan sales and private-label securitizations sponsored by third party whole-loan investors

Private-label securitization investors generally do not have the contractual right to demand repurchase of loans directly or the right to access loan files The inclusion of the $1 7 billion in outstanding claims noted on page 63 does not mean that we believe these claims have satisfied the contractual thresholds required for these investors to direct the securitization trustee to take action or that these claims are otherwise procedurally or substantively valid One of these claimants has filed litigation against us relating to certain of these claims the claims in this litigation would be extinguished if there is final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement Additionally certain private-label securitizations are insured by the monoline insurers which are not reflected in these amounts regarding whole loan sales and private-label securitizations

Other Mortgage-related Matters

Servicing Matters and Foreclosure Processes

We service a large portion of the loans we or our subsidiaries have securitized and also service loans on behalf of third-party securitization vehicles and other investors Servicing agreements with the GSEs generally provide the GSEs with broader rights relative to the servicer than are found in servicing agreements with private investors For example each GSE typically claims the right to demand that the servicer repurchase loans that breach the seller s representations and warranties made in connection with the initial sale of the loans even if the servicer was not the seller The GSEs also claim that they have the contractual right to demand indemnification or loan repurchase for certain servicing breaches In addition the GSEs first mortgage seller/servicer guides provide for timelines to resolve delinquent loans through workout efforts or liquidation if necessary and purport to require the imposition of compensatory fees if those deadlines are not satisfied except for reasons beyond the control of the servicer although we believe that the governing contracts our course of dealing and collective past practices and understandings should inform resolution of these matters In addition many non-agency RMBS and whole-loan servicing agreements require the servicer to indemnify the trustee or other investor for or against failures by the servicer to perform its servicing obligations or acts or omissions that involve willful malfeasance bad faith or gross negligence in the performance of or reckless disregard of the servicer s duties It is not possible to reasonably estimate our liability with respect to potential servicing-related claims While we have recorded certain accruals for servicing-related claims the amount of potential liability in excess of existing accruals could be material

In October 2010 we voluntarily stopped taking residential mortgage foreclosure proceedings to judgment in states where foreclosure requires a court order following a legal proceeding (judicial states) and stopped foreclosure sales in all states in order to complete an assessment of related business processes We have resumed foreclosure sales in nearly all non-judicial states While we have resumed foreclosure proceedings in nearly all judicial states our progress on foreclosure sales in judicial states has been much slower than in non judicial states The pace of foreclosure sales in judicial states increased significantly by the fourth quarter of 2011 However there continues to be a backlog of foreclosure inventory in judicial states The implementation of changes in procedures and controls including loss mitigation procedures related to our ability to recover on FHA insurance related claims and governmental regulatory and judicial actions may result in continuing delays in foreclosure proceedings and foreclosure sales and create obstacles to the collection of certain fees and expenses in both judicial and non judicial foreclosures

We entered into a consent order with the Federal Reserve and BANA entered into a consent order with the OCC on April 13 2011 These consent orders require servicers to make several enhancements to their servicing operations including implementation of a single point of contact model for borrowers throughout the loss mitigation and foreclosure processes adoption of measures designed to ensure that foreclosure activity is halted once a borrower has been approved for a modification unless the borrower fails to make payments under the modified loan and implementation of enhanced controls over third-party vendors that provide default servicing support services In addition the OCC consent order required that we retain an independent consultant approved by the OCC to conduct a review of all foreclosure actions pending or foreclosure sales that occurred between January 1 2009 and December 31 2010 and submit a plan to the OCC to remediate all financial injury to borrowers caused by any deficiencies identified through the review The review is comprised of two parts a sample file review conducted by the independent consultant which began in October 2011 and file reviews by the independent consultant based upon requests for review from customers with in-scope foreclosures We began outreach to those customers in November 2011 and additional outreach efforts are underway Because the review process is available to a large number of potentially eligible borrowers and involves an examination of many details and documents each review could take several months to complete We cannot yet accurately determine how many borrowers will ultimately request a review how many borrowers will meet the eligibility requirements or how much in compensation might ultimately be paid to eligible borrowers

We continue to be subject to additional borrower and non-borrower litigation and governmental and regulatory scrutiny related to our past and current servicing and foreclosure activities including those claims not covered by the Servicing Resolution Agreements defined below This scrutiny may extend beyond our pending foreclosure matters to issues arising out of alleged irregularities with respect to previously completed foreclosure activities The current environment of heightened regulatory scrutiny may subject us to inquiries or investigations that could significantly adversely affect our reputation and result in material costs to us

Servicing Resolution Agreements

On February 9 2012 we reached agreements in principle (collectively the Servicing Resolution Agreements) with (1) the DOJ various federal regulatory agencies and 49 state attorneys general to resolve federal and state investigations into certain origination servicing and foreclosure practices (the Global AIP) (2) the Federal Housing Administration (the FHA) to resolve certain claims relating to the origination of FHA insured mortgage loans primarily by Countrywide prior to and for a period following our acquisition of that lender (the FHA AIP) and (3) each of the Federal Reserve and the OCC regarding civil monetary penalties related to conduct that was the subject of consent orders entered into with the banking regulators in April 2011 (the Consent Order AIPs) The Servicing Resolution Agreements are subject to ongoing discussions among the parties and completion and execution of definitive documentation as well as required regulatory and court approvals There can be no assurance as to when or whether binding settlement agreements will be reached that they will be on terms consistent with the Servicing Resolution Agreements or as to when or whether the necessary approvals will be obtained and the settlements will be finalized

The Global AIP calls for the establishment of certain uniform servicing standards upfront cash payments of approximately $1 9 billion to the state and federal governments and for borrower restitution approximately $7 6 billion in borrower assistance in the form of among other things principal reduction short sales deeds-in lieu of foreclosure and approximately $1 0 billion in refinancing assistance We could be required to make additional payments if we fail to meet our borrower assistance and refinancing assistance commitments over a three-year period In addition we could be required to pay an additional $350 million if we fail to meet certain first-lien principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period We also entered into agreements with several states under which we committed to perform certain minimum levels of principal reduction and related activities within those states as part of the Global AIP and under which we could be required to make additional payments if we fail to meet such minimum levels

The FHA AIP provides for an upfront cash payment of $500 million and the FHA would release us from all claims arising from loans originated on or before April 30 2009 that were submitted for FHA insurance claim payments prior to January 1 2012 and from multiple damages and penalties for loans that were originated on or before April 30 2009 but had not been submitted for FHA insurance claim payment An additional $500 million would be payable if we fail to meet certain principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period

Pursuant to an agreement in principle the OCC agreed to hold in abeyance the imposition of a civil monetary penalty of $164 million Pursuant to a separate agreement in principle the Federal Reserve will assess a civil monetary penalty in the amount of $176 million against us Satisfying our payment borrower assistance and remediation obligations under the Global AIP will satisfy any civil monetary penalty obligations arising under these agreements in principle If however we do not make certain required payments or undertake certain required actions under the Global AIP the OCC will assess and the Federal Reserve will require us to pay the difference between the aggregate value of the payments and actions under these agreements in principle and the penalty amounts

Under the terms of the Global AIP, the federal and participating state governments would release us from further liability for certain alleged residential mortgage origination servicing and foreclosure deficiencies In settling origination issues related to FHA guaranteed loans originated on or before April 30 2009 the FHA would provide us and our affiliates a release for all claims with respect to such loans if an insurance claim had been submitted to the FHA prior to January 1 2012 and a release of multiple damages and penalties (but not single damages) if no such claim had been submitted

The financial impact of the Servicing Resolution Agreements is not expected to require any additional reserves over existing accruals as of December 31 2011 based on our understanding of the terms of the Servicing Resolution Agreements The refinancing assistance commitment under the Servicing Resolution Agreements is expected to be recognized as lower interest income in future periods as qualified borrowers pay reduced interest rates on loans refinanced Although we may incur additional operating costs (e g servicing costs) to implement parts of the Servicing Resolution Agreements in future periods it is expected that those costs will not be material

The Servicing Resolution Agreements do not cover claims arising out of securitization (including representations made to investors respecting MBS) criminal claims private claims by borrowers claims by certain states for injunctive relief or actual economic damages to borrowers related to the Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems Inc (MERS) and claims by the GSEs (including repurchase demands) among other items Failure to finalize the documentation related to the Servicing Resolution Agreements to obtain the required court and regulatory approvals to meet our borrower and refinancing commitments or other adverse developments with respect to the foregoing could have a material adverse effect on our financial condition and results of operations

Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc.

Mortgage notes assignments or other documents are often required to be maintained and are often necessary to enforce mortgage loans There has been significant public commentary regarding the common industry practice of recording mortgages in the name of MERS as nominee on behalf of the note holder and whether securitization trusts own the loans purported to be conveyed to them and have valid liens securing those loans We currently use the MERS system for a substantial portion of the residential mortgage loans that we originate including loans that have been sold to investors or securitization trusts A component of the OCC consent order requires significant changes in the manner in which we service loans identifying MERS as the mortgagee Additionally certain local and state governments have commenced legal actions against us MERS and other MERS members questioning the validity of the MERS model Other challenges have also been made to the process for transferring mortgage loans to securitization trusts asserting that having a mortgagee of record that is different than the holder of the mortgage note could "break the chain of title" and cloud the ownership of the loan In order to foreclose on a mortgage loan in certain cases it may be necessary or prudent for an assignment of the mortgage to be made to the holder of the note which in the case of a mortgage held in the name of MERS as nominee would need to be completed by a MERS signing officer As such our practice is to obtain assignments of mortgages from MERS prior to instituting foreclosure If certain required documents are missing or defective, or if the use of MERS is found not to be valid we could be obligated to cure certain defects or in some circumstances be subject to additional costs and expenses Our use of MERS as nominee for the mortgage may also create reputational risks for us

Impact of Foreclosure Delays

In 2011 we incurred $1 8 billion of mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs which included $1 3 billion for compensatory fees that we expect to be claimed by the GSEs as a result of foreclosure delays with the remainder being out-of-pocket costs that we do not expect to recover because of foreclosure delays We expect that mortgage-related assessments and waivers costs compensatory fees assessed by the GSEs and other costs associated with foreclosures will remain elevated as additional loans are delayed in the foreclosure process although we believe that the governing contracts our course of dealing and collective past practices and understandings should inform resolution of these matters We also expect additional costs related to resources necessary to perform the foreclosure process assessment and to implement other operational changes will continue This will likely result in continued higher noninterest expense including higher default servicing costs and legal expenses in CRES and has impacted and may continue to impact the value of our MSRs related to these serviced loans It is also possible that the delays in foreclosure sales may result in additional costs and expenses including costs associated with the maintenance of properties or possible home price declines while foreclosures are delayed In addition required process changes including those required under the consent orders with federal bank regulators are likely to result in further increases in our default servicing costs over the longer term Finally, the time to complete foreclosure sales may continue to be protracted which may result in a greater number of nonperforming loans and increased servicing advances and may impact the collectability of such advances and the value of our MSR asset MBS and real estate owned properties

An increase in the time to complete foreclosure sales also may increase the number of severely delinquent loans in our mortgage servicing portfolio result in increasing levels of consumer nonperforming loans and could have a dampening effect on net interest margin as nonperforming assets increase Accordingly delays in foreclosure sales including any delays beyond those currently anticipated our continued process enhancements including those required under the OCC and Federal Reserve consent orders and any issues that may arise out of alleged irregularities in our foreclosure process could significantly increase the costs associated with our mortgage operations

Mortgage-related Settlements – Servicing Matters

In connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement BANA has agreed to implement certain servicing changes The Trustee and BANA have agreed to clarify and conform certain servicing standards related to loss mitigation In particular the BNY Mellon Settlement would clarify that it is permissible to apply the same loss mitigation strategies to the Covered Trusts as are applied to BANA affiliates held-for investment (HFI) portfolios This portion of the agreement was effective in the second quarter of 2011 and is not conditioned on final court approval

BANA also agreed to transfer the servicing related to certain high-risk loans to qualified subservicers on a schedule that began with the signing of the BNY Mellon Settlement This servicing transfer protocol will reduce the servicing fees payable to BANA in the future Upon final court approval failure to meet the established benchmarking standards for loans not in subservicing arrangements can trigger the payment of agreed-upon fees Additionally we and legacy Countrywide have agreed to work to resolve with the Trustee certain mortgage documentation issues related to the enforceability of mortgages in foreclosure and to reimburse the related Covered Trust for any loss if BANA is unable to foreclose on the mortgage and the Covered Trust is not made whole by a title policy because of these documentation issues These agreements will terminate if final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement is not obtained although we could still have exposure under the pooling and servicing agreements related to the mortgages in the Covered Trusts for these documentation issues

We estimate that the costs associated with additional servicing obligations under the BNY Mellon Settlement contributed $400 million to the 2011 valuation charge related to the MSR asset The additional servicing actions are consistent with the consent orders with the OCC and the Federal Reserve

In addition in connection with the Servicing Resolution Agreements BANA has agreed to implement certain additional servicing changes The uniform servicing standards established under the Servicing Resolution Agreements are broadly consistent with the residential mortgage servicing practices imposed by the OCC consent order however they are more prescriptive and cover a broader range of our residential mortgage servicing activities These standards are intended to strengthen procedural safeguards and documentation requirements associated with foreclosure bankruptcy and loss mitigation activities as well as addressing the imposition of fees and the integrity of documentation with a goal of ensuring greater transparency for borrowers These uniform servicing standards also obligate us to implement compliance processes reasonably designed to provide assurance of the achievement of these objectives Compliance with the uniform servicing standards will be assessed by a monitor based on the measurement of outcomes with respect to these objectives Implementation of these uniform servicing standards is expected to incrementally increase costs associated with the servicing process but is not expected to result in material delays or dislocation in the performance of our mortgage servicing obligations including the completion of foreclosures

Regulatory Matters

See Item 1A Risk Factors and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information regarding regulatory matters and risks

Financial Reform Act

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Financial Reform Act) which was signed into law on July 21 2010 enacts sweeping financial regulatory reform and has altered and will continue to alter the way in which we conduct certain business increase our costs and reduce our revenues Many aspects of the Financial Reform Act remain subject to final rulemaking and will take effect over several years making it difficult to anticipate the precise impact on the Corporation our customers or the financial services industry

Debit Interchange Fees

On June 29 2011 the Federal Reserve adopted a final rule with respect to the Durbin Amendment effective on October 1 2011 which among other things established a regulatory cap for many types of debit interchange transactions to equal no more than 21 cents plus five bps of the value of the transaction The Federal Reserve also adopted a rule to allow a debit card issuer to recover one cent per transaction for fraud prevention purposes if the issuer complies with certain fraud related requirements with which we are currently in compliance The Federal Reserve also approved rules governing routing and exclusivity requiring issuers to offer two unaffiliated networks for routing transactions on each debit or prepaid product which are effective April 1 2012 For additional information see Card Services on page 41

Limitations on Proprietary Trading

On October 11 2011 the Federal Reserve OCC FDIC and Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) representing four of the five regulatory agencies charged with promulgating regulations implementing limitations on proprietary trading as well as the sponsorship of or investment in hedge funds and private equity funds (the Volcker Rule) established by the Financial Reform Act released for comment proposed implementing regulations On January 11 2012 the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) the fifth agency released for comment its proposed regulations under the Volcker Rule The proposed regulations include clarifications to the definition of proprietary trading and distinctions between permitted and prohibited activities However in light of the complexity of the proposed regulations and the large volume of comments received (the proposal requested comments on over 1 300 questions on 400 different topics) it is not possible to predict the content of the final regulations or when they will be issued

The statutory provisions of the Volcker Rule will become effective on July 21 2012 whether or not the final regulations are adopted and it gives certain financial institutions two years from the effective date with opportunities for additional extensions to bring activities and investments into compliance Although GBAM exited its stand-alone proprietary trading business as of June 30 2011 in anticipation of the Volcker Rule and further to our initiative to optimize our balance sheet the ultimate impact of the Volcker Rule on us remains uncertain However based upon the content of the proposed regulations it is possible that the implementation of the Volcker Rule could limit or restrict our remaining trading activities Implementation of the Volcker Rule could also limit or restrict our ability to sponsor and hold ownership interests in hedge funds private equity funds and other subsidiary operations increase our operational and compliance costs reduce our trading revenues and adversely affect our results of operations For additional information about our trading business see GBAM on page 49

The Financial Reform Act includes measures to broaden the scope of derivative instruments subject to regulation by requiring clearing and exchange trading of certain derivatives imposing new capital margin reporting registration and business conduct requirements for certain market participants and imposing position limits on certain OTC derivatives The Financial Reform Act required regulators to promulgate the rulemakings necessary to implement these regulations by July 16 2011 However the rulemaking process was not completed as of this date and is not expected to conclude until well into 2012 Further the regulators granted temporary relief from certain requirements that would have taken effect on July 16 2011 absent any rulemaking The SEC temporary relief is effective until final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The CFTC temporary relief is effective until the earlier of July 16 2012 or the date on which final rules relevant to each requirement become effective The ultimate impact of these derivatives regulations and the time it will take to comply continues to remain uncertain The final regulations will impose additional operational and compliance costs on us and may require us to restructure certain businesses thereby negatively impacting our revenues and results of operations

FDIC Deposit Insurance Assessments

In April 2011 a new regulation became effective that implements revisions to the assessment system mandated by the Financial Reform Act and increased our FDIC exposure The regulation was reflected in the June 30 2011 FDIC fund balance and in payments made beginning on September 30 2011 Among other things the regulation changed the assessment base for insured depository institutions from adjusted domestic deposits to average consolidated total assets during an assessment period less average tangible equity capital during that assessment period Additionally the FDIC has broad discretionary authority to increase assessments on large and highly complex institutions on a case by case basis Any future increases in required deposit insurance premiums or other bank industry fees could have an adverse impact on our financial condition and results of operations

Recovery and Resolution Planning

On October 17 2011 the Federal Reserve approved a rule that requires the Corporation and other bank holding companies with assets of $50 billion or more as well as companies designated as systemically important by the Financial Stability Oversight Council to periodically report to the FDIC and the Federal Reserve their plans for a rapid and orderly resolution in the event of material financial distress or failure

On January 17 2012 the FDIC approved a final rule requiring resolution plans for insured banks with total assets of $50 billion or more If the FDIC and the Federal Reserve determine that a company's plan is not credible and the company fails to cure the deficiencies in a timely manner then the FDIC and the Federal Reserve may jointly impose on the company or any of its subsidiaries more stringent capital leverage or liquidity requirements or restrictions on growth activities or operations The Corporation's initial plan is required to be submitted on or before July 1 2012 and updated annually Similarly in the U K the Financial Services Authority (FSA) has issued proposed rules requiring the submission of significant information about certain U K incorporated subsidiaries including information on intra group dependencies and legal entity separation to allow the FSA to develop resolution plans As a result of the FSA review we could be required to take certain actions over the next several years which could impose operational costs and potentially result in the restructuring of certain business and subsidiaries

Orderly Liquidation Authority

Under the Financial Reform Act where a systemically important financial institution such as the Corporation is in default or danger of default the FDIC may in certain circumstances be appointed receiver in order to conduct an orderly liquidation of such systemically important financial institution In such a case the FDIC could invoke a new form of resolution authority called the orderly liquidation authority instead of the U S Bankruptcy Code if the Secretary of the Treasury makes certain financial distress and systemic risk determinations The orderly liquidation authority is modeled in part on the Federal Deposit Insurance Act but also adopts certain concepts from the U S Bankruptcy Code

The orderly liquidation authority contains certain differences from the U S Bankruptcy Code Macroprudential systemic protection is the primary objective of the orderly liquidation authority subject to minimum threshold protections for creditors Accordingly in certain circumstances under the orderly liquidation authority the FDIC could permit payment of obligations determined to be systemically significant (e g short-term creditors or operating creditors) in lieu of the payment of other obligations (e g long term creditors) without the need to obtain creditors consent or prior court review Additionally under the orderly liquidation authority amounts owed to the U S government generally enjoy a statutory payment priority

Credit Risk Retention

On March 29 2011 federal regulators jointly issued a proposed rule regarding credit risk retention that would among other things require retention by sponsors of at least five percent of the credit risk of the assets underlying certain ABS and MBS securitizations and would limit the ability to transfer or hedge that credit risk The proposed rule as currently written would likely have an adverse impact on our ability to engage in many types of the MBS and ABS securitizations conducted in CRES GBAM and other business segments impose additional operational and compliance costs on us and negatively influence the value liquidity and transferability of ABS or MBS loans and other assets However it remains unclear what requirements will be included in the final rule and what the ultimate impact of the final rule will be on our CRES GBAM and other business segments or on our results of operations

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau

The Financial Reform Act established the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) to regulate the offering of consumer financial products or services under federal consumer financial laws In addition the CFPB was granted general authority to prevent covered persons or service providers from committing or engaging in unfair deceptive or abusive acts or practices under federal law in connection with any transaction with a consumer for a consumer financial product or service or the offering of a consumer financial product or service Pursuant to the Financial Reform Act on July 21 2011 certain federal consumer financial protection statutes and related regulatory authority were transferred to the CFPB Consequently certain federal consumer financial laws to which the Corporation is subject including but not limited to the Equal Credit Opportunity Act Home Mortgage Disclosure Act Electronic Fund Transfers Act Fair Credit Reporting Act Truth in Lending and Truth in Savings Acts will be enforced by the CFPB subject to certain statutory limitations On January 4 2012 the CFPB's first director was appointed and accordingly was vested with full authority to exercise all supervisory enforcement and rulemaking authorities granted to the CFPB under the Financial Reform Act including its supervisory powers over non-bank financial institutions such as pay-day lenders and other types of non-bank financial institutions

Certain Other Provisions

The Financial Reform Act also expands the role of state regulators in enforcing consumer protection requirements over banks and disqualifies trust preferred securities and other hybrid capital securities from Tier 1 capital Many of the provisions under the Financial Reform Act have begun to be phased in or will be phased in over the next several months or years and will be subject both to further rulemaking and the discretion of applicable regulatory bodies For additional information regarding regulatory capital and other rules proposed by federal regulators see Capital Management – Regulatory Capital Changes on page 73

The Financial Reform Act will continue to have a significant and negative impact on our earnings through fee reductions higher costs and new restrictions as well as reductions to available capital The Financial Reform Act may also continue to have a material adverse impact on the value of certain assets and liabilities held on our balance sheet The ultimate impact of the Financial Reform Act on our businesses and results of operations will depend on regulatory interpretation and rulemaking as well as the success of any of our actions to mitigate the negative earnings impact of certain provisions For information on the impact of the Financial Reform Act on our credit ratings see Liquidity Risk on page 76

The terms of certain of our OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements of the Corporation provide that upon the occurrence of certain specified events such as a change in our credit ratings Merrill Lynch and other non bank affiliates may be required to provide additional collateral or to provide other remedies or our counterparties may have the right to terminate or otherwise diminish our rights under these contracts or agreements Following the recent downgrade of the credit ratings of the Corporation and other non-bank affiliates we have engaged in discussions with certain derivative and other counterparties regarding their rights under these agreements In response to counterparties inquiries and requests we have discussed and in some cases substituted derivative contracts and other trading agreements including naming BANA as the new counterparty Our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements to meet counterparties requests may be subject to certain limitations including counterparty willingness regulatory limitations on naming BANA as the new counterparty and the type or amount of collateral required It is possible that such limitations on our ability to substitute or make changes to these agreements including naming BANA as the new counterparty could adversely affect our results of operations

Other Matters

The Corporation has established guidelines and policies for managing capital across its subsidiaries The guidance for the Corporation s subsidiaries with regulatory capital requirements including branch operations of banking subsidiaries requires each entity to maintain satisfactory capital levels This includes setting internal capital targets for the U S bank subsidiaries to exceed 'well capitalized' levels The U K has adopted increased capital and liquidity requirements for local financial institutions including regulated U K subsidiaries of non-U K bank holding companies and other financial institutions as well as branches of non-U K banks located in the U K In addition the U K has proposed the creation and production of recovery and resolution plans commonly referred to as 'living wills' by such entities We are currently monitoring the impact of these initiatives

Managing Risk

Overview

Risk is inherent in every material business activity that we undertake Our business exposes us to strategic credit market liquidity compliance operational and reputational risk We must manage these risks to maximize our long-term results by ensuring the integrity of our assets and the quality of our earnings

Strategic risk is the risk that results from adverse business decisions ineffective or inappropriate business plans or failure to respond to changes in the competitive environment business cycles customer preferences product obsolescence regulatory environment business strategy execution and/or other inherent risks of the business including reputational risk Credit risk is the risk of loss arising from a borrower s or counterparty s inability to meet its obligations Market risk is the risk that values of assets and liabilities or revenues will be adversely affected by changes in market conditions such as interest rate movements Liquidity risk is the inability to meet contractual and contingent financial obligations on-or off balance sheet as they come due Compliance risk is the risk that arises from the failure to adhere to laws rules regulations or internal policies and procedures Operational risk is the risk of loss resulting from inadequate or failed internal processes people and systems or external events Reputational risk is the potential that negative publicity regarding an organization s conduct or business practices will adversely affect its profitability operations or customer base or result in costly litigation or require other measures Reputational risk is evaluated along with all of the risk categories and throughout the risk management process and as such is not discussed separately herein The following sections Strategic Risk Management on page 71 Capital Management on page 71 Liquidity Risk on page 76 Credit Risk Management on page 80 Market Risk Management on page 112 Compliance Risk Management and Operational Risk Management both on page 119 address in more detail the specific procedures measures and analyses of the major categories of risk that we manage

In choosing when and how to take risks we evaluate our capacity for risk and seek to protect our brand and reputation our financial flexibility the value of our assets and the strategic potential of the Corporation We intend to maintain a strong and flexible financial position We also intend to focus on maintaining our relevance and value to customers employees and shareholders As part of our efforts to achieve these objectives we continue to build a comprehensive risk management culture and to implement governance and control measures to strengthen that culture

We take a comprehensive approach to risk management We have a defined risk framework and clearly articulated risk appetite which is approved annually by the Corporation s Board of Directors (the Board) Risk management planning is integrated with strategic financial and customer/client planning so that goals and responsibilities are aligned across the organization Risk is managed in a systematic manner by focusing on the Corporation as a whole as well as managing risk across the enterprise and within individual business units products services and transactions and across all geographic locations We maintain a governance structure that delineates the responsibilities for risk management activities as well as governance and oversight of those activities

Executive management assesses and the Board oversees the risk-adjusted returns of each business segment Management reviews and approves strategic and financial operating plans and recommends to the Board for approval a financial plan annually By allocating economic capital to and establishing a risk appetite for a business segment we seek to effectively manage the ability to take on risk Economic capital is assigned to each business segment using a risk adjusted methodology incorporating each segment s stand-alone credit market interest rate and operational risk components and is used to measure risk-adjusted returns

In addition to reputational considerations businesses operate within their credit market compliance and operational risk standards and limits in order to adhere to the risk appetite These limits are based on analyses of risk and reward in each business and executive management is responsible for tracking and reporting performance measurements as well as any exceptions to guidelines or limits The Board monitors financial performance execution of the strategic and financial operating plans compliance with the risk appetite and the adequacy of internal controls through its committees

The Board has completed its review of the Risk Framework and the Risk Appetite Statement for the Corporation and both the Risk Framework and Risk Appetite Statement were approved in January 2012 The Risk Framework defines the accountability of the Corporation and its employees and the Risk Appetite Statement defines the parameters under which we will take risk Both documents are intended to enable us to maximize our long-term results and ensure the integrity of our assets and the quality of our earnings The Risk Framework is designed to be used by our employees to understand risk management activities including their individual roles and accountabilities It also defines how risk management is integrated into our core business processes and it defines the risk management governance structure including management s involvement The risk management responsibilities of the businesses governance and control functions and Corporate Audit are also clearly defined The risk management process includes four critical elements identify and measure risk mitigate and control risk monitor and test risk and report and review risk and is applied across all business activities to enable an integrated and comprehensive review of risk consistent with the Board s Risk Appetite Statement

Risk Management Processes and Methods

To support our corporate goals and objectives risk appetite and business and risk strategies we maintain a governance structure that delineates the responsibilities for risk management activities as well as governance and oversight of those activities by management and the Board All employees have accountability for risk management Each employee s risk management responsibilities falls into one of three major categories businesses governance and control and Corporate Audit

Business managers and employees are accountable for identifying managing and escalating attention to all risks in their business units including existing and emerging risks Business managers must ensure that their business activities are conducted within the risk appetite defined by management and approved by the Board The limits and controls for each business must be consistent with the Risk Appetite Statement Employees in client and customer facing businesses are responsible for day-to-day business activities including developing and delivering profitable products and services fulfilling customer requests and maintaining desirable customer relationships These employees are accountable for conducting their daily work in accordance with policies and procedures It is the responsibility of each employee to protect the Corporation and defend the interests of the shareholders

Governance and control functions are comprised of Global Risk Management Global Compliance Legal and the enterprise control functions and are tasked with independently overseeing and managing risk activities Global Compliance (which included Regulatory Relations) and Legal report to the Chief Legal Compliance and Regulatory Relations Executive Enterprise control functions consist of the Chief Financial Officer Group Global Technology and Operations Global Human Resources Global Marketing and Corporate Affairs

Global Risk Management is led by the Chief Risk Officer (CRO) The CRO leads senior management in managing risk is independent from the Corporation s business and enterprise control functions and maintains sufficient autonomy to develop and implement meaningful risk management measures This position serves to protect the Corporation and its shareholders The CRO reports to the Chief Executive Officer (CEO) and is the management team lead or a participant in Board-level risk governance committees The CRO has the mandate to ensure that appropriate risk management practices are in place and are effective and consistent with our overall business strategy and risk appetite Global Risk Management is comprised of two types of risk teams Enterprise risk teams and independent business risk teams which report to the CRO and are independent from the business and enterprise control functions

Enterprise risk teams are responsible for setting and establishing enterprise policies programs and standards assessing program adherence providing enterprise level risk oversight and reporting and monitoring for systemic and emerging risk issues In addition the Enterprise Risk Teams are responsible for monitoring and ensuring that risk limits are reasonable and consistent with the risk appetite These risk teams also carry out risk-based oversight of the enterprise control functions

Independent business risk teams are responsible for establishing policies limits standards controls metrics and thresholds within the defined corporate standards for the businesses to which they are aligned The independent business risk teams are also responsible for ensuring that risk limits and standards are reasonable and consistent with the risk appetite

Enterprise control functions are independent of the businesses and have risk governance and control responsibilities for enterprise programs In this role they are responsible for setting policies standards and limits providing risk reporting monitoring for systemic risk issues including existing and emerging and implementing procedures and controls at the enterprise and business levels for their respective control functions

The Corporate Audit function and the Corporate General Auditor maintain independence from the businesses and governance and control functions by reporting directly to the Audit Committee of the Board Corporate Audit provides independent assessment and validation through testing of key processes and controls across the Corporation Corporate Audit also provides an independent assessment of the Corporation s management and internal control systems Corporate Audit activities are designed to provide reasonable assurance that resources are adequately protected significant financial managerial and operating information is materially complete accurate and reliable and employees actions are in compliance with the Corporation s policies standards procedures and applicable laws and regulations

To assist the Corporation in achieving its goals and objectives risk appetite and business and risk strategies we utilize a risk management process that is applied across the execution of all business activities This risk management process which is an integral part of our Risk Framework enables the Corporation to review risk in an integrated and comprehensive manner across all risk categories and make strategic and business decisions based on that comprehensive view Corporate goals and objectives are established by management and management reflects these goals and objectives in our risk appetite which is approved by the Board and serves as a key driver for setting business and risk strategy

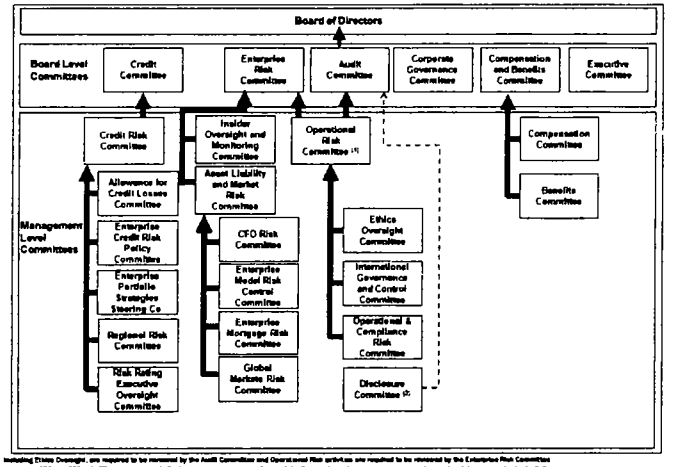
One of the key tools of the risk management process is the use of Risk and Control Self Assessments (RCSAs) RCSAs are the primary method for facilitating the management of Business Environment and Internal Control Factor data The end-to-end RCSA process incorporates risk identification and assessment of the control environment monitoring reporting and escalating risk quality assurance and data validation and integration with the risk appetite The RCSA process also incorporates documentation by either the business or governance and control functions of the business environment risks controls and monitoring and reporting This results in a comprehensive risk management view that enables understanding of and action on operational risks and controls for all of our processes products activities and systems

The formal processes used to manage risk represent a part of our overall risk management process Corporate culture and the actions of our employees are also critical to effective risk management Through our Code of Ethics we set a high standard for our employees The Code of Ethics provides a framework for all of our employees to conduct themselves with the highest integrity We instill a strong and comprehensive risk management culture through communications training policies procedures and organizational roles and responsibilities Additionally we continue to strengthen the link between the employee performance management process and individual compensation to encourage employees to work toward enterprise wide risk goals

Board Oversight of Risk

The Board comprised of a majority of independent directors including an independent Chairman of the Board oversees the management of the Corporation through a governance structure that includes Board committees and management committees The Board s standing committees that oversee the management of the majority of the risks faced by the Corporation include the Audit and Enterprise Risk Committees comprised of independent directors and the Credit Committee comprised of non-management directors This governance structure is designed to align the interests of the Board and management with those of our stockholders and to foster integrity throughout the Corporation

The chart below illustrates the inter-relationship between the Board Board committees and management committees with the majority of risk oversight responsibilities for the Corporation



[1] Comprehensive Risk activities including Ethics Oversight are required to be reviewed by the Audit Committee and Operational Risk activities are required to be reviewed by the Enterprise Risk Committee
[2] The Disclosure Committee assists the CEO and CFO in fulfilling their responsibility for the accuracy and timeliness of the Corporation s disclosures and reports the results of the process to the Audit Committee

Our Board s Audit Credit and Enterprise Risk Committees have the principal responsibility for assisting the Board with enterprise-wide oversight of the Corporation s management and handling of risk

Our Audit Committee assists the Board in the oversight of among other things the integrity of our consolidated financial statements our compliance with legal and regulatory requirements and the overall effectiveness of our system of internal controls Our Audit Committee also taking into consideration the Board s allocation of the review of risk among various committees of the Board discusses with management guidelines and policies to govern the process by which risk assessment and risk management are undertaken including the assessment of our major financial risk exposures and the steps management has taken to monitor and control such exposures

Our Credit Committee oversees among other things the identification and management of our credit exposures on an enterprise-wide basis our responses to trends affecting those exposures the adequacy of the allowance for credit losses and our credit related policies

Our Enterprise Risk Committee among other things oversees our identification of management of and planning for material risks on an enterprise-wide basis including market risk interest rate risk liquidity risk operational risk and reputational risk Our Enterprise Risk Committee also oversees our capital management and liquidity planning

Each of these committees regularly reports to our Board on risk-related matters within the committee s responsibilities which collectively provides our Board with integrated thorough insight about our management of our enterprise-wide risks At meetings of our Audit Credit and Enterprise Risk Committees and our Board directors receive updates from management regarding enterprise risk management including our performance against our risk appetite

Executive management develops for Board approval the Corporation s Risk Framework Risk Appetite Statement and financial operating plans Management monitors and the Board oversees through the Credit Enterprise Risk and Audit Committees financial performance execution of the strategic and financial operating plans compliance with the risk appetite and the adequacy of internal controls

Strategic Risk Management

Strategic risk is embedded in every business and is one of the major risk categories along with credit market liquidity compliance operational and reputational risks It is the risk that results from adverse business decisions ineffective or inappropriate business plans or failure to respond to changes in the competitive environment business cycles customer preferences product obsolescence regulatory environment business strategy execution and/or other inherent risks of the business including reputational and operational risk In the financial services industry strategic risk is elevated due to changing customer competitive and regulatory environments Our appetite for strategic risk is assessed within the context of the strategic plan with strategic risks selectively and carefully considered in the context of the evolving marketplace Strategic risk is managed in the context of our overall financial condition and assessed managed and acted on by the CEO and executive management team Significant strategic actions such as material acquisitions or capital actions require review and approval of the Board

Executive management approves a strategic plan every two to three years Annually executive management develops a financial operating plan that implements the strategic goals for that year and the Board reviews and approves the plan With oversight by the Board executive management ensures that the plans are consistent with the Corporation s strategic plan core operating tenets and risk appetite The following are assessed in their reviews forecasted earnings and returns on capital the current risk profile current capital and liquidity requirements staffing levels and changes required to support the plan stress testing results and other qualitative factors such as market growth rates and peer analysis At the business level as we introduce new products we monitor their performance to evaluate expectations (e g for earnings and returns on capital) With oversight by the Board executive management performs similar analyses throughout the year and evaluates changes to the financial forecast or the risk capital or liquidity positions as deemed appropriate to balance and optimize between achieving the targeted risk appetite shareholder returns and maintaining the targeted financial strength

We use proprietary models to measure the capital requirements for credit country market operational and strategic risks The economic capital assigned to each business is based on its unique risk exposures With oversight by the Board executive management assesses the risk-adjusted returns of each business in approving strategic and financial operating plans The businesses use economic capital to define business strategies price products and transactions and evaluate client profitability For additional information on how this measure is calculated see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38

Capital Management

Bank of America manages its capital position to ensure capital is sufficient to support our business activities and that capital risk and risk appetite are commensurate with one another ensure safety and soundness under adverse scenarios take advantage of growth and strategic opportunities maintain ready access to financial markets remain a source of strength for its subsidiaries and satisfy current and future regulatory capital requirements

To determine the appropriate level of capital we assess the results of our Internal Capital Adequacy Assessment Process (ICAAP) the current economic and market environment and feedback from investors rating agencies and regulators Based upon this analysis we set capital guidelines for Tier 1 common capital and Tier 1 capital to ensure we can maintain an adequate capital position in a severe adverse economic scenario We also target to maintain capital in excess of the capital required per our economic capital measurement process For additional information see Economic Capital on page 75 Management and the Board annually approve a comprehensive Capital Plan which documents the ICAAP and related results analysis and support for the capital guidelines and planned capital actions and capital adequacy assessment

The ICAAP incorporates capital forecasts stress test results economic capital qualitative risk assessments and assessment of regulatory changes We generate monthly regulatory capital and economic capital forecasts that are aligned to the most recent earnings balance sheet and risk forecasts We utilize quarterly stress tests to assess the potential impacts to our balance sheet earnings capital and liquidity for a variety of economic stress scenarios We perform qualitative risk assessments to identify and assess material risks not fully captured in the forecasts stress tests or economic capital Given the significant proposed regulatory capital changes we also regularly assess the potential capital impacts and monitor associated mitigation actions Management continuously assesses ICAAP results and provides documented quarterly assessments of the adequacy of the capital guidelines and capital position to the Board or its committees

Capital management is integrated into the risk and governance processes as capital is a key consideration in the development of the strategic plan risk appetite and risk limits Economic capital is allocated to each business unit and used to perform risk-adjusted return analysis at the business unit client relationship and transaction levels

Regulatory Capital

As a financial services holding company we are subject to the risk based capital guidelines (Basel I) issued by federal banking regulators At December 31 2011 we operated banking activities primarily under two charters BANA and FIA Card Services N A (FIA) Under these guidelines the Corporation and its affiliated banking entities measure capital adequacy based on Tier 1 common capital Tier 1 capital and Total capital (Tier 1 plus Tier 2 capital) Capital ratios are calculated by dividing each capital amount by risk-weighted assets Additionally Tier 1 capital is divided by adjusted quarterly average total assets to derive the Tier 1 leverage ratio

Tier 1 capital is calculated as the sum of "core capital elements " The predominate components of core capital elements are qualifying common stockholders equity and qualifying noncumulative perpetual preferred stock Also included in Tier 1 capital are qualifying trust preferred securities (Trust Securities) hybrid securities and qualifying non-controlling interest in subsidiaries which are subject to the rules governing restricted core capital elements " Goodwill other disallowed intangible assets disallowed deferred tax assets and the cumulative changes in fair value of all financial liabilities accounted for under the fair value option that are included in retained earnings and are attributable to changes in the company's own creditworthiness are deducted from the sum of the core capital elements Total capital is Tier 1 plus supplementary Tier 2 capital elements such as qualifying subordinated debt a limited portion of the allowance for loan and lease losses and a portion of net unrealized gains on AFS marketable equity securities Tier 1 common capital is not an official regulatory ratio but was introduced by the Federal Reserve during the Supervisory Capital Assessment Program in 2009 Tier 1 common capital is Tier 1 capital less preferred stock Trust Securities hybrid securities and qualifying non-controlling interest in subsidiaries

Risk-weighted assets are calculated for credit risk for all on- and off-balance sheet credit exposures and for market risk on trading assets and liabilities including derivative exposures Credit risk risk-weighted assets are calculated by assigning a prescribed risk weight to all on-balance sheet assets and to the credit equivalent amount of certain off-balance sheet exposures The risk-weight is defined in the regulatory rules based upon the obligor or guarantor type and collateral if applicable Off-balance sheet exposures include financial guarantees unfunded lending commitments letters of credit and derivatives Market risk risk-weighted assets are calculated using risk models for the trading account positions including all foreign exchange and commodity positions regardless of the applicable accounting guidance Under Basel I there are no risk-weighted assets calculated for operational risk Any assets that are a direct deduction from the computation of capital are excluded from risk-weighted assets and adjusted average total assets consistent with regulatory guidance

The Corporation has issued notes to certain unconsolidated corporate-sponsored trust companies which issued Trust Securities and hybrid securities In accordance with Federal Reserve guidance Trust Securities continue to qualify as Tier 1 capital with revised quantitative limits As a result the Corporation includes qualifying Trust Securities in Tier 1 capital The Financial Reform Act includes a provision under which the Corporation's outstanding Trust Securities in the aggregate amount of $16 1 billion (approximately 125 bps of Tier 1 capital) at December 31 2011 will be excluded from Tier 1 capital with the exclusion to be phased in incrementally over a three-year period beginning January 1 2013 This amount excludes $533 million of hybrid Trust Securities that are expected to be converted to preferred stock prior to the date of implementation The treatment of Trust Securities during the phase-in period is unknown and is subject to future rulemaking

For additional information on these and other regulatory requirements see Note 18 – Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Capital Composition and Ratios

Tier 1 common capital increased $1 6 billion to $126 7 billion at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 The increase was driven primarily by the sale of CCB shares the exchanges of preferred shares Trust Securities and hybrid securities for common stock and debt and the warrants issued in connection with the investment made by Berkshire partially offset by an increase in deferred tax assets disallowed for regulatory capital purposes The sales related to CCB increased Tier 1 common capital $6 4 billion or approximately 55 bps while the exchanges increased Tier 1 common capital $3 9 billion or approximately 29 bps The warrants related to Berkshire increased Tier 1 common capital approximately $2 1 billion or 15 bps The $8 1 billion increase in the deferred tax asset disallowance at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 was primarily due to the expiration of the longer look-forward period granted by regulators at the time of the Merrill Lynch acquisition and an increase in net deferred tax assets Tier 1 capital and Total capital decreased $4 4 billion and $14 5 billion at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 For additional information regarding the sale of our investment in CCB see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements For additional information regarding the exchanges and the investment made by Berkshire see Note 13 – Long-term Debt and Note 15 – Shareholders' Equity to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Risk-weighted assets decreased $172 billion to $1 284 billion at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 The decrease was driven in part by our sale of CCB shares and our Canadian card business and is consistent with our continued efforts to reduce non-core assets and legacy loan portfolios The Tier 1 common capital ratio the Tier 1 capital ratio and the Total capital ratio increased due to the decline in risk-weighted assets The Tier 1 leverage ratio increased compared to 2010 reflecting the decrease in Tier 1 capital and a reduction in adjusted quarterly average total assets

Regulatory Capital Changes

We manage regulatory capital to adhere to regulatory standards of capital adequacy based on our current understanding of the rules and the application of such rules to our business as currently conducted The regulatory capital rules as written by the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (Basel Committee) continue to evolve

We currently measure and report our capital ratios and related information in accordance with Basel I See Capital Management on page 71 for additional information Basel I has been subject to revisions which include final Basel II rules (Basel II) published in December 2007 by U S banking regulators and proposed Basel III rules (Basel III) published by the Basel Committee in December 2010 and further amended in July 2011 We are currently in the Basel II parallel period

On December 29, 2011 U S regulators issued a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPR) that would amend a December 2010 NPR on the Market Risk Rules This amended NPR is expected to increase the capital requirements for our trading assets and liabilities We continue to evaluate the capital impact of the proposed rules and currently anticipate that we will be in compliance with any final rules by the projected implementation date in late 2012

If implemented by U S banking regulators as proposed Basel III could significantly increase our capital requirements Basel III and the Financial Reform Act propose the disqualification of Trust Securities from Tier 1 capital with the Financial Reform Act proposing that the disqualification be phased in from 2013 to 2015 Basel III also proposes the deduction of certain assets from capital (deferred tax assets MSRs investments in financial firms and pension assets among others within prescribed limitations) the inclusion of accumulated OCI in capital increased capital for counterparty credit risk and new minimum capital and buffer requirements For additional information on deferred tax assets and MSRs see Note 21 – Income Taxes and Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights to the Consolidated Financial Statements The phase-in period for the capital deductions is proposed to occur in 20 percent increments from 2014 through 2018 with full implementation by December 31 2018 An increase in capital requirements for counterparty credit risk is proposed to be effective January 2013 The phase in period for the new minimum capital requirements and related buffers is proposed to occur between 2013 and 2019 U S banking regulators have not yet issued proposed regulations that will implement these requirements

Preparing for the implementation of the new capital rules is a top strategic priority and we expect to comply with the final rules when issued and effective We intend to continue to build capital through retaining earnings actively reducing legacy asset portfolios and implementing other capital related initiatives including focusing on reducing both higher risk-weighted assets and assets currently deducted or expected to be deducted under Basel III from capital We expect non-core asset sales to play a less prominent role in our capital strategy in future periods

On June 17 2011 U S banking regulators proposed rules requiring all large bank holding companies (BHCs) to submit a comprehensive capital plan to the Federal Reserve as part of an annual Comprehensive Capital Analysis and Review (CCAR) The proposed regulations require BHCs to demonstrate adequate capital to support planned capital actions such as dividends share repurchases or other forms of distributing capital CCAR submissions are subject to the review and approval of the Federal Reserve The Federal Reserve may require BHCs to provide prior notice under certain circumstances before making a capital distribution On January 5 2012 we submitted a capital plan to the Federal Reserve consistent with the proposed rules The capital plan includes the ICAAP and related results analysis and support for the capital guidelines and planned capital actions The ICAAP incorporates capital forecasts stress test results economic capital qualitative risk assessments and assessment of regulatory changes all of which influence the capital adequacy assessment

On July 19 2011 the Basel Committee published the consultative document "Globally systemic important banks Assessment methodology and the additional loss absorbency requirement" which sets out measures for global systemically important financial institutions including the methodology for measuring systemic importance the additional capital required (the SIFI buffer) and the arrangements by which they will be phased in As proposed the SIFI buffer would be met with additional Tier 1 common equity ranging from one percent to 2 5 percent and in certain circumstances 3 5 percent This will be phased in from 2016 through 2018 U S banking regulators have not yet provided similar rules for U S implementation of a SIFI buffer

Given that the U S regulatory agencies have issued neither proposed rulemaking nor supervisory guidance on Basel III significant uncertainty exists regarding the eventual impacts of Basel III on U S financial institutions including us These regulatory changes also require approval by the U S regulatory agencies of analytical models used as part of our capital measurement and assessment especially in the case of more complex models If these more complex models are not approved it could require financial institutions to hold additional capital which in some cases could be significant

Based on the assumed approval of these models and our current assessment of Basel III continued focus on capital management expectations of future performance and continued efforts to build a fortress balance sheet we currently anticipate that our Tier 1 common equity ratio will be between 7 25 percent and 7 50 percent by the end of 2012 assuming phase-in per the regulations at that time of all deductions scheduled to occur between 2013 and 2019

On December 20 2011 the Federal Reserve issued proposed rules to implement enhanced supervisory and prudential requirements and the early remediation requirements established under the Financial Reform Act The enhanced standards include risk-based capital and leverage requirements liquidity standards requirements for overall risk management single-counterparty credit limits stress test requirements and a debt to-equity limit for certain companies determined to pose a threat to financial stability Comments on the proposed rules are due by March 31 2012 The final rules are likely to influence our regulatory capital and liquidity planning process and may impose additional operational and compliance costs on us

BANA s Tier 1 capital ratio increased 96 bps to 11 74 percent and the Total capital ratio increased 91 bps to 15 17 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 The increase in the ratios was driven by $9 6 billion in earnings generated during 2011 The Tier 1 leverage ratio increased 82 bps to 8 65 percent benefiting from the improvement in Tier 1 capital combined with a $73 4 billion decrease in adjusted quarterly average total assets resulting from our continued efforts to reduce non-core assets and legacy loan portfolios

FIA s Tier 1 capital ratio increased 233 bps to 17 63 percent and the Total capital ratio increased 207 bps to 19 01 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 The Tier 1 leverage ratio increased 101 bps to 14 22 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 2010 The increase in ratios was driven by $5 7 billion in earnings generated during 2011 and a reduction in risk-weighted assets

During 2011 BANA paid dividends of $9 8 billion to Bank of America Corporation FIA returned capital of $7 0 billion to Bank of America Corporation during 2011 and is anticipated to return an additional $3 0 billion in 2012

Broker/Dealer Regulatory Capital

The Corporation s principal U S broker/dealer subsidiaries are Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith (MLPF&S) and Merrill Lynch Professional Clearing Corp (MLPCC) MLPCC is a fully-guaranteed subsidiary of MLPF&S and provides clearing and settlement services Both entities are subject to the net capital requirements of SEC Rule 15c3-1 Both entities are also registered as futures commission merchants and are subject to the CFTC Regulation 1 17

MLPF&S has elected to compute the minimum capital requirement in accordance with the Alternative Net Capital Requirement as permitted by SEC Rule 15c3-1 At December 31, 2011 MLPF&S s regulatory net capital as defined by Rule 15c3-1 was $10 8 billion and exceeded the minimum requirement of $803 million by $10 0 billion MLPCC s net capital of $3 5 billion exceeded the minimum requirement of $168 million by approximately $3 3 billion

In accordance with the Alternative Net Capital Requirements MLPF&S is required to maintain tentative net capital in excess of $1 billion net capital in excess of $500 million and notify the SEC in the event its tentative net capital is less than $5 billion At December 31 2011 MLPF&S had tentative net capital and net capital in excess of the minimum and notification requirements

Economic Capital

Our economic capital measurement process provides a risk based measurement of the capital required for unexpected credit, market and operational losses over a one-year time horizon at a 99 97 percent confidence level Economic capital is allocated to each business unit based upon its risk positions and contribution to enterprise risk and is used for capital adequacy performance measurement and risk management purposes The strategic planning process utilizes economic capital with the goal of allocating risk appropriately and measuring returns consistently across all businesses and activities Economic capital allocation plans are incorporated into the Corporation s financial plan which is approved by the Board on an annual basis

Credit Risk Capital

Economic capital for credit risk captures two types of risks default risk which represents the loss of principal due to outright default or the borrower s inability to repay an obligation in full and migration risk which represents potential loss in market value due to credit deterioration over the one-year capital time horizon Credit risk is assessed and modeled for all on- and off-balance sheet credit exposures within sub-categories for commercial retail counterparty and investment securities The economic capital methodology captures dimensions such as concentration and country risk and originated securitizations The economic capital methodology is based on the probability of default, loss given default (LGD) exposure at default (EAD) and maturity for each credit exposure and the portfolio correlations across exposures See page 80 for more information on Credit Risk Management.

Market Risk Capital

Market risk reflects the potential loss in the value of financial instruments or portfolios due to movements in interest and currency exchange rates equity and futures prices the implied volatility of interest rates credit spreads and other economic and business factors Bank of America s primary market risk exposures are in its trading portfolio equity investments MSRs and the interest rate exposure of its core balance sheet Economic capital is determined by utilizing the same models the Corporation used to manage these risks including for example Value-at Risk (VaR) simulation stress testing and scenario analysis See page 112 for additional information on Market Risk Management

Operational Risk Capital

We calculate operational risk capital at the business unit level using actuarial-based models and historical loss data We supplement the calculations with scenario analysis and risk control assessments See Operational Risk Management on page 119 for more information

Enterprise-wide Stress Testing

As a part of our core risk management practices we conduct enterprise-wide stress tests on a periodic basis to better understand balance sheet earnings capital and liquidity sensitivities to certain economic and business scenarios including economic and market conditions that are more severe than anticipated These enterprise-wide stress tests provide an understanding of the potential impacts from our risk profile on our balance sheet earnings capital and liquidity and serve as a key component of our capital and risk management practices Scenarios are selected by a group comprised of senior business risk and finance executives Impacts to each business from each scenario are then determined and analyzed primarily by leveraging the models and processes utilized in everyday management routines Impacts are assessed along with potential mitigating actions that may be taken Analysis from such stress scenarios is compiled for and reviewed through our Chief Financial Officer Risk Committee (CFORC) Asset Liability and Market Risk Committee (ALMRC) and the Board s Enterprise Risk Committee (ERC) and serves to inform decision making by management and the Board We have made substantial investments to establish stress testing capabilities as a core business process

Funding and Liquidity Risk Management

We define liquidity risk as the potential inability to meet our contractual and contingent financial obligations on- or off balance sheet as they come due Our primary liquidity objective is to ensure adequate funding for our businesses throughout market cycles including periods of financial stress To achieve that objective we analyze and monitor our liquidity risk maintain excess liquidity and access diverse funding sources including our stable deposit base We define excess liquidity as readily available assets limited to cash and high-quality liquid unencumbered securities that we can use to meet our funding requirements as those obligations arise

Global funding and liquidity risk management activities are centralized within Corporate Treasury We believe that a centralized approach to funding and liquidity risk management enhances our ability to monitor liquidity requirements maximizes access to funding sources minimizes borrowing costs and facilitates timely responses to liquidity events

The Enterprise Risk Committee approves the Corporation s liquidity policy and contingency funding plan including establishing liquidity risk tolerance levels The ALMRC in conjunction with the Board and its committees monitors our liquidity position and reviews the impact of strategic decisions on our liquidity ALMRC is responsible for managing liquidity risks and ensuring exposures remain within the established tolerance levels ALMRC delegates additional oversight responsibilities to the CFORC which reports to the ALMRC The CFORC reviews and monitors our liquidity position cash flow forecasts stress testing scenarios and results and implements our liquidity limits and guidelines For more information see Board Oversight of Risk on page 70 Under this governance framework we have developed certain funding and liquidity risk management practices which include maintaining excess liquidity at the parent company and selected subsidiaries including our bank and broker/dealer subsidiaries determining what amounts of excess liquidity are appropriate for these entities based on analysis of debt maturities and other potential cash outflows including those that we may experience during stressed market conditions diversifying funding sources considering our asset profile and legal entity structure and performing contingency planning

Global Excess Liquidity Sources and Other Unencumbered Assets

We maintain excess liquidity available to Bank of America Corporation or the parent company and selected subsidiaries in the form of cash and high-quality liquid unencumbered securities These assets which we call our Global Excess Liquidity Sources serve as our primary means of liquidity risk mitigation Our cash is primarily on deposit with central banks such as the Federal Reserve We limit the composition of high-quality liquid unencumbered securities to U S government securities U S agency securities U S agency MBS and a select group of non-U S government and supranational securities We believe we can quickly obtain cash for these securities even in stressed market conditions through repurchase agreements or outright sales We hold our Global Excess Liquidity Sources in entities that allow us to meet the liquidity requirements of our global businesses and we consider the impact of potential regulatory tax legal and other restrictions that could limit the transferability of funds among entities

Our Global Excess Liquidity Sources increased $42 billion to $378 billion compared to December 31 2010 and were maintained as presented in Table 17 This increase was due primarily to liquidity generated by our bank subsidiaries through deposit growth reductions in LHFS and other factors Partially offsetting the increase were the results of our ongoing reductions of our debt footprint announced in 2010

Table 17 Global Excess Liquidity Sources

As shown in Table 17 the Global Excess Liquidity Sources available to the parent company totaled $125 billion and $121 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 Typically parent company cash is deposited overnight with BANA

Table 18 presents the composition of Global Excess Liquidity Sources at December 31 2011 and 2010

U S agency securities and mortgage-backed securities	226	174
Non-U S government and supranational securities	28	17
Total global excess liquidity sources	$ 378	$ 336

Global Excess Liquidity Sources available to our bank subsidiaries at December 31 2011 and 2010 totaled $222 billion and $180 billion These amounts are distinct from the cash deposited by the parent company presented in Table 17 In addition to their Global Excess Liquidity Sources our bank subsidiaries hold significant amounts of other unencumbered securities that we believe could also be used to generate liquidity primarily investment-grade MBS Our bank subsidiaries can also generate incremental liquidity by pledging a range of other unencumbered loans and securities to certain Federal Home Loan Banks (FHLBs) and the Federal Reserve Discount Window The cash we could have obtained by borrowing against this pool of specifically-identified eligible assets was approximately $189 billion and $170 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 We have established operational procedures to enable us to borrow against these assets including regularly monitoring our total pool of eligible loans and securities collateral Due to regulatory restrictions liquidity generated by the bank subsidiaries can only be used to fund obligations within the bank subsidiaries and can only be transferred to the parent company or non-bank subsidiaries with prior regulatory approval

Global Excess Liquidity Sources available to our broker/dealer subsidiaries at December 31 2011 and 2010 totaled $31 billion and $35 billion Our broker/dealers also held significant amounts of other unencumbered securities that we believe could also be used to generate additional liquidity including investment-grade securities and equities Liquidity held in a broker/dealer subsidiary is only available to meet the obligations of that entity and can only be transferred to the parent company or to any other subsidiary with prior regulatory approval due to regulatory restrictions and minimum requirements

Time to Required Funding and Stress Modeling

We use a variety of metrics to determine the appropriate amounts of excess liquidity to maintain at the parent company and our bank and broker/dealer subsidiaries One metric we use to evaluate the appropriate level of excess liquidity at the parent company is Time to Required Funding This debt coverage measure indicates the number of months that the parent company can continue to meet its unsecured contractual obligations as they come due using only its Global Excess Liquidity Sources without issuing any new debt or accessing any additional liquidity sources We define unsecured contractual obligations for purposes of this metric as maturities of senior or subordinated debt issued or guaranteed by Bank of America Corporation or Merrill Lynch These include certain unsecured debt instruments primarily structured liabilities which we may be required to settle for cash prior to maturity and issuances under the FDIC s Temporary Liquidity Guarantee Program (TLGP) all of which will mature by June 30 2012 The Corporation has established a target for Time to Required Funding of 21 months Our Time to Required Funding at December 31 2011 was 29 months For purposes of calculating Time to Required Funding for December 31 2011 we have also included in the amount of unsecured contractual obligations the $8 6 billion liability related to the BNY Mellon Settlement This settlement is subject to final court approval and certain other conditions and the timing of the payment is not certain

We utilize liquidity stress models to assist us in determining the appropriate amounts of excess liquidity to maintain at the parent company and our bank and broker/dealer subsidiaries These models are risk sensitive and have become increasingly important in analyzing our potential contractual and contingent cash outflows beyond those outflows considered in the Time to Required Funding analysis

We evaluate the liquidity requirements under a range of scenarios with varying levels of severity and time horizons These scenarios incorporate market-wide and Corporation-specific events including potential credit ratings downgrades for the parent company and our subsidiaries We consider and utilize scenarios based on historical experience regulatory guidance and both expected and unexpected future events

The types of contractual and contingent cash outflows we consider in our scenarios may include but are not limited to upcoming contractual maturities of unsecured debt and reductions in new debt issuance diminished access to secured financing markets potential deposit withdrawals and reduced rollover of maturing term deposits by customers increased draws on loan commitment and liquidity facilities including Variable Rate Demand Notes additional collateral that counterparties could call if our credit ratings were further downgraded collateral margin and subsidiary capital requirements arising from losses and potential liquidity required to maintain businesses and finance customer activities

We consider all sources of funds that we could access during each stress scenario and focus particularly on matching available sources with corresponding liquidity requirements by legal entity We also use the stress modeling results to manage our asset-liability profile and establish limits and guidelines on certain funding sources and businesses

Basel III Liquidity Standards

In December 2010 the Basel Committee issued International framework for liquidity risk measurement standards and monitoring which includes two proposed measures of liquidity risk These two minimum liquidity measures were initially introduced in guidance in December 2009 and are considered part of Basel III

The first proposed liquidity measure is the Liquidity Coverage Ratio (LCR) which is calculated as the amount of a financial institution s unencumbered high-quality liquid assets relative to the net cash outflows the institution could encounter under an acute 30-day stress scenario The second proposed liquidity measure is the Net Stable Funding Ratio (NSFR) which measures the amount of longer-term stable sources of funding employed by a financial institution relative to the liquidity profiles of the assets funded and the potential for contingent calls on funding liquidity arising from off-balance sheet commitments and obligations over a one-year period The Basel Committee expects the LCR requirement to be implemented in January 2015 and the NSFR requirement to be implemented in January 2018 following an observation period that began in 2011 We continue to monitor the development and the potential impact of these proposals and assuming adoption by U S banking regulators we expect to meet the final standards within the regulatory timelines

Diversified Funding Sources

We fund our assets primarily with a mix of deposits and secured and unsecured liabilities through a globally coordinated funding strategy We diversify our funding globally across products programs markets currencies and investor groups

We fund a substantial portion of our lending activities through our deposit base which was $1 033 billion and $1 010 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 Deposits are primarily generated by our Deposits Global Commercial Banking GWIM and GBAM segments These deposits are diversified by clients product type and geography and the majority of our U S deposits are insured by the FDIC We consider a substantial portion of our deposits to be a stable low-cost and consistent source of funding We believe this deposit funding is generally less sensitive to interest rate changes market volatility or changes in our credit ratings than wholesale funding sources Our lending activities may also be financed through secured borrowings including securitizations and FHLB loans

Our trading activities in broker/dealer subsidiaries are primarily funded on a secured basis through securities lending and repurchase agreements and these amounts will vary based on customer activity and market conditions We believe funding these activities in the secured financing markets is more cost efficient and less sensitive to changes in our credit ratings than unsecured financing Repurchase agreements are generally short-term and often overnight Disruptions in secured financing markets for financial institutions have occurred in prior market cycles which resulted in adverse changes in terms or significant reductions in the availability of such financing We manage the liquidity risks arising from secured funding by sourcing funding globally from a diverse group of counterparties providing a range of securities collateral and pursuing longer durations when appropriate

We reduced our use of unsecured short-term borrowings at the parent company and broker/dealer subsidiaries including commercial paper and master notes to relatively insignificant amounts in 2011 These short-term borrowings were used to support customer activities short-term financing requirements and cash management objectives For average and period-end balance discussions see Balance Sheet Overview on page 34 For more information see Note 12 – Federal Funds Sold Securities Borrowed or Purchased Under Agreements to Resell and Short-term Borrowings to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Our mortgage business accesses a liquid market for the sale of newly originated mortgages through contracts with the GSEs and FHA Contracts with the GSEs are subject to the seller/servicer guides issued by the GSEs

We issue the majority of our long-term unsecured debt at the parent company During 2011 the parent company issued $21 0 billion of long-term unsecured debt We may also issue long-term unsecured debt at BANA although there were no new issuances during 2011

We issue long term unsecured debt in a variety of maturities and currencies to achieve cost efficient funding and to maintain an appropriate maturity profile While the cost and availability of unsecured funding may be negatively impacted by general market conditions or by matters specific to the financial services industry or the Corporation we seek to mitigate refinancing risk by actively managing the amount of our borrowings that we anticipate will mature within any month or quarter

The primary benefits of our centralized funding strategy include greater control reduced funding costs wider name recognition by investors and greater flexibility to meet the variable funding requirements of subsidiaries Where regulations time zone differences or other business considerations make parent company funding impractical certain other subsidiaries may issue their own debt

At December 31 2011 and 2010 our long term debt was in the currencies presented in Table 19

Table 19 Long-term Debt by Major Currency

	December 31
(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010
U S Dollar	$ 356,363	$ 302 487
Euro	66,799	67 482
Japanese Yen	19,866	19 901
British Pound	13,554	16 505
Australian Dollar	4,909	8 924
Canadian Dollar	4,821	8 628
Swiss Franc	2,299	3 089
Other	4,299	5 435
Total long-term debt	$ 473,309	$ 448 431

Total long term debt decreased $76 2 billion or 17 percent in 2011 This decrease reflects our ongoing initiative to reduce our debt footprint over time and we anticipate that we will continue to reduce our debt footprint as appropriate through 2013 We may from time to time purchase outstanding debt securities in various transactions depending on prevailing market conditions liquidity and other factors In addition we also may make markets in our debt instruments to provide liquidity for investors For additional information on long-term debt funding see Note 13 – Long-term Debt to the Consolidated Financial Statements

We use derivative transactions to manage the duration interest rate and currency risks of our borrowings considering the characteristics of the assets they are funding For further details on our ALM activities see Interest Rate Risk Management for Nontrading Activities on page 116

We also diversify our unsecured funding sources by issuing various types of debt instruments including structured liabilities which are debt obligations that pay investors with returns linked to other debt or equity securities indices currencies or commodities We typically hedge the returns we are obligated to pay on these liabilities with derivative positions and/or investments in the underlying instruments so that from a funding perspective the cost is similar to our other unsecured long-term debt We could be required to settle certain structured liability obligations for cash or other securities immediately under certain circumstances which we consider for liquidity planning purposes We believe however that a portion of such borrowings will remain outstanding beyond the earliest put or redemption date We had outstanding structured liabilities with a book value of $50 9 billion and $61 1 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010

Substantially all of our senior and subordinated debt obligations contain no provisions that could trigger a requirement for an early repayment require additional collateral support result in changes to terms accelerate maturity or create additional financial obligations upon an adverse change in our credit ratings financial ratios earnings cash flows or stock price

Prior to 2010 we participated in the TLGP which allowed us to issue senior unsecured debt that the FDIC guaranteed in return for a fee based on the amount and maturity of the debt At December 31 2011 we had $23 9 billion outstanding under the program We no longer issue debt under this program and all of our debt issued under TLGP will mature by June 30 2012 TLGP issuances are included in the unsecured contractual obligations for the Time to Required Funding metric Under this program our debt received the highest long-term ratings from the major credit rating agencies which resulted in a lower total cost of issuance than if we had issued non-FDIC guaranteed long-term debt

Contingency Planning

We maintain contingency funding plans that outline our potential responses to liquidity stress events at various levels of severity These policies and plans are based on stress scenarios and include potential funding strategies and communication and notification procedures that we would implement in the event we experienced stressed liquidity conditions We periodically review and test the contingency funding plans to validate efficacy and assess readiness

Our U S bank subsidiaries can access contingency funding through the Federal Reserve Discount Window Certain non-U S subsidiaries have access to central bank facilities in the jurisdictions in which they operate While we do not rely on these sources in our liquidity modeling we maintain the policies procedures and governance processes that would enable us to access these sources if necessary

Our borrowing costs and ability to raise funds are directly impacted by our credit ratings In addition credit ratings may be important to customers or counterparties when we compete in certain markets and when we seek to engage in certain transactions including OTC derivatives Thus it is our objective to maintain high-quality credit ratings

Credit ratings and outlooks are opinions on our creditworthiness and that of our obligations or securities including long-term debt short-term borrowings preferred stock and other securities including asset securitizations Our credit ratings are subject to ongoing review by the rating agencies which consider a number of factors including our own financial strength performance prospects and operations as well as factors not under our control The rating agencies could make adjustments to our ratings at any time and provide no assurances that they will maintain our ratings at current levels

Other factors that influence our credit ratings include changes to the rating agencies methodologies for our industry or certain security types the rating agencies assessment of the general operating environment for financial services companies our mortgage exposures our relative positions in the markets in which we compete reputation liquidity position diversity of funding sources funding costs the level and volatility of earnings corporate governance and risk management policies capital position capital management practices and current or future regulatory and legislative initiatives

Each of the three primary rating agencies Moody s S&P and Fitch downgraded the Corporation and its subsidiaries in late 2011 They have each also indicated that as a systemically important financial institution our credit ratings currently reflect their expectation that if necessary we would receive significant support from the U S government They have indicated that they will continue to assess this view of support as financial services regulations and legislation evolve On December 15 2011 Fitch downgraded the Corporation s and BANA s long-term and short-term debt ratings as a result of Fitch s decision to lower its "support floor" for systemically important U S financial institutions This downgrade resolves the Rating Watch Negative Fitch placed on the Corporation s ratings on October 22 2010 On November 29 2011 S&P downgraded the Corporation s long term and short term debt ratings as well as BANA s long-term debt rating as a result of S&P s implementation of revised methodologies for determining Banking Industry Country Risk Assessments and bank ratings On September 21 2011 Moody s downgraded the Corporation s long-term and short-term debt ratings as well as BANA s long-term debt rating as a result of Moody s lowering the amount of uplift for potential U S government support it incorporates into ratings On February 15 2012 Moody s placed the Corporation s long-term debt ratings and BANA s long-term and short-term debt ratings on review for possible downgrade as part of its review of financial institutions with global capital markets operations Any adjustment to our ratings will be determined based on Moody s review however the agency offered guidance that downgrades to our ratings if any would likely be limited to one notch The rating agencies could make further adjustments to our ratings at any time and provide no assurances that they will maintain our ratings at current levels

Currently the Corporation s long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks expressed by the rating agencies are as follows Baa1/P 2 (negative) by Moody s A-/A 2 (negative) by S&P and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch BANA s long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks currently are as follows A2/P-1 (negative) by Moody s A/A-1 (negative) by S&P and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch MLPF&S s long-term/short-term senior debt ratings and outlooks are A/A-1 (negative) by S&P and A/F1 (stable) by Fitch Merrill Lynch International s long-term/short term senior debt ratings are A/A-1 (negative) by S&P The credit ratings of Merrill Lynch from the three primary credit rating agencies are the same as those of Bank of America Corporation The primary credit rating agencies have indicated that the major drivers of Merrill Lynch s credit ratings are Bank of America Corporation s credit ratings

A further reduction in certain of our credit ratings or the ratings of certain asset-backed securitizations may have a material adverse effect on our liquidity potential loss of access to credit markets the related cost of funds our businesses and on certain trading revenues particularly in those businesses where counterparty creditworthiness is critical In addition under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements the counterparties to those agreements may require us to provide additional collateral or to terminate these contracts or agreements which could cause us to sustain losses and/or adversely impact our liquidity If the short-term credit ratings of our parent company bank or broker/dealer subsidiaries were downgraded by one or more levels the potential loss of access to short-term funding sources such as repo financing and the effect on our incremental cost of funds could be material

At December 31 2011 if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for the Corporation or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch the amount of additional collateral contractually required by derivative contracts and other trading agreements would have been approximately $1 6 billion comprised of $1 2 billion for BANA and approximately $375 million for Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries If the agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for these entities by a second incremental notch approximately $1 1 billion in additional collateral comprised of $871 million for BANA and $269 million for Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries would have been required

Also if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for the Corporation or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was $2 9 billion against which $2 7 billion of collateral had been posted If the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for the Corporation or certain subsidiaries a second incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was an incremental $5 6 billion against which $5 4 billion of collateral had been posted

While certain potential impacts are contractual and quantifiable the full scope of consequences of a credit ratings downgrade to a financial institution are inherently uncertain as they depend upon numerous dynamic complex and inter-related factors and assumptions including whether any downgrade of a firm s long-term credit ratings precipitates downgrades to its short-term credit ratings and assumptions about the potential behaviors of various customers investors and counterparties

For information regarding the additional collateral and termination payments that could be required in connection with certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements as a result of such a credit ratings downgrade see Note 4 - Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements and Item 1A Risk Factors

During the third quarter of 2011 Moody's and S&P placed the sovereign rating of the United States on review for possible downgrade due to the possibility of a default on the government s debt obligations because of a failure to increase the debt limit On August 2 2011 Moody s affirmed its Aaa rating and revised its outlook to negative On August 5 2011 S&P downgraded the long-term sovereign credit rating of the United States to AA+ and affirmed the short-term sovereign credit rating the outlook is negative On November 28 2011 Fitch affirmed its AAA long-term rating of the United States but changed the outlook from stable to negative On the same day Fitch affirmed its F1+ short term rating of the U S All three rating agencies have indicated that they will continue to assess fiscal projections and consolidation measures as well as the medium term economic outlook for the United States

Credit quality continued to improve during 2011 Continued economic stability and our proactive credit risk management initiatives positively impacted the credit portfolio as charge-offs and delinquencies continued to improve across most portfolios and risk ratings improved in the commercial portfolios However global and national economic uncertainty home price declines and regulatory reform continued to weigh on the credit portfolios through December 31 2011 For more information see Executive Summary - 2011 Economic and Business Environment on page 27

Credit risk is the risk of loss arising from the inability or failure of a borrower or counterparty to meet its obligations Credit risk can also arise from operational failures that result in an erroneous advance commitment or investment of funds We define the credit exposure to a borrower or counterparty as the loss potential arising from all product classifications including loans and leases deposit overdrafts derivatives assets held-for-sale and unfunded lending commitments which include loan commitments letters of credit and financial guarantees Derivative positions are recorded at fair value and assets held-for sale are recorded at either fair value or the lower of cost or fair value Certain loans and unfunded commitments are accounted for under the fair value option Credit risk for these categories of assets is not accounted for as part of the allowance for credit losses but as part of the fair value adjustments recorded in earnings For derivative positions our credit risk is measured as the net cost in the event the counterparties with contracts in which we are in a gain position fail to perform under the terms of those contracts We use the current mark-to-market value to represent credit exposure without giving consideration to future mark-to-market changes The credit risk amounts take into consideration the effects of legally enforceable master netting agreements and cash collateral Our consumer and commercial credit extension and review procedures take into account funded and unfunded credit exposures For additional information on derivative and credit extension commitments see Note 4 - Derivatives and Note 14 - Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements

We manage credit risk based on the risk profile of the borrower or counterparty repayment sources the nature of underlying collateral and other support given current events conditions and expectations We classify our portfolios as either consumer or commercial and monitor credit risk in each as discussed below

We proactively refine our underwriting and credit management practices as well as credit standards to meet the changing economic environment To actively mitigate losses and enhance customer support in our consumer businesses we have expanded collections loan modification and customer assistance infrastructures We also have implemented a number of actions to mitigate losses in the commercial businesses including increasing the frequency and intensity of portfolio monitoring hedging activity and our practice of transferring management of deteriorating commercial exposures to independent special asset officers as credits enter criticized categories

Since January 2008 and through 2011 Bank of America and Countrywide have completed over one million loan modifications with customers During 2011 we completed over 225 000 customer loan modifications with a total unpaid principal balance of approximately $49 9 billion including approximately 104 000 permanent modifications under the government s Making Home Affordable Program Of the loan modifications completed in 2011 in terms of both the volume of modifications and the unpaid principal balance associated with the underlying loans most were in the portfolio serviced for investors and were not on our balance sheet The most common types of modifications include a combination of rate reduction and capitalization of past due amounts which represent 60 percent of the volume of modifications completed in 2011 while principal forbearance represented 19 percent principal reductions and forgiveness represented six percent and capitalization of past due amounts represented eight percent These modification types are generally considered troubled debt restructurings (TDRs) For more information on TDRs and portfolio impacts see Nonperforming Consumer Loans and Foreclosed Properties Activity on page 92 and Note 6 - Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Certain European countries including Greece Ireland Italy Portugal and Spain continue to experience varying degrees of financial stress In early 2012 S&P Fitch and Moody s downgraded the credit ratings of several European countries and S&P downgraded the credit rating of the EFSF adding to concerns about investor appetite for continued support in stabilizing the affected countries Uncertainty in the progress of debt restructuring negotiations and the lack of a clear resolution to the crisis has led to continued volatility in the European financial markets and if the situation worsens may spread into the global financial markets In December 2011 the ECB announced initiatives to address European bank liquidity and funding concerns by providing low-cost three-year loans to banks and expanding collateral eligibility While these initiatives may reduce systemic risk there remains considerable uncertainty as to future developments regarding the European debt crisis For additional information on our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures in non-U S countries see Non-U S Portfolio on page 104 and Item 1A Risk Factors

Consumer Portfolio Credit Risk Management

Credit risk management for the consumer portfolio begins with initial underwriting and continues throughout a borrower s credit cycle Statistical techniques in conjunction with experiential judgment are used in all aspects of portfolio management including underwriting product pricing risk appetite setting credit limits and establishing operating processes and metrics to quantify and balance risks and returns Statistical models are built using detailed behavioral information from external sources such as credit bureaus and/or internal historical experience These models are a component of our consumer credit risk management process and are used in part to help make both new and existing credit decisions and portfolio management strategies including authorizations and line management collection practices and strategies determination of the allowance for loan and lease losses and economic capital allocations for credit risk

For information on our accounting policies regarding delinquencies nonperforming status charge-offs and TDRs for the consumer portfolio see Note 1 - Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Consumer Credit Portfolio

Improvement in the U S economy and labor markets during 2011 resulted in lower credit losses in most consumer portfolios during 2011 compared to 2010 However continued stress in the housing market including declines in home prices continued to adversely impact the home loans portfolio

Table 20 presents our outstanding consumer loans and the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio Loans that were acquired from Countrywide and considered credit-impaired were recorded at fair value upon acquisition In addition to being included in the "Outstandings" columns in Table 20 these loans are also shown separately net of purchase accounting adjustments in the "Countrywide Purchased Credit-impaired Loan Portfolio" column For additional information see Note 6 - Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements The impact of the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio on certain credit statistics is reported where appropriate See Countrywide Purchased Credit-impaired Loan Portfolio on page 89 for more information Under certain circumstances loans that were originally classified as discontinued real estate loans upon acquisition have been subsequently modified from pay option or subprime loans into loans with more conventional terms and are now included in the residential mortgage portfolio but continue to be classified as PCI loans as shown in Table 20

(1) Outstandings include non-U.S. residential mortgages of $86 million and $80 million at December 31, 2011 and 2010
(2) Outstandings include $8.9 billion and $11.8 billion of pay option loans and $1.2 billion and $1.3 billion of subprime loans at December 31, 2011 and 2010. We no longer originate these products.
(3) Outstandings include dealer financial services loans of $43.5 billion and $43.1 billion, consumer lending loans of $8.9 billion and $13.4 billion, U.S. securities-based lending margin loans of $15.6 billion and $16.6 billion, student loans of $6.0 billion and $6.6 billion, non-U.S. consumer loans of $7.8 billion and $8.0 billion, and other consumer loans of $11.8 billion and $3.2 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010.
(4) Outstandings include consumer finance loans of $1.7 billion and $1.8 billion, other non-U.S. consumer loans of $920 million and $803 million, and consumer overdrafts of $103 million and $88 million at December 31, 2011 and 2010.
(5) Consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option include residential mortgage loans of $908 million and discontinued real estate loans of $1.3 billion at December 31, 2011. There were no consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option at December 31, 2010. See Consumer Credit Risk – Consumer Loans Accounted for Under the Fair Value Option on page 82 and Note 23 – Fair Value Option to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information on the fair value option.

Table 21 presents accruing consumer loans past due 90 days or more and consumer nonperforming loans. Nonperforming loans do not include past due consumer credit card loans, consumer non-real estate-secured loans or unsecured consumer loans as these loans are generally charged off no later than the end of the month in which the loan becomes 180 days past due. Real estate-secured past due consumer loans which include loans insured by the FHA and individually insured long-term stand-by agreements with FNMA and FHLMC (fully-insured loan portfolio) are reported as accruing as opposed to nonperforming since the principal repayment is insured. Fully-insured loans included in accruing past due 90 days or more are primarily related to our purchases of delinquent FHA loans pursuant to our servicing agreements. Additionally nonperforming loans and accruing balances past due 90 days or more do not include the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio or loans accounted for under the fair value option even though the customer may be contractually past due. For additional information on FHA loans see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Unresolved Claims Status on page 57.

(1) Balances accruing past due 90 days or more are fully-insured loans. These balances include $17.0 billion and $8.2 billion of loans on which interest has been curtailed by the FHA, and therefore are no longer accruing interest, although principal is still insured, and $4.2 billion and $6.5 billion of loans on which interest was still accruing at December 31, 2011 and 2010.
(2) Balances exclude consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option. At December 31, 2011 approximately $713 million of loans accounted for under the fair value option were past due 90 days or more and not accruing interest. There were no consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option at December 31, 2010.

(1) Net charge-off ratios are calculated on net charge-offs divided by average outstanding loans excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option.

Net charge-off ratios excluding the Countrywide PCI and fully-insured loan portfolios were 2.27 percent and 1.86 percent for residential mortgage, 3.77 percent and 5.10 percent for home equity, 7.14 percent and 4.20 percent for discontinued real estate and 3.62 percent and 5.08 percent for the total consumer portfolio for 2011 and 2010. These are the only product classifications materially impacted by the Countrywide PCI and fully-insured loan portfolios for 2011 and 2010.

Legacy Asset Servicing within CRES manages our exposures to certain residential mortgage, home equity and discontinued real estate products. Legacy Asset Servicing manages both our owned loans, as well as loans serviced for others that meet certain criteria. The criteria generally represent home lending standards which we do not consider as part of our continuing core business. The Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio includes the following:

- Discontinued real estate loans including subprime and pay option
- Residential mortgage loans and home equity loans for products we no longer originate including reduced documentation loans and interest-only loans not underwritten to fully amortizing payment
- Loans that would not have been originated under our underwriting standards at December 31, 2010 including conventional loans with an original loan-to-value (LTV) greater than 95 percent and government-insured loans for which the borrower has a FICO score less than 620
- Countrywide PCI loan portfolios
- Certain loans that met a pre-defined delinquency and probability of default threshold as of January 1, 2011

For more information on Legacy Asset Servicing within CRES see page 43.

Table 23 presents outstandings, nonperforming balances and net charge-offs by the Core portfolio and the Legacy Asset Servicing portfolio for the home loans portfolio.

(1) Balances include consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option of $908 million for residential mortgage loans and $1.3 billion for discontinued real estate loans at December 31, 2011. There were no consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option at December 31, 2010. See Note 23 – Fair Value Option to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information on the fair value option.

We believe that the presentation of information adjusted to exclude the impact of the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio, the fully-insured loan portfolio and loans accounted for under the fair value option is more representative of the ongoing operations and credit quality of the business. As a result, in the following discussions of the residential mortgage, home equity and discontinued real estate portfolios we provide information that excludes the impact of the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio, the fully-insured loan portfolio and loans accounted for under the fair value option in certain credit quality statistics. We separately disclose information on the Countrywide PCI loan portfolios on page 89.

Residential Mortgage

The residential mortgage portfolio which for purposes of the consumer credit portfolio discussion and related tables excludes the discontinued real estate portfolio acquired from Countrywide makes up the largest percentage of our consumer loan portfolio at 43 percent of consumer loans at December 31 2011 Approximately 14 percent of the residential mortgage portfolio is in GWIM and represents residential mortgages that are originated for the home purchase and refinancing needs of our wealth management clients The remaining portion of the portfolio is mostly in All Other and is comprised of both originated loans as well as purchased loans used in our overall ALM activities

Outstanding balances in the residential mortgage portfolio excluding $905 million of loans accounted for under the fair value option increased $4 3 billion at December 31 2011 compared to December 31 2010 as new origination volume the majority of which is fully-insured was partially offset by paydowns charge-offs and transfers to foreclosed properties In addition repurchases of FHA delinquent loans pursuant to our servicing agreements with GNMA also increased the residential mortgage portfolio during 2011 At December 31 2011 and 2010 the residential mortgage portfolio included $93 9 billion and $67 2 billion of outstanding fully-insured loans On this portion of the residential mortgage portfolio we are protected against principal loss as a result of FHA insurance and long-term stand-by agreements with FNMA and FHLMC At December 31 2011 and 2010 $24 0 billion and $20 1 billion were related to repurchases of FHA delinquent loans pursuant to our servicing agreements with GNMA and the remainder of the fully insured portfolio represents originations that were retained on-balance sheet

At December 31 2011 and 2010 principal balances of $23 8 billion and $12 9 billion were protected by long term stand-by agreements All of these loans are individually insured and therefore the Corporation does not record an allowance for credit losses

In addition to the abovementioned long-term stand-by agreements with FNMA and FHLMC we have mitigated a portion of our credit risk on the residential mortgage portfolio through the use of synthetic securitization vehicles as described in Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the synthetic securitization vehicles referenced principal balances of $23 9 billion and $53 9 billion of residential mortgage loans and provided loss protection up to $783 million and $1 1 billion At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had a receivable of $359 million and $722 million from these vehicles for reimbursement of losses The Corporation records an allowance for credit losses on loans referenced by the synthetic securitization vehicles The reported net charge-offs for the residential mortgage portfolio do not include the benefit of amounts reimbursable from these vehicles Adjusting for the benefit of the credit protection from the synthetic securitizations the residential mortgage net charge-off ratio excluding the Countrywide PCI and fully-insured loan portfolios for 2011 would have been reduced by 13 bps and eight bps for 2010

Synthetic securitizations and the long-term stand-by agreements with FNMA and FHLMC together reduce our regulatory risk-weighted assets due to the transfer of a portion of our credit risk to unaffiliated parties At December 31 2011 and 2010 these programs had the cumulative effect of reducing our risk weighted assets by $7 9 billion and $8 2 billion increased our Tier 1 capital ratio by eight bps and six bps and our Tier 1 common capital ratio by six bps and five bps

Table 24 presents certain residential mortgage key credit statistics on both a reported basis and excluding the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio the fully insured loan portfolio and loans accounted for under the fair value option We believe the presentation of information adjusted to exclude these loan portfolios is more representative of the credit risk in the residential mortgage loan portfolio As such the following discussion presents the residential mortgage portfolio excluding the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio the fully-insured loan portfolio and loans accounted for under the fair value option For more information on the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio see page 89

(2) These vintages of loans accounted for 53 percent and 67 percent of nonperforming residential mortgage loans at December 31 2011 and 2010 These vintages of loans accounted for 73 percent and 77 percent of residential mortgage net charge-offs in 2011 and 2010

(3) Net charge-off ratios are calculated on net charge-offs divided by average outstanding loans excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option

n/a = not applicable

Nonperforming residential mortgage loans decreased $1 7 billion compared to December 31 2010 as outflows outpaced new inflows which continued to slow in 2011 due to favorable delinquency trends Accruing loans past due 30 days or more decreased $1 2 billion to $4 0 billion at December 31 2011 At December 31 2011 $11 4 billion or 71 percent of the nonperforming residential mortgage loans were 180 days or more past due and had been written down to the estimated fair value of the collateral less estimated costs to sell Net charge-offs increased $162 million to $3 8 billion in 2011 or 2 27 percent of total average residential mortgage loans compared to 1 86 percent for 2010 This increase in net charge-offs for 2011 was primarily driven by further deterioration in home prices on loans greater than 180 days past due which were written down to the estimated fair value of the collateral less estimated costs to sell partially offset by favorable delinquency trends Net charge-off ratios were further impacted by lower loan balances primarily due to paydowns and charge-offs outpacing new originations

Loans in the residential mortgage portfolio with certain characteristics have greater risk of loss than others These characteristics include loans with a high refreshed LTV loans originated at the peak of home prices in 2006 and 2007 interest-only loans and loans to borrowers located in California and Florida where we have concentrations and where significant declines in home prices have been experienced Although the following disclosures address each of these risk characteristics separately there is significant overlap in loans with these characteristics which contributed to a disproportionate share of the losses in the portfolio The residential mortgage loans with all of these higher risk characteristics comprised six percent of the residential mortgage portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010 but accounted for 23 percent of the residential mortgage net charge-offs in 2011 and 26 percent in 2010

Residential mortgage loans with a greater than 90 percent but less than 100 percent refreshed LTV represented 11 percent of the residential mortgage portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010 Loans with a refreshed LTV greater than 100 percent represented 26 percent and 24 percent of the residential mortgage loan portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010 Of the loans with a refreshed LTV greater than 100 percent 92 percent and 88 percent were performing at December 31 2011 and 2010 Loans with a refreshed LTV greater than 100 percent reflect loans where the outstanding carrying value of the loan is greater than the most recent valuation of the property securing the loan The majority of these loans have a refreshed LTV greater than 100 percent due primarily to home price deterioration over the past several years Loans to borrowers with refreshed FICO scores below 620 represented 15 percent of the residential mortgage portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010

Of the $158 5 billion and $180 1 billion in total residential mortgage loans outstanding at December 31 2011 and 2010 as shown in Table 24 40 percent and 38 percent were originated as interest-only loans The outstanding balance of interest-only residential mortgage loans that have entered the amortization period was $13 3 billion or 21 percent at December 31 2011 Residential mortgage loans that have entered the amortization period have experienced a higher rate of early stage delinquencies and nonperforming status compared to the residential mortgage portfolio as a whole As of December 31 2011 $484 million or four percent of outstanding residential mortgages that had entered the amortization period were accruing past due 30 days or more compared to $4 0 billion or two percent of accruing past due 30 days or more for the entire residential mortgage portfolio In addition at December 31 2011 $2 0 billion or 15 percent of outstanding residential mortgages that had entered the amortization period were nonperforming compared to $15 0 billion or 10 percent of nonperforming loans for the entire residential mortgage portfolio Loans in our interest-only residential mortgage portfolio have an interest-only period of three to 10 years and more than 80 percent of these loans will not be required to make a fully-amortizing payment until 2015 or later

Table 25 presents outstandings nonperforming loans and net charge-offs by certain state concentrations for the residential mortgage portfolio The Los Angeles-Long Beach-Santa Ana Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) within California represented 12 percent and 13 percent of outstandings at December 31 2011 and 2010 but comprised only seven percent of net charge-offs for both 2011 and 2010

The Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) encourages banks to meet the credit needs of their communities for housing and other purposes particularly in neighborhoods with low or moderate incomes At December 31 2011 and 2010 our CRA portfolio was $12 5 billion and $13 8 billion or eight percent of the residential mortgage loan balances for both periods The CRA portfolio included $2 5 billion and $3 0 billion of nonperforming loans at December 31 2011 and 2010 representing 15 percent and 17 percent of total nonperforming residential mortgage loans Net charge-offs related to the CRA portfolio were $732 million and $857 million for 2011 and 2010 or 19 percent and 23 percent of total net charge offs for the residential mortgage portfolio

For information on representations and warranties related to our residential mortgage portfolio see Off Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Representations and Warranties on page 56 and Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Home Equity

The home equity portfolio makes up 20 percent of the consumer portfolio and is comprised of HELOCs home equity loans and reverse mortgages As of December 31 2011 our HELOC portfolio had an outstanding balance of $103 4 billion or 83 percent of the home equity portfolio HELOCs generally have an initial draw period of 10 years with approximately 11 percent of the portfolio having a draw period of five years with a five-year renewal option During the initial draw period the borrowers are only required to pay the interest due on the loans on a monthly basis After the initial draw period ends the loans generally convert to 15-year amortizing loans

As of December 31 2011 our home equity loan portfolio had an outstanding balance of $20 2 billion or 16 percent of the home equity portfolio Home equity loans are almost all fixed-rate loans with amortizing payment terms of 10 to 30 years and approximately 52 percent of these loans have 25 to 30-year terms

As of December 31 2011 our reverse mortgage portfolio had an outstanding balance of $1 1 billion or one percent of the total home equity portfolio In 2011 we exited the reverse mortgage origination business

At December 31 2011 approximately 88 percent of the home equity portfolio was included in CRES while the remainder of the portfolio was primarily in GWIM Outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio decreased $13 3 billion in 2011 primarily due to paydowns and charge offs outpacing new originations and draws on existing lines Of the total home equity portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010 $24 5 billion or 20 percent and $24 8 billion or 18 percent were in first-lien positions (22 percent and 20 percent excluding the Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio) As of December 31 2011 outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio that were in a second-lien or more junior-lien position and where we also held the first lien loan totaled $37 2 billion or 33 percent of our home equity portfolio excluding the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio

Unused HELOCs totaled $67 5 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $80 1 billion at December 31 2010 This decrease was due primarily to customers choosing to close accounts as well as line management initiatives on deteriorating accounts which more than offset new production The HELOC utilization rate was 61 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 59 percent at December 31 2010

Table 26 presents certain home equity portfolio key credit statistics on both a reported basis as well as excluding the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio We believe the presentation of information adjusted to exclude the impact of the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio is more representative of the credit risk in this portfolio

(2) These vintages of loans have higher refreshed combined LTV ratios and accounted for 64 percent and 67 percent of nonperforming home equity loans at December 31 2011 and 2010 These vintages of loans accounted for 55 percent and 66 percent of net charge-offs in 2011 and 2010

(3) Net charge-off ratios are calculated on net charge-offs divided by average outstanding loans

The following discussion presents the home equity portfolio excluding the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio

Nonperforming outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio decreased $241 million compared to December 31 2010 driven primarily by charge-offs and nonperforming loans returning to performing status which together outpaced delinquency inflows which continued to slow during 2011 due to favorable early stage delinquency trends Accruing outstanding balances past due 30 days or more decreased $271 million in 2011 At December 31 2011 $1 1 billion or 43 percent of the nonperforming home equity portfolio was 180 days or more past due and had been written down to their fair values

In some cases the junior-lien home equity outstanding balance that we hold is current but the underlying first lien is not For outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio in which we service the first lien loan we are able to track whether the first-lien loan is in default For loans in which the first lien is serviced by a third party we utilize credit bureau data to estimate the delinquency status of the first lien Given that the credit bureau database we use does not include a property address for the mortgages we are unable to identify with certainty whether a reported delinquent first mortgage pertains to the same property for which we hold a second- or more junior-lien loan As of December 31 2011 we estimate that $4 7 billion of current second- or more junior-lien loans were behind a delinquent first-lien loan We service the first-lien loans on $1 3 billion of that amount with the remaining $3 4 billion serviced by third parties Of the $4 7 billion current second-lien loans we estimate based on available credit bureau data as discussed above that approximately $2 5 billion had first lien loans that were 120 days or more past due of which approximately $2 1 billion had first-lien loans serviced by third parties

Net charge-offs decreased $2 3 billion to $4 5 billion or 3 77 percent of the total average home equity portfolio for 2011 compared to $6 8 billion or 5 10 percent for 2010 primarily driven by favorable portfolio trends due in part to improvement in the U S economy In addition the net charge-off amounts during 2010 were impacted by the implementation of regulatory guidance on collateral-dependent modified loans which resulted in $822 million in net charge-offs Net charge-off ratios were further impacted by lower outstanding balances primarily as a result of paydowns and charge-offs outpacing new originations and draws on existing lines

There are certain characteristics of the outstanding loan balances in the home equity portfolio that have contributed to higher losses including those loans with a high refreshed combined loan-to-value (CLTV) loans that were originated at the peak of home prices in 2006 and 2007 and loans in geographic areas that have experienced the most significant declines in home prices Home price declines coupled with the fact that most home equity outstandings are secured by second-lien positions have significantly reduced and in some cases eliminated all collateral value after consideration of the first-lien position Although the disclosures below address each of these risk characteristics separately there is significant overlap in outstanding balances with these characteristics which has contributed to a disproportionate share of losses in the portfolio Outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio with all of these higher risk characteristics comprised 10 percent of the total home equity portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010 but have accounted for 28 percent of the home equity net charge-offs in 2011 and 29 percent in 2010

Outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio with greater than 90 percent but less than 100 percent refreshed CLTVs comprised 11 percent of the home equity portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010 Outstanding balances with refreshed CLTVs greater than 100 percent comprised 32 percent and 30 percent of the home equity portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010 Outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio with a refreshed CLTV greater than 100 percent reflect loans where the carrying value and available line of credit of the combined loans are equal to or greater than the most recent valuation of the property securing the loan Depending on the value of the property there may be collateral in excess of the first-lien that is available to reduce the severity of loss on the second-lien Home price deterioration over the past several years has contributed to an increase in CLTV ratios Of those outstanding balances with a refreshed CLTV greater than 100 percent 95 percent of the customers were current at December 31 2011 For second-lien loans with a refreshed CLTV greater than 100 percent that are current 89 percent were also current on the underlying first-lien loans at December 31 2011 Outstanding balances in the home equity portfolio to borrowers with a refreshed FICO score below 620 represented 12 percent of the home equity portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010

Of the $112 7 billion in total home equity portfolio outstandings 78 percent and 75 percent at December 31 2011 and 2010 were originated as interest-only loans almost all of which were HELOCs The outstanding balance of HELOCs that have entered the amortization period was $1 6 billion or two percent of total HELOCs at December 31 2011 The HELOCs that have entered the amortization period have experienced a higher percentage of early stage delinquencies and nonperforming status when compared to the HELOC portfolio as a whole As of December 31 2011 $49 million or three percent of outstanding HELOCs that had entered the amortization period were accruing past due 30 days or more compared to $1 4 billion or one percent of outstanding accruing past due 30 days or more for the entire HELOC portfolio In addition at December 31 2011 $57 million or four percent of outstanding HELOCs that had entered the amortization period were nonperforming compared to $2 0 billion or two percent of outstandings that were nonperforming for the entire HELOC portfolio Loans in our HELOC portfolio generally have an initial draw period of 10 years and more than 85 percent of these loans will not be required to make a fully-amortizing payment until 2015 or later

Although we do not actively track how many of our home equity customers pay only the minimum amount due on their home equity loans and lines we can infer some of this information through a review of our HELOC portfolio that we service and that is still in its revolving period (i e customers may draw on and repay their line of credit but are generally only required to pay interest on a monthly basis) During 2011 approximately 51 percent of these customers did not pay down any principal on their HELOCs

Table 27 presents outstandings nonperforming balances and net charge-offs by certain state concentrations for the home equity portfolio in the New York area the New York-Northern New Jersey-Long Island MSA made up 11 percent of the outstanding home equity portfolio at both December 31 2011 and 2010 This MSA comprised seven percent and six percent of net charge-offs for 2011 and 2010 The Los Angeles-Long Beach-Santa Ana MSA within California made up 12 percent and 11 percent of the outstanding home equity portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010 This MSA comprised 12 percent and 11 percent of net charge-offs for 2011 and 2010

For information on representations and warranties related to our home equity portfolio see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Representations and Warranties on page 56 and Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Discontinued Real Estate

The discontinued real estate portfolio excluding $1.3 billion of loans accounted for under the fair value option totaled $11.1 billion at December 31 2011 and consists of pay option and subprime loans acquired in the Countrywide acquisition Upon acquisition the majority of the discontinued real estate portfolio was considered credit-impaired and written down to fair value At December 31 2011 the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio was $9.9 billion or 89 percent of the total discontinued real estate portfolio This portfolio is included in All Other and is managed as part of our overall ALM activities See Countrywide Purchased Credit-impaired Loan Portfolio on page 89 for more information on the discontinued real estate portfolio

At December 31 2011 the purchased discontinued real estate portfolio that was not credit-impaired was $1.2 billion Loans with greater than 90 percent refreshed LTVs and CLTVs comprised 28 percent of the portfolio and those with refreshed FICO scores below 620 represented 44 percent of the portfolio The Los Angeles-Long Beach-Santa Ana MSA within California made up 16 percent of outstanding discontinued real estate loans at December 31 2011

Pay option adjustable-rate mortgages (ARMs) which are included in the discontinued real estate portfolio have interest rates that adjust monthly and minimum required payments that adjust annually subject to resetting of the loan if minimum payments are made and deferred interest limits are reached Annual payment adjustments are subject to a 7.5 percent maximum change To ensure that contractual loan payments are adequate to repay a loan the fully-amortizing loan payment amount is re-established after the initial five- or 10-year period and again every five years thereafter These payment adjustments are not subject to the 7.5 percent limit and may be substantial due to changes in interest rates and the addition of unpaid interest to the loan balance Payment advantage ARMs have interest rates that are fixed for an initial period of five years Payments are subject to reset if the minimum payments are made and deferred interest limits are reached If interest deferrals cause a loan's principal balance to reach a certain level within the first 10 years of the life of the loan the payment is reset to the interest-only payment then at the 10-year point the fully-amortizing payment is required

The difference between the frequency of changes in a loan's interest rates and payments along with a limitation on changes in the minimum monthly payments of 7.5 percent per year can result in payments that are not sufficient to pay all of the monthly interest charges (i.e. negative amortization) Unpaid interest is added to the loan balance until the loan balance increases to a specified limit which can be no more than 115 percent of the original loan amount at which time a new monthly payment amount adequate to repay the loan over its remaining contractual life is established

At December 31 2011 the unpaid principal balance of pay option loans was $11.7 billion with a carrying amount of $9.9 billion including $9.0 billion of loans that were credit-impaired upon acquisition and accordingly are reserved for based on a life-of-loan loss estimate The total unpaid principal balance of pay option loans with accumulated negative amortization was $9.5 billion including $672 million of negative amortization For those borrowers who are making payments in accordance with their contractual terms the percentage electing to make only the minimum payment on option ARMs was 72 percent at December 31 2011 and 69 percent at December 31 2010 We continue to evaluate our exposure to payment resets on the acquired negative-amortizing loans including the Countrywide PCI pay option loan portfolio and have taken into consideration several assumptions regarding this evaluation including prepayment and default rates Of the loans in the pay option portfolio at December 31 2011 that have not already experienced a payment reset seven percent are expected to reset in 2012 and approximately 17 percent are expected to reset thereafter In addition approximately seven percent are expected to prepay and approximately 69 percent are expected to default prior to being reset most of which were severely delinquent as of December 31 2011

Countrywide Purchased Credit-Impaired Loan Portfolio

Loans acquired with evidence of credit quality deterioration since origination and for which it is probable at purchase that we will be unable to collect all contractually required payments are accounted for under the accounting guidance for PCI loans which addresses accounting for differences between contractual and expected cash flows to be collected from the purchaser's initial investment in loans if those differences are attributable at least in part to credit quality Evidence of credit quality deterioration as of the acquisition date may include statistics such as past due status refreshed FICO scores and refreshed LTVs PCI loans are recorded at fair value upon acquisition and the applicable accounting guidance prohibits carrying over or recording a valuation allowance in the initial accounting

Table 28 presents the unpaid principal balance carrying value related valuation allowance and the net carrying value as a percentage of the unpaid principal balance for the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010

Of the unpaid principal balance at December 31 2011 $12.7 billion was 180 days or more past due including $9.0 billion of first-lien and $3.7 billion of home equity Of the $22.1 billion that is less than 180 days past due $19.1 billion or 86 percent of the total unpaid principal balance was current based on the contractual terms while $1.6 billion or seven percent was in early stage delinquency During 2011 we recorded $2.1 billion of provision for credit losses for the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio including $1.1 billion for discontinued real estate $667 million for home equity loans and $355 million for residential mortgage This compared to a total provision of $2.3 billion in 2010 Provision expense in 2011 was driven primarily by a more negative home price outlook versus previous expectations For further information on the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio see Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Additional information is provided in the following sections on the Countrywide PCI residential mortgage home equity and discontinued real estate loan portfolios

Purchased Credit-Impaired Residential Mortgage Loan Portfolio

The Countrywide PCI residential mortgage loan portfolio comprised 31 percent of the total Countrywide PCI loan portfolio Those loans to borrowers with a refreshed FICO score below 620 represented 38 percent of the Countrywide PCI residential mortgage loan portfolio at December 31 2011 Loans with a refreshed LTV greater than 90 percent represented 62 percent of the Countrywide PCI residential mortgage loan portfolio after consideration of purchase accounting adjustments and the related valuation allowance and 84 percent based on the unpaid principal balance at December 31 2011 Those loans that were originally classified as Countrywide PCI discontinued real estate loans upon acquisition and have been subsequently modified are now included in the Countrywide PCI residential mortgage outstandings Table 29 presents outstandings net of purchase accounting adjustments and before the related valuation allowance by certain state concentrations

The Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio comprised 38 percent of the total Countrywide PCI loan portfolio. Those loans with a refreshed FICO score below 620 represented 27 percent of the Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio at December 31 2011. Loans with a refreshed CLTV greater than 90 percent represented 61 percent of the Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio after consideration of purchase accounting adjustments and the related valuation allowance, and 83 percent based on the unpaid principal balance at December 31 2011. U.S. Credit Card

The consumer U.S. credit card portfolio is managed in Card Services. Outstandings in the U.S. credit card loan portfolio decreased $11.5 billion compared to December 31 2010 due to higher payment rates, charge-offs and portfolio divestitures. For 2011, net charge-offs decreased $5.8 billion to $7.3 billion compared to 2010 due to improvements in delinquencies, collections and bankruptcies as a result of an improved economic environment and the impact of higher credit quality originations. U.S. credit card loans 30 days or more past due and still accruing interest decreased $2.1 billion while loans 90 days or more past due and still accruing interest decreased $1.3 billion compared to December 31 2010 due to improvement in the U.S. economy. Table 32 presents certain key credit statistics for the consumer U.S. credit card portfolio.

Unused lines of credit for U.S. credit card totaled $368.1 billion and $399.7 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010. The $31.6 billion decrease was driven by portfolio divestitures, closure of inactive accounts and account management initiatives on higher risk accounts.

Non-U.S. Credit Card

During 2011 we sold our Canadian consumer card business and we are evaluating our remaining international consumer card portfolios. In light of these actions, the international consumer card portfolios were moved from Card Services to All Other.

Outstandings in the non-U.S. credit card portfolio decreased $13.0 billion in 2011 primarily due to the sale of the Canadian consumer credit card portfolio, lower origination volume and charge-offs. Net charge-offs decreased $1.0 billion in 2011 to $1.2 billion due to the sale of previously charged-off loans, portfolio sales and improvements in delinquencies, collections and insolvencies.

Unused lines of credit for non-U.S. credit card totaled $36.8 billion and $60.3 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010. The $23.5 billion decrease was driven primarily by the sale of the Canadian consumer credit card portfolio.

Direct/Indirect Consumer

At December 31 2011, approximately 48 percent of the direct/indirect portfolio was included in Global Commercial Banking (dealer financial services - automotive, marine, aircraft and recreational vehicle loans). 36 percent was included in GWIM (principally other non-real estate-secured, unsecured personal loans and securities-based lending margin loans), nine percent was included in Card Services (consumer personal loans) and the remainder was in All Other (student loans).

Outstanding loans and leases decreased $595 million to $89.7 billion in 2011 due to lower outstandings in the Card Services unsecured consumer lending portfolio partially offset by growth in securities based lending and product transfers from U.S. commercial. For 2011, net charge-offs decreased $1.9 billion to $1.5 billion or 1.64 percent of total average direct/indirect loans compared to 3.45 percent for 2010. This decrease was primarily driven by improvements in delinquencies, collections and bankruptcies in the unsecured consumer lending portfolio as a result of an improved economic environment as well as reduced outstandings. An additional driver was lower net charge-offs in the dealer financial services portfolio due to the impact of higher credit quality originations and higher resale values.

Net charge-offs in the unsecured consumer lending portfolio decreased $1.6 billion to $1.1 billion in 2011, or 10.93 percent of total average unsecured consumer lending loans compared to 17.24 percent for 2010. Net charge-offs in the dealer financial services portfolio decreased $199 million to $293 million in 2011, or 0.69 percent of total average dealer financial services loans compared to 1.08 percent for 2010. Direct/indirect loans that were past due 30 days or more and still accruing interest declined $745 million to $1.9 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $2.6 billion at December 31 2010 due to improvements in both the unsecured consumer lending and dealer financial services portfolios.

Other Consumer

At December 31, 2011, approximately 96 percent of the $2.7 billion other consumer portfolio was associated with certain consumer finance businesses that we previously exited and non-U.S. consumer loan portfolios that are included in All Other. The remainder is primarily deposit overdrafts in Deposits.

Consumer Loans Accounted for Under the Fair Value Option

Outstanding consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option were $2.2 billion at December 31, 2011 and include $1.3 billion of discontinued real estate loans and $906 million of residential mortgage loans as a result of the consolidation of VIEs. During 2011, we recorded losses of $837 million resulting from changes in the fair value of the loan portfolio. These losses were offset by gains recorded on the related long-term debt.

Nonperforming Consumer Loans and Foreclosed Properties Activity

Table 36 presents nonperforming consumer loans and foreclosed properties activity during 2011 and 2010. Nonperforming LHFS are excluded from nonperforming loans as they are recorded at either fair value or the lower of cost or fair value. Nonperforming loans do not include past due consumer credit card loans and, in general, past due consumer loans not secured by real estate as these loans are generally charged off no later than the end of the month in which the loan becomes 180 days past due. The fully-insured loan portfolio is not reported as nonperforming as principal repayment is insured. Additionally, nonperforming loans do not include the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio or loans that we account for under the fair value option. For further information on nonperforming loans, see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements. Nonperforming loans declined to $18.8 billion at December 31, 2011 compared to $20.9 billion at December 31, 2010. Delinquency inflows to nonperforming loans slowed compared to the prior year due to favorable portfolio trends and were more than offset by charge-offs, nonperforming loans returning to performing status, and paydowns and payoffs.

The outstanding balance of a real estate-secured loan that is in excess of the estimated property value, after reducing the estimated property value for estimated costs to sell, is charged off no later than the end of the month in which the loan becomes 180 days past due unless repayment of the loan is fully insured. At December 31, 2011, $14.6 billion, or 71 percent, of nonperforming consumer real estate loans and foreclosed properties had been written down to their estimated property value less estimated costs to sell, including $12.6 billion of nonperforming loans 180 days or more past due and $2.0 billion of foreclosed properties.

Foreclosed properties increased $742 million in 2011 as additions outpaced liquidations. PCI loans are excluded from nonperforming loans as these loans were written down to fair value at the acquisition date. However, once the underlying real estate is acquired by the Corporation upon foreclosure of the delinquent PCI loan, it is included in foreclosed properties. Net changes to foreclosed properties related to PCI loans increased $411 million in 2011. Not included in foreclosed properties at December 31, 2011 was $1.4 billion of real estate that was acquired upon foreclosure of delinquent FHA-insured loans. We hold this real estate on our balance sheet until we convey these properties to the FHA. We exclude these amounts from our nonperforming loans and foreclosed properties activity as we will be reimbursed once the property is conveyed to the FHA for principal and, up to certain limits, costs incurred during the foreclosure process and interest incurred during the holding period. For additional information on the review of our foreclosure processes, see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Other Mortgage-related Matters on page 63.

Restructured Loans

Nonperforming loans also include certain loans that have been modified in TDRs where economic concessions have been granted to borrowers experiencing financial difficulties. These concessions typically result from the Corporation's loss mitigation activities and could include reductions in the interest rate, payment extensions, forgiveness of principal, forbearance or other actions. Certain TDRs are classified as nonperforming at the time of restructuring and may only be returned to performing status after considering the borrower's sustained repayment performance under revised payment terms for a reasonable period, generally six months. Nonperforming TDRs, excluding those modified loans in the Countrywide PCI loan portfolio, are included in Table 36.

As a result of accounting guidance on PCI loans beginning January 1, 2010, modifications of loans in the PCI loan portfolio do not result in removal of the loan from the PCI loan pool. TDRs in the consumer real estate portfolio that were removed from the PCI loan portfolio prior to the adoption of this accounting guidance were $1.9 billion and $2.1 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010, of which $477 million and $426 million were nonperforming. These nonperforming loans are excluded from Table 36.

Nonperforming consumer real estate TDRs as a percentage of total nonperforming consumer loans and foreclosed properties increased to 26 percent at December 31, 2011 from 16 percent at December 31, 2010.

[1] Balances do not include nonperforming LHFS of $680 million and $1.0 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010, as well as loans accruing past due 90 days or more as presented in Table 21 and Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

[3] Consumer loans may be returned to performing status when all principal and interest is current and full repayment of the remaining contractual principal and interest is expected, or when the loan otherwise becomes well-secured and is in the process of collection. Certain TDRs are classified as nonperforming at the time of restructuring and may only be returned to performing status after considering the borrower's sustained repayment performance for a reasonable period, generally six months.

[4] Our policy is to not classify consumer credit card and consumer loans, not secured by real estate, as nonperforming; therefore, charge-offs on these loans have no impact on nonperforming activity and, accordingly, are excluded from this table.

[5] At December 31, 2011, 67 percent of nonperforming loans 180 days or more past due were written down through charge-offs to 84 percent of the unpaid principal balances.

[6] Outstanding consumer loans exclude loans accounted for under the fair value option.

Our policy is to record any losses in the value of foreclosed properties as a reduction in the allowance for loan and lease losses during the first 90 days after transfer of a loan to foreclosed properties. Thereafter, all gains and losses in value are recorded in noninterest expense. New foreclosed properties in Table 36 are net of $352 million and $575 million of charge-offs for 2011 and 2010, recorded during the first 90 days after transfer.

We also work with customers that are experiencing financial difficulty by modifying credit card and other consumer loans while complying with Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) guidelines. Substantially all of our credit card and other consumer loan modifications involve a reduction in the cardholder's interest rate on the account and placing the customer on a fixed payment plan not exceeding 60 months, all of which are considered to be TDRs (the renegotiated TDR portfolio). We make modifications primarily through internal renegotiation programs utilizing direct customer contact, but may also utilize external renegotiation programs. The renegotiated TDR portfolio is excluded from Table 36 as substantially all of these loans remain on accrual status until either charged-off or paid in full. At December 31, 2011, our renegotiated TDR portfolio was $7.1 billion, of which $5.5 billion was current or less than 30 days past due under the modified terms compared to $11.4 billion at December 31, 2010, of which $8.7 billion was current or less than 30 days past due under the modified terms. The decline in the renegotiated TDR portfolio was primarily driven by attrition throughout 2011 as well as lower new program enrollments. For more information on the renegotiated TDR portfolio, see Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

As a result of new accounting guidance on TDRs, loans that are participating in or that have been offered a binding trial modification are classified as TDRs. At December 31, 2011, we classified an additional $2.6 billion of home loans as TDRs that were participating in or had been offered a trial modification. These home loans had an aggregate allowance for credit losses of $154 million at December 31, 2011. For additional information, see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

Commercial Portfolio Credit Risk Management

Credit risk management for the commercial portfolio begins with an assessment of the credit risk profile of the borrower or counterparty based on an analysis of its financial position As part of the overall credit risk assessment our commercial credit exposures are assigned a risk rating and are subject to approval based on defined credit approval standards Subsequent to loan origination risk ratings are monitored on an ongoing basis and if necessary adjusted to reflect changes in the financial condition cash flow risk profile or outlook of a borrower or counterparty In making credit decisions we consider risk rating collateral country industry and single name concentration limits while also balancing the total borrower or counterparty relationship Our business and risk management personnel use a variety of tools to continuously monitor the ability of a borrower or counterparty to perform under its obligations We use risk rating aggregations to measure and evaluate concentrations within portfolios In addition risk ratings are a factor in determining the level of assigned economic capital and the allowance for credit losses

For information on our accounting policies regarding delinquencies nonperforming status and net charge-offs for the commercial portfolio see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Management of Commercial Credit Risk Concentrations

Commercial credit risk is evaluated and managed with the goal that concentrations of credit exposure do not result in undesirable levels of risk We review measure and manage concentrations of credit exposure by industry product geography customer relationship and loan size We also review measure and manage commercial real estate loans by geographic location and property type In addition within our international portfolio we evaluate exposures by region and by country Tables 42 47 53 and 54 summarize our concentrations We also utilize syndications of exposure to third parties loan sales hedging and other risk mitigation techniques to manage the size and risk profile of the commercial credit portfolio

As part of our ongoing risk mitigation initiatives we attempt to work with clients experiencing financial difficulty to modify their loans to terms that better align with their current ability to pay In situations where an economic concession has been granted to a borrower experiencing financial difficulty we identify these loans as TDRs

We account for certain large corporate loans and loan commitments including issued but unfunded letters of credit which are considered utilized for credit risk management purposes that exceed our single name credit risk concentration guidelines under the fair value option Lending commitments both funded and unfunded are actively managed and monitored and as appropriate credit risk for these lending relationships may be mitigated through the use of credit derivatives with the Corporation s credit view and market perspectives determining the size and timing of the hedging activity In addition we purchase credit protection to cover the funded portion as well as the unfunded portion of certain other credit exposures To lessen the cost of obtaining our desired credit protection levels credit exposure may be added within an industry borrower or counterparty group by selling protection These credit derivatives do not meet the requirements for treatment as accounting hedges They are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in other income (loss)

Commercial Credit Portfolio

During 2011 credit quality in the commercial loans portfolio showed improvement relative to 2010 Commercial loans increased in 2011 primarily due to growth in commercial and industrial lending Non-U S commercial loan growth centered in corporate loans and trade finance was driven by higher client demand enterprise-wide initiatives regional economic conditions and disruption in debt and equity markets leading to higher utilization Growth in U S commercial loans was driven by domestic economic momentum This was partially offset by declines in commercial real estate loans as net paydowns and sales outpaced new originations and renewals

Reservable criticized balances net charge-offs and nonperforming loans leases and foreclosed property balances in the commercial credit portfolio declined in 2011 The reductions in reservable criticized and nonperforming loans leases and foreclosed property were primarily in the commercial real estate and U S commercial portfolios Commercial real estate continued to show improvement during 2011 compared to 2010 in both the homebuilder and non-homebuilder portfolios However levels of stressed commercial real estate loans remain elevated The reduction in reservable criticized U S commercial loans was driven by broad-based improvements in terms of clients industries and businesses Most other credit indicators across the remaining commercial portfolios also improved

(3) Commercial loans accounted for under the fair value option include U S commercial loans of $2 2 billion and $1 6 billion non-U S commercial loans of $4 4 billion and $1 7 billion and commercial real estate loans of $0 and $79 million at December 31 2011 and 2010 See Note 23 – Fair Value Option to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information on the fair value option

Nonperforming commercial loans and leases as a percentage of outstanding commercial loans and leases were 2 02 percent and 3 32 percent (2 04 percent and 3 35 percent excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option) at December 31 2011 and 2010 Accruing commercial loans and leases past due 90 days or more as a percentage of outstanding commercial loans and leases were 0 10 percent and 0 21 percent (0 10 percent and 0 22 percent excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option) at December 31 2011 and 2010

Table 39 presents net charge-offs and related ratios for our commercial loans and leases for 2011 and 2010 Improving portfolio trends drove lower charge-offs and higher recoveries across most of the portfolio Commercial real estate net charge-offs during 2011 declined in both the homebuilder and non-homebuilder portfolios U S small business commercial net charge-offs declined primarily due to improvements in delinquencies collections and bankruptcies U S commercial charge-offs decreased during 2011 due to broad-based declines from improvements in client profiles industries and businesses

Total commercial utilized credit exposure increased $6 1 billion in 2011 driven primarily by increases in loans and leases partially offset by decreases in SBLCs LHFS and bankers acceptances Utilized loans and leases increased primarily due to growth and higher revolver utilization in our international franchise and were partially offset by run-off in the commercial real estate portfolio and the transfer of securities-based lending exposures from our U S commercial portfolio to the consumer portfolio during 2011 The utilization rate for loans and leases SBLCs and financial guarantees and bankers acceptances was 57 percent at both December 31 2011 and 2010

(5) Total commercial committed exposure consists of $10 3 billion and $14 2 billion of debt securities and $6 and $800 million of other investments at December 31 2011 and 2010
(6) Includes $1 3 billion of net recorded exposure at December 31 2011 as discussed in Variable Interest Entities and Related Exposure on page 101

Table 41 presents commercial utilized reservable criticized exposure by product type Criticized exposure corresponds to the Special Mention Substandard and Doubtful asset categories as defined by regulatory authorities Total commercial utilized reservable criticized exposure decreased $15 4 billion or 36 percent in 2011 due to broad-based decreases across most portfolios primarily in commercial real estate and U S commercial driven largely by continued paydowns sales and ratings upgrades outpacing downgrades Despite the improvements utilized reservable criticized levels remain elevated particularly in commercial real estate and U S small business commercial At December 31 2011 approximately 85 percent of commercial utilized reservable criticized exposure was secured compared to 88 percent at December 31 2010

U.S. Commercial

At December 31 2011 56 percent of the U S commercial loan portfolio excluding small business was managed in Global Commercial Banking and 30 percent in GBAM The remaining 12 percent was mostly in GWIM (business-purpose loans for wealthy clients) U S commercial loans excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option increased $4 4 billion in 2011 due to continued growth and higher revolver utilization across the portfolio This increase was net of a product reclassification for certain trade loans to non-U S commercial in 2011 as well as the transfer of securities-based lending loans to the consumer portfolio earlier in 2011 which together totaled $5 3 billion Reservable criticized balances and nonperforming loans and leases declined $5 5 billion and $1 3 billion in 2011 The declines were broad-based in terms of clients and industries and were driven by improved client credit profiles and liquidity Net charge-offs decreased $686 million in 2011 due to broad-based declines from credit quality improvements mentioned above driving lower charge-offs and higher recoveries

Commercial Real Estate

The commercial real estate portfolio is predominantly managed in Global Commercial Banking and consists of loans made primarily to public and private developers homebuilders and commercial real estate firms Outstanding loans decreased $9 8 billion in 2011 due to paydowns and sales which outpaced new originations and renewals Over 90 percent of this decrease occurred within reservable criticized

The portfolio remains diversified across property types and geographic regions California represented the largest state concentration of commercial real estate loans and leases at 20 percent and 18 percent at December 31 2011 and 2010 For more information on geographic and property concentrations see Table 42

Credit quality for commercial real estate continued to show signs of improvement, however we expect that elevated unemployment and ongoing pressure on vacancy and rental rates will continue to affect primarily the non-homebuilder portfolio Nonperforming commercial real estate loans and foreclosed properties decreased 31 percent in 2011 split evenly across the homebuilder and non-homebuilder portfolios The decline in nonperforming loans and foreclosed properties in the non-homebuilder portfolio was driven by decreases in the shopping centers/retail land and land development, and office property types Reservable criticized balances decreased $9 0 billion primarily due to declines in the office shopping centers/retail and multi-family rental property types in the non-homebuilder portfolio and improvement in the homebuilder portfolio Net charge-offs declined $1 1 billion in 2011 due to improvement in both the homebuilder and non-homebuilder portfolio

Table 42 presents outstanding commercial real estate loans by geographic region which is based on the geographic location of the collateral and property type Commercial real estate primarily includes commercial loans and leases secured by non-owner-occupied real estate which is dependent on the sale or lease of the real estate as the primary source of repayment

During 2011 we continued to see improvement in the homebuilder portfolio Certain portions of the non-homebuilder portfolio remain at risk as occupancy rates rental rates and commercial property prices remain under pressure We use a number of proactive risk mitigation initiatives to reduce utilized and potential exposure in the commercial real estate portfolios including refinement of our credit standards additional transfers of deteriorating exposures to management by independent special asset officers and the pursuit of alternative resolution methods to achieve the best results for our customers and the Corporation

Tables 43 and 44 present commercial real estate credit quality data by non-homebuilder and homebuilder property types The homebuilder portfolio presented in Tables 42 43 and 44 includes condominiums and other residential real estate Other property types in Tables 42 43 and 44 primarily include special purpose nursing/retirement homes medical facilities and restaurants as well as unsecured loans to borrowers whose primary business is commercial real estate

(1) Net charge-off ratios are calculated as net charge-offs divided by average outstanding loans, excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option

At December 31 2011 total committed non-homebuilder exposure was $53 1 billion compared to $64 2 billion at December 31 2010 with the decrease due to exposure reductions in all non-homebuilder property types Non-homebuilder nonperforming loans and foreclosed properties were $3 5 billion and $4 6 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 which represented 9 29 percent and 10 08 percent of total non-homebuilder loans and foreclosed properties Non-homebuilder utilized reservable criticized exposure decreased to $10 1 billion or 25 34 percent of non-homebuilder utilized reservable exposure at December 31 2011 compared to $17 1 billion or 35 55 percent at December 31 2010 The decrease in reservable criticized exposure was driven primarily by office shopping centers/retail and multi-family rental property types For the non-homebuilder portfolio net charge-offs decreased $662 million in 2011 due in part to resolution of criticized assets through payoffs and sales

At December 31 2011 we had committed homebuilder exposure of $3 9 billion compared to $6 0 billion at December 31 2010 of which $2 4 billion and $4 3 billion were funded secured loans The decline in homebuilder committed exposure was due to repayments net charge-offs reductions in new home construction and continued risk mitigation initiatives with market conditions providing fewer origination opportunities to offset the reductions Homebuilder nonperforming loans and foreclosed properties decreased $970 million due to repayments a decline in the volume of loans being downgraded to nonaccrual status and net charge-offs Homebuilder utilized reservable criticized exposure decreased $2 0 billion to $1 4 billion due to repayments and net charge-offs The nonperforming loans leases and foreclosed properties and the utilized reservable criticized ratios for the homebuilder portfolio were 38 89 percent and 54 65 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 42 80 percent and 74 27 percent at December 31 2010 Net charge-offs for the homebuilder portfolio decreased $208 million in 2011

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the commercial real estate loan portfolio included $10 9 billion and $19 1 billion of construction and land development loans that were originated to fund the construction and/or rehabilitation of commercial properties The decline in construction and land development loans was driven by repayments net charge-offs and continued risk mitigation initiatives which outpaced new originations This portfolio is mostly secured and diversified across property types and geographic regions but faces continuing challenges in the housing and rental markets Weak rental demand and cash flows along with depressed property valuations of land have contributed to elevated levels of reservable criticized exposure nonperforming loans and foreclosed properties and net charge-offs Reservable criticized construction and land development loans totaled $4 9 billion and $10 5 billion and nonperforming construction and land development loans and foreclosed properties totaled $2 1 billion and $4 0 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 During a property's construction phase interest income is typically paid from interest reserves that are established at the inception of the loan As construction is completed and the property is put into service these interest reserves are depleted and interest payments from operating cash flows begin Loans continue to be classified as construction loans until they are refinanced We do not recognize interest income on nonperforming loans regardless of the existence of an interest reserve

Non-U.S. Commercial

The non-U S commercial loan portfolio is managed primarily in GBAM Outstanding loans excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option increased $23 4 billion in 2011 from continued growth in corporate loans and trade finance due to client demand enterprise-wide initiatives regional economic conditions and disruption in debt and equity markets along with the product reclassification from U S commercial in 2011 For additional information on the non-U S commercial portfolio see Non-U S Portfolio on page 104

U.S. Small Business Commercial

The U S small business commercial loan portfolio is comprised of business card and small business loans managed in Card Services and Global Commercial Banking U S small business commercial net charge-offs declined $923 million in 2011 driven by improvements in delinquencies collections and bankruptcies resulting from an improved economic environment as well as the reduction of higher risk vintages and the impact of higher credit quality originations Of the U S small business commercial net charge-offs 74 percent were credit card-related products for 2011 compared to 79 percent for 2010

Commercial Loans Carried at Fair Value

The portfolio of commercial loans accounted for under the fair value option is managed primarily in GBAM Outstanding commercial loans accounted for under the fair value option increased $3 3 billion to an aggregate fair value of $6 6 billion at December 31 2011 due primarily to increased corporate borrowings under bank credit facilities We recorded net losses of $174 million resulting from changes in the fair value of the loan portfolio during 2011 compared to net gains of $82 million in 2010 These amounts were primarily attributable to changes in instrument specific credit risk were recorded in other income (loss) and do not reflect the results of hedging activities

In addition unfunded lending commitments and letters of credit accounted for under the fair value option had an aggregate fair value of $1 2 billion and $866 million at December 31 2011 and 2010 which was recorded in accrued expenses and other liabilities The associated aggregate notional amount of unfunded lending commitments and letters of credit accounted for under the fair value option was $25 7 billion and $27 3 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 During 2011 we recorded net losses of $429 million from changes in the fair value of commitments and letters of credit compared to net gains of $23 million in 2010 These amounts were primarily attributable to changes in instrument-specific credit risk were recorded in other income (loss) and do not reflect the results of hedging activities

Nonperforming Commercial Loans, Leases and Foreclosed Properties Activity

Table 45 presents the nonperforming commercial loans leases and foreclosed properties activity during 2011 and 2010 Nonperforming commercial loans and leases decreased $3 5 billion during 2011 to $6 3 billion at December 31 2011 driven by paydowns charge-offs returns to performing status and sales partially offset by new nonaccrual loans in the commercial real estate and U S commercial portfolios Approximately 96 percent of commercial nonperforming loans leases and foreclosed properties are secured and approximately 51 percent are contractually current In addition commercial nonperforming loans are carried at approximately 68 percent of their unpaid principal balance before consideration of the allowance for loan and lease losses as the carrying value of these loans has been reduced to the estimated property value less estimated costs to sell

(2) Includes U S small business commercial activity
(3) Commercial loans and leases may be returned to performing status when all principal and interest is current and full repayment of the remaining contractual principal and interest is expected or when the loan otherwise becomes well-secured and is in the process of collection TDRs are generally classified as performing after a sustained period of demonstrated payment performance
(4) Business card loans are not classified as nonperforming therefore the charge-offs on these loans have no impact on nonperforming activity and accordingly are excluded from this table
(5) Excludes loans accounted for under the fair value option

As a result of the retrospective application of new accounting guidance on TDRs effective September 30 2011 the Corporation classified $1 1 billion of commercial loan modifications as TDRs that in previous periods had not been classified as TDRs These loans were newly identified as TDRs typically because the Corporation was not able to demonstrate that the modified rate of interest although significantly higher than the rate prior to modification was a market rate of interest These newly identified TDRs did not have a significant impact on the allowance for credit losses or the provision for credit losses Included in this amount was $402 million of performing commercial loans at December 31 2011 that were not previously considered to be impaired loans For additional information see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Table 46 presents our commercial TDRs by product type and status U S small business commercial TDRs are comprised of renegotiated business card loans and are not classified as nonperforming as they are charged off no later than the end of the month in which the loan becomes 180 days past due

Industry Concentrations

Table 47 presents commercial committed and utilized credit exposure by industry and the total net credit default protection purchased to cover the funded and unfunded portions of certain credit exposures Our commercial credit exposure is diversified across a broad range of industries The increase in commercial committed exposure of $10 4 billion in 2011 was concentrated in banks diversified financials and energy partially offset by lower real estate insurance (including monolines) and other committed exposure

Industry limits are used internally to manage industry concentrations and are based on committed exposures and capital usage that are allocated on an industry-by-industry basis A risk management framework is in place to set and approve industry limits as well as to provide ongoing monitoring Management s Credit Risk Committee (CRC) oversees industry limit governance

Diversified financials our largest industry concentration experienced an increase in committed exposure of $8 2 billion or nine percent in 2011 driven primarily by increases in consumer finance lending and traded products exposure

Real estate our second largest industry concentration experienced a decrease in committed exposure of $9 4 billion or 13 percent in 2011 due primarily to paydowns and sales which outpaced new originations and renewals Real estate construction and land development exposure represented 20 percent and 27 percent of the total real estate industry committed exposure at December 31 2011 and 2010 For more information on the commercial real estate and related portfolios see Commercial Real Estate on page 97

Committed exposure in the banking industry increased $9 1 billion or 31 percent in 2011 primarily due to increases in trade finance as a result of momentum from regional economies and growth initiatives in foreign markets

Energy committed exposure increased $5 7 billion or 22 percent in 2011 due to increases in working capital lines for state-related enterprises and increases in large investment-grade energy companies

Insurance including monolines committed exposure decreased $8 3 billion or 34 percent in 2011 due primarily to the settlement/termination of monoline positions For more information on our monoline exposure see Monolines and Related Exposure below

Other committed exposure decreased $6 0 billion or 44 percent in 2011 due to reductions primarily in traded products exposure

The Corporation s committed state and municipal exposure of $46 1 billion at December 31 2011 consisted of $34 4 billion of commercial utilized exposure (including $18 6 billion of funded loans $11 3 billion of SBLCs and $4 1 billion of derivative assets) and unutilized commercial exposure of $11 7 billion (primarily unfunded loan commitments and letters of credit) and is reported in the Government and public education industry in Table 47 Economic conditions continue to impact debt issued by state and local municipalities and certain exposures to these municipalities While historical default rates have been low as part of our overall and ongoing risk management processes we continually monitor these exposures through a rigorous review process Additionally internal communications surrounding certain at-risk counterparties and/or sectors are regularly circulated ensuring exposure levels are in compliance with established concentration guidelines

Monoline and Related Exposure

Monoline exposure is reported in the insurance industry and managed under insurance portfolio industry limits

We have indirect exposure to monolines primarily in the form of guarantees supporting our loans investment portfolios securitizations and credit-enhanced securities as part of our public finance business and other selected products Such indirect exposure exists when we purchase credit protection from monolines to hedge all or a portion of the credit risk on certain credit exposures including loans and CDOs We underwrite our public finance exposure by evaluating the underlying securities

We also have indirect exposure to monolines in the form of guarantees supporting our mortgage and other loan sales Indirect exposure may exist when credit protection was purchased from monolines to hedge all or a portion of the credit risk on certain mortgage and other loan exposures A loss may occur when we are required to repurchase a loan and the market value of the loan has declined or we are required to indemnify or provide recourse for a guarantor s loss For additional information regarding our exposure to representations and warranties see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Representations and Warranties on page 56 and Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements

During 2011 we terminated all of our monoline contracts referencing super senior ABS CDOs and reclassified net monoline exposure with a carrying value of $1.3 billion ($4.7 billion gross receivable less impairment) at December 31 2011 from derivative assets to other assets because of the inherent default risk. Because these contracts no longer provide a hedge benefit, they are no longer considered derivative trading instruments. This exposure relates to a single counterparty and is recorded at fair value based on current net recovery projections. The net recovery projections take into account the present value of projected payments expected to be received from the counterparty.

Monoline derivative credit exposure had a notional value of $21.1 billion and $38.4 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010. Mark-to-market monoline derivative credit exposure was $1.8 billion and $9.2 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 with the decrease driven by positive valuation adjustments on legacy assets, terminated monoline contracts and the reclassification of net monoline exposure to other assets mentioned above. The counterparty credit valuation adjustment related to monoline derivative exposure was $417 million and $5.3 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010. This adjustment reduced our net mark-to-market exposure to $1.3 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $3.9 billion at December 31 2010 and covered 24 percent of the mark-to-market exposure at December 31 2011, down from 57 percent at December 31 2010. We do not hold collateral against these derivative exposures. For more information on our monoline exposure, termination of certain monoline contracts and the transfer of monoline exposure to other assets, see GBAM on page 49.

We also have indirect exposure to monolines as we invest in securities where the issuers have purchased wraps. For example, municipalities and corporations purchase insurance in order to reduce their cost of borrowing. If the rating agencies downgrade the monolines, the credit rating of the bond may fall and may have an adverse impact on the market value of the security. In the case of default, we first look to the underlying securities and then to the purchased insurance for recovery. Investments in securities with purchased wraps issued by municipalities and corporations had a notional amount of $150 million and $2.4 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010. Mark-to-market investment exposure was $89 million at December 31 2011 compared to $2.2 billion at December 31 2010.

(2) Supplies are derived from a variety of perspectives to best analyze the perceived risks. For purposes of this table, the real estate industry is defined based on the borrower's or counterparty's primary business activity using operating cash flows and primary source of repayment as key factors.

(3) Represents net notional credit protection purchased. See Risk Mitigation below for additional information.

Risk Mitigation

We purchase credit protection to cover the funded portion as well as the unfunded portion of certain credit exposures. To lower the cost of obtaining our desired credit protection levels, credit exposure may be added within an industry, borrower or counterparty group by selling protection.

At December 31 2011 and 2010, net notional credit default protection purchased in our credit derivatives portfolio to hedge our funded and unfunded exposures for which we elected the fair value option, as well as certain other credit exposures was $19.4 billion and $20.1 billion. The mark-to-market effects, including the cost of net credit default protection hedging our credit exposure, resulted in net gains of $121 million in 2011 compared to net losses of $546 million in 2010.

The average VaR for these credit derivative hedges was $60 million in 2011 compared to $53 million in 2010. The average VaR for the related credit exposure was $74 million in 2011 compared to $65 million in 2010. There is a diversification effect between the net credit default protection hedging our credit exposure and the related credit exposure such that the combined average VaR was $38 million in 2011 compared to $41 million in 2010. See Trading Risk Management on page 113 for a description of our VaR calculation for the market based trading portfolio.

Tables 48 and 49 present the maturity profiles and the credit exposure debt ratings of the net credit default protection portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010. The distribution of debt ratings for net notional credit default protection purchased is shown as a negative amount.

(1) Ratings are refreshed on a quarterly basis.

(2) The Corporation considers ratings of BBB- or higher to meet the definition of investment grade.

(3) In addition to names which have not been rated, "NR" includes $(13.8) billion and $(13.8) billion of net credit default swap index positions at December 31 2011 and 2010. While index positions are principally investment grade, credit default swap indices include names in and across each of the ratings categories.

In addition to our net notional credit default protection purchased to cover the funded and unfunded portion of certain credit exposures, credit derivatives are used for market-making activities for clients and establishing positions intended to profit from directional or relative value changes. We execute the majority of our credit derivative trades in the OTC market with large multinational financial institutions, including broker/dealers and to a lesser degree, with a variety of other investors. Because these transactions are executed in the OTC market, we are subject to settlement risk. We are also subject to credit risk in the event that these counterparties fail to perform under the terms of these contracts. In most cases, credit derivative transactions are executed on a daily margin basis. Therefore, events such as a credit downgrade, depending on the ultimate rating level, or a breach of credit covenants would typically require an increase in the amount of collateral required of the counterparty, where applicable, and/or allow us to take additional protective measures such as early termination of all trades.

Table 50 presents the total contract/notional amount of credit derivatives outstanding and includes both purchased and written credit derivatives. The credit risk amounts are measured as the net replacement cost in the event the counterparties with contracts in a gain position to us fail to perform under the terms of those contracts. For information on our written credit derivatives, see Note 4 – Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements.

The credit risk amounts discussed above and presented in Table 50 take into consideration the effects of legally enforceable master netting agreements while amounts disclosed in Note 4 – Derivatives to the Consolidated Financial Statements are shown on a gross basis. Credit risk reflects the potential benefit from offsetting exposure to non-credit derivative products with the same counterparties that may be netted upon the occurrence of certain events thereby reducing our overall exposure.

Counterparty Credit Risk Valuation Adjustments

We record a counterparty credit risk valuation adjustment on certain derivative assets including our credit default protection purchased in order to properly reflect the credit quality of the counterparty. These adjustments are necessary as the market quotes on derivatives do not fully reflect the credit risk of the counterparties to the derivative assets. We consider collateral and legally enforceable master netting agreements that mitigate our credit exposure to each counterparty in determining the counterparty credit risk valuation adjustment. All or a portion of these counterparty credit risk valuation adjustments are subsequently adjusted due to changes in the value of the derivative contract, collateral and creditworthiness of the counterparty.

During 2011 and 2010 credit valuation gains (losses) of $(1.9) billion and $731 million ($(806) million and $(8) million, net of hedges) for counterparty credit risk were recognized in trading account profits for counterparty credit risk related to derivative assets. For information on our monoline counterparty credit risk see GBAM – Collateralized Debt Obligation and Monoline Exposure on page 51 and Monoline and Related Exposure on page 101.

Non-U.S. Portfolio

Our non-U.S. credit and trading portfolios are subject to country risk. We define country risk as the risk of loss from unfavorable economic and political conditions, currency fluctuations, social instability and changes in government policies. A risk management framework is in place to measure, monitor and manage non-U.S. risk and exposures. Management oversight of country risk, including cross-border risk, is provided by the Regional Risk Committee, a subcommittee of the CRC.

Table 51 sets forth total non-U.S. exposure broken out by region at December 31, 2011 and 2010. Non-U.S. exposure includes credit exposure net of local liabilities, securities and other investments issued by or domiciled in countries other than the U.S. Total non-U.S. exposure can be adjusted for externally guaranteed loans outstanding and certain collateral types. Exposures which are subject to external guarantees are reported under the country of the guarantor. Exposures with tangible collateral are reflected in the country where the collateral is held. For securities received other than cross-border resale agreements, outstandings are assigned to the domicile of the issuer of the securities. Resale agreements are generally presented based on the domicile of the counterparty, consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements.

(1) Local funding or liabilities are subtracted from local exposure consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements.
(2) Derivative assets included in the exposure amounts have been reduced by the amount of cash collateral applied of $48.8 billion and $44.2 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010.
(3) Cross-border resale agreements where the underlying securities are U.S. Treasury securities, in which case the domicile is the U.S., are excluded from this presentation.

Our total non-U.S. exposure was $232.6 billion at December 31, 2011, a decrease of $29.4 billion from December 31, 2010. Our non-U.S. exposure remained concentrated in Europe which accounted for $115.9 billion or 50 percent of total non-U.S. exposure. The European exposure was mostly in Western Europe and was distributed across a variety of industries. The decrease of $32.2 billion in Europe was primarily driven by our efforts to reduce risk in countries affected by the ongoing debt crisis in the Eurozone. Select European countries are further detailed in Table 54. Asia Pacific was our second largest non-U.S. exposure at $74.6 billion or 32 percent. The $1.3 billion increase in Asia Pacific was driven by increases in securities and local exposure in Japan and increases in the emerging markets, predominately in local exposure loans and securities offset by the sale of CCB shares. For more information on our CCB investment see Note 5 – Securities to the Consolidated Financial Statements. Latin America accounted for $17.4 billion or seven percent, of total non-U.S. exposure. The $2.6 billion increase in Latin America was primarily driven by an increase in Brazil in securities and local country exposure. Middle East and Africa increased $926 million to $4.6 billion, representing two percent of total non-U.S. exposure. Other non-U.S. exposure was $20.1 billion at December 31, 2011, a decrease of $2.1 billion in 2011 resulting primarily from a decrease in local exposure as a result of the sale of our Canadian consumer card business. For more information on our Asia Pacific and Latin America exposure, see non-U.S. exposure to selected countries defined as emerging markets on page 106.

Table 52 presents countries where total cross-border exposure exceeded one percent of our total assets. At December 31, 2011, the United Kingdom and Japan were the only countries where total cross-border exposure exceeded one percent of our total assets. At December 31, 2011, Canada and France had total cross-border exposure of $16.9 billion and $16.1 billion, representing 0.79 percent and 0.75 percent of total assets. Canada and France were the only other countries that had total cross-border exposure that exceeded 0.75 percent of our total assets at December 31, 2011.

Exposure includes cross-border claims by our non-U.S. offices, including loans, acceptances, time deposits placed, trading account assets, securities, derivative assets, other interest-earning investments and other monetary assets. Amounts also include unused commitments, SBLCs, commercial letters of credit and formal guarantees. Sector definitions are consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements for preparing the Country Exposure Report.

(1) Total cross-border exposure for the United Kingdom and Japan included derivatives exposure of $3.9 billion and $2.9 billion at December 31, 2011 and $2.8 billion and $2.8 billion at December 31, 2010 which has been reduced by the amount of cash collateral applied of $9.3 billion and $1.2 billion at December 31, 2011 and $12.0 billion and $1.6 billion at December 31, 2010. Derivative assets were additionally reduced by other marketable securities of $242 million and $1.7 billion at December 31, 2011 and $88 million and $743 million at December 31, 2010.
(2) At December 31, 2010 total cross-border exposure for Japan was $37.0 billion, representing 0.75 percent of total assets.

As presented in Table 53 non-U S exposure to borrowers or counterparties in emerging markets decreased $3 4 billion to $61 6 billion at December 31 2011 The decrease was due to the sale of CCB shares partially offset by growth in the rest of Asia Pacific and other regions Non-U S exposure to borrowers or counterparties in emerging markets represented 26 percent and 25 percent of total non-U S exposure at December 31 2011 and 2010

(1) There is no generally accepted definition of emerging markets The definition that we use includes all countries in Asia Pacific excluding Japan Australia and New Zealand all countries in Latin America excluding Cayman Islands and Bermuda all countries in Middle East and Africa and all countries in Central and Eastern Europe At December 31 2011 and 2010 there was $1 7 billion and $480 million in emerging market exposure associated for under the fair value option

(2) Includes acceptances, shot finans SBLCs and financial letters of credit and farmer guarantees

(3) Derivative assets are carried at fair value and have been reduced by the amount of cash collateral applied of $1 2 billion at both December 31, 2011 and 2010 At December 31 2011 and 2010 there were $353 million and $408 million of other marketable securities collateralizing derivative assets

(4) Generally cross-border resale agreements are presented based on the domicile of the counterparty consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements Cross-border resale agreements where the underlying securities are U S Treasury securities in which case the domicile is the U S are excluded from this presentation

(5) Cross-border exposure includes amounts payable to the Corporation by borrowers or counterparties with a country of residence other than the one in which the credit is booked regardless of the currency in which the claim is denominated consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements

(6) Local country exposure includes amounts payable to the Corporation by borrowers with a country of residence in which the credit is booked regardless of the currency in which the claim is denominated Local funding or liabilities are subtracted from local exposure consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements Total amount of available local liabilities funding local country exposure was $18 7 billion and $18 7 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 Local liabilities at December 31, 2011 in Asia Pacific Latin America and Middle East and Africa were $13 3 billion $1 0 billion and $278 million respectively of which $6 2 billion was in Singapore $2 3 billion in China $2 3 billion in Hong Kong $1 3 billion in India $973 million in Mexico and $804 million in Korea There were no other countries with available local liabilities funding local country exposure greater than $800 million

(7) No country included in Other Asia Pacific Other Latin America Other Middle East and Africa and Other Central and Eastern Europe had total non-U S exposure of more than $800 million

At December 31 2011 and 2010 60 percent and 70 percent of our emerging markets exposure was in Asia Pacific Emerging markets exposure in Asia Pacific decreased by $8 5 billion driven by a $19 0 billion decrease related to the sale of CCB shares partially offset by increases in loans and securities predominately in India China (excluding CCB) and South Korea

At December 31, 2011 and 2010 26 percent and 21 percent of our emerging markets exposure was in Latin America Latin America emerging markets exposure increased $2 5 billion driven by increases in securities and local exposure in Brazil

At December 31 2011 and 2010 eight percent and six percent of our emerging markets exposure was in Middle East and Africa with an increase of $926 million primarily driven by increases in loans and derivatives in United Arab Emirates and by increases in loans in Other Middle East and Africa At December 31 2011 and 2010 six percent and three percent of the emerging markets exposure was in Central and Eastern Europe with the increase driven by an increase in loans in the Russian Federation

Certain European countries including Greece Ireland Italy Portugal and Spain have experienced varying degrees of financial stress Risks from the continued debt crisis in Europe could continue to disrupt the financial markets which could have a detrimental impact on global economic conditions and sovereign and non-sovereign debt in these countries Uncertainty in the progress of debt restructuring negotiations and the lack of a clear resolution to the crisis have led to continued volatility in European financial markets as well as global financial markets In December 2011 the ECB announced initiatives to address European bank liquidity and funding concerns by providing low-cost, three-year loans to banks and expanding collateral eligibility In early 2012 S&P Fitch and Moody's downgraded the credit ratings of several European countries and S&P downgraded the credit rating of the EFSF adding to concerns about investor appetite for continued support in stabilizing the affected countries

Table 54 shows our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures excluding consumer credit card exposure in these countries at December 31 2011 Our total sovereign and non-sovereign exposure to these countries was $15 3 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $16 6 billion at December 31 2010 The total exposure to these countries net of hedges was $10 5 billion at December 31 2011 compared to $12 4 billion at December 31 2010 of which $252 million and $91 million was total sovereign exposure At December 31 2011 and 2010 the fair value of net credit default protection purchased was $4 9 billion and $4 2 billion

We hedge certain of our selected European country exposure with credit default protection in the form of CDS The majority of our CDS contracts are with highly-rated financial institutions primarily outside of the Eurozone and we work to limit or eliminate correlated CDS Due to our engagement in market-making activities our CDS portfolio contains contracts with various maturities to a diverse set of counterparties

In addition to our direct sovereign and non-sovereign exposures a significant deterioration of the European debt crisis could result in material reductions in the value of sovereign debt and other asset classes disruptions in capital markets widening of credit spreads loss of investor confidence in the financial services industry a slowdown in global economic activity and other adverse developments For additional information on the debt crisis in Europe see Item 1A Risk Factors

Losses could still result even if there is credit default protection purchased because the purchased credit protection contracts only pay out under certain scenarios and thus not all losses may be covered by the credit protection contracts The effectiveness of our CDS protection as a hedge of these risks is influenced by a number of factors including the contractual terms of the CDS Generally only the occurrence of a credit event as defined by the CDS terms (which may include among other events the failure to pay by or restructuring of, the reference entity) results in a payment under the purchased credit protection contracts The determination as to whether a credit event has occurred is made by the relevant International Swaps and Derivatives Association Inc (ISDA) Determination Committee (comprised of various ISDA member firms) based on the terms of the CDS and facts and circumstances for the event Accordingly uncertainties exist as to whether any particular strategy or policy action for addressing European debt crisis would constitute a credit event under the CDS A voluntary restructuring may not trigger a credit event under CDS terms and consequently may not trigger a payment under the CDS contract

(1) Includes loans, leases, overdrafts, commitments due within one year or on demand and trade finance-related exposure, which have not been reduced by associated hedges or credit default protection. Previously classified loan exposures are no longer offset by loan liabilities, which totaled $530 million at December 31, 2011. Of the $630 million previously applied for exposure reduction, $542 million was in Ireland, $217 million in Italy, $126 million in Spain and $34 million in Greece.

(2) Derivative assets are carried at fair value and have been reduced by the amount of cash collateral applied of $3.6 billion at December 31, 2011. At December 31, 2011, there was $83 million of other marketable securities collateralizing derivative assets. Derivative assets have not been reduced by hedges or credit default protection.

(3) Includes $388 million in notional value of reverse repurchase agreements, which are presented based on the domicile of the counterparty consistent with FFIEC reporting requirements. Cross-border resale agreements where the underlying collateral is U.S. Treasury securities are excluded from this presentation. Derivative exposures are reduced by hedges and short positions on a single-name basis to, but not less than, zero.

(4) Represents the fair value of credit default protection purchased, including $(3.4) billion in net credit default protection purchased by hedge funds and counterparties, $(1.4) billion in additional credit default protection to hedge derivative assets and $(74) million in other short positions.

(5) Represents country exposure less the fair value of hedges and credit default protection.

The provision for credit losses decreased $15.0 billion to $13.4 billion for 2011 compared to 2010. The provision for credit losses was $7.4 billion lower than net charge-offs for 2011, resulting in a reduction in the allowance for credit losses driven primarily by lower delinquencies, improved collection rates and fewer bankruptcy filings across the Card Services portfolio and improvement in overall credit quality in the commercial real estate portfolio partially offset by additions to consumer PCI loan portfolio reserves. This compared to a $5.9 billion reduction in the allowance for credit losses in 2010.

The provision for credit losses for the consumer portfolio decreased $11.1 billion to $14.3 billion for 2011 compared to 2010 reflecting improving economic conditions and improvement in the current and projected levels of delinquencies, collections and bankruptcies in the U.S. consumer credit card and unsecured consumer lending portfolios. Also contributing to the decrease were lower credit costs in the non-PCI home equity loan portfolio due to improving portfolio trends, partially offset by higher credit costs in the residential mortgage portfolio primarily reflecting further deterioration in home prices. For the consumer PCI loan portfolios, updates to our expected cash flows resulted in an increase in reserves of $2.2 billion in 2011 due primarily to our updated home price outlook. Reserve increases related to the consumer PCI loan portfolios in 2010 were also $2.2 billion.

The provision for credit losses for the commercial portfolio, including the provision for unfunded lending commitments, decreased $3.9 billion to a benefit of $915 million in 2011 compared to 2010 due to continued economic improvement and the resulting impact on property values in the commercial real estate portfolio, lower current and projected levels of delinquencies and bankruptcies in the U.S. small business commercial portfolio and improvement in borrower credit profiles across the remainder of the commercial portfolio.

Allowance for Credit Losses

Allowance for Loan and Lease Losses

The allowance for loan and lease losses is comprised of two components, as described below. We evaluate the adequacy of the allowance for loan and lease losses based on the total of these two components. The allowance for loan and lease losses excludes LHFS and loans accounted for under the fair value option as the fair value reflects a credit risk component.

The first component of the allowance for loan and lease losses covers nonperforming commercial loans and performing commercial loans that have been modified in a TDR, consumer real estate loans that have been modified in a TDR, renegotiated credit card and renegotiated unsecured consumer and small business loans. These loans are subject to impairment measurement based on the present value of expected future cash flows discounted at the loan's original effective interest rate or, in certain circumstances, impairment may also be based upon the collateral value or the loan's observable market price if available. Impairment measurement for the renegotiated credit card, unsecured consumer and small business TDR portfolios is based on the present value of projected cash flows discounted using the average portfolio contractual interest rate, excluding promotionally priced loans in effect prior to restructuring and prior to any risk-based or penalty-based increase in rate on the restructured loans. For purposes of computing this specific loss component of the allowance, larger impaired loans are evaluated individually and smaller impaired loans are evaluated as a pool using historical loss experience for the respective product types and risk ratings of the loans.

The second component of the allowance for loan and lease losses covers the remaining consumer and commercial loans and leases that have incurred losses but are not yet individually identifiable. The allowance for consumer and certain homogeneous commercial loan and lease products is based on aggregated portfolio evaluations, generally by product type. Loss forecast models are utilized that consider a variety of factors including, but not limited to, historical loss experience, estimated defaults or foreclosures based on portfolio trends, delinquencies, economic trends and credit scores. Our consumer real estate loss forecast model estimates the portion of loans that will default based on individual loan attributes, the most significant of which are refreshed LTV or CLTV, and borrower credit score as well as vintage and geography, all of which are further broken down into current delinquency status. Incorporating refreshed LTV and CLTV into our probability of default allows us to factor the impact of changes in home prices into our allowance for loan and lease losses. These loss forecast models are updated on a quarterly basis to incorporate information reflecting the current economic environment. As of December 31, 2011, the loss forecast process resulted in reductions in the allowance for most consumer portfolios, particularly the credit card and direct/indirect portfolios.

The allowance for commercial loan and lease losses is established by product type after analyzing historical loss experience by internal risk rating, current economic conditions, industry performance trends, geographic and obligor concentrations within each portfolio, and any other pertinent information. The statistical models for commercial loans are generally updated annually and utilize our historical database of actual defaults and other data. The loan risk ratings and composition of the commercial portfolios are updated at least quarterly to incorporate the most recent data reflecting the current economic environment. For risk rated commercial loans, we estimate the probability of default and the LGD based on our historical experience of defaults and credit losses. Factors considered when assessing the internal risk rating include the value of the underlying collateral, if applicable, the industry in which the obligor operates, the obligor's liquidity and other financial indicators, and other quantitative and qualitative factors relevant to the obligor's credit risk. When estimating the allowance for loan and lease losses, management relies not only on models derived from historical experience but also on its judgment in considering the effect on probable losses inherent in the portfolios due to the current macroeconomic environment and trends, inherent uncertainty in models and other qualitative factors. As of December 31, 2011, updates to the loan risk ratings and portfolio composition resulted in reductions in the allowance for all commercial portfolios.

Also included within this second component of the allowance for loan and lease losses and determined separately from the procedures outlined above are reserves that are maintained to cover uncertainties that affect our estimate of probable losses including domestic and global economic uncertainty, large single name defaults, significant events which could disrupt financial markets and model imprecision.

We monitor differences between estimated and actual incurred loan and lease losses. This monitoring process includes periodic assessments by senior management of loan and lease portfolios and the models used to estimate incurred losses in those portfolios.

Additions to or reductions of the allowance for loan and lease losses generally are recorded through charges or credits to the provision for credit losses. Credit exposures deemed to be uncollectible are charged against the allowance for loan and lease losses. Recoveries of previously charged off amounts are credited to the allowance for loan and lease losses.

The allowance for loan and lease losses for the consumer portfolio as presented in Table 56 was $29.6 billion at December 31, 2011, a decrease of $5.1 billion from December 31, 2010. This decrease was primarily due to improving economic conditions and improvement in the current and projected levels of delinquencies, collections and bankruptcies in the U.S. consumer credit card and unsecured consumer lending portfolios. With respect to the consumer PCI loan portfolios, updates to our expected cash flows resulted in an increase in reserves through provision of $2.2 billion in 2011, within the discontinued real estate, home equity and residential mortgage portfolios, primarily due to our updated home price outlook. Reserve increases related to the consumer PCI loan portfolios in 2010 were also $2.2 billion.

The allowance for loan and lease losses for the commercial portfolio was $4.1 billion at December 31, 2011, a $3.0 billion decrease from December 31, 2010. The decrease was driven by improvement in the economy and the resulting impact on property values in the commercial real estate portfolio, improvement in projected delinquencies in the U.S. small business commercial portfolio, mostly within Card Services, and stronger borrower credit profiles in the U.S. commercial portfolios, primarily in Global Commercial Banking and GBAM.

The allowance for loan and lease losses as a percentage of total loans and leases outstanding was 3.68 percent at December 31, 2011 compared to 4.47 percent at December 31, 2010. The decrease in the ratio was largely due to improved credit quality and economic conditions which led to the reduction in the allowance for credit losses discussed above The December 31 2011 and 2010 ratios above include the PCI loan portfolio Excluding the PCI loan portfolio the allowance for loan and lease losses as a percentage of total loans and leases outstanding was 2 86 percent at December 31 2011 compared to 3 94 percent at December 31 2010

Absent unexpected deterioration in the economy we expect reductions in the allowance for loan and lease losses to continue in 2012 However in both consumer and commercial portfolios we expect these reductions to be less than those in 2011 and 2010

Table 55 presents a rollforward of the allowance for credit losses for 2011 and 2010

(1) Ratios are calculated as allowance for loan and lease losses as a percentage of loans and leases outstanding excluding loans accounted for under the fair value option Consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option included residential mortgage loans of $908 million and discontinued real estate of $1 3 billion at December 31 2011 There were no consumer loans accounted for under the fair value option at December 31 2010 Commercial loans accounted for under the fair value option included U S commercial loans of $2 2 billion and $1 9 billion non-U S commercial loans of $4 4 billion and $1 7 billion and commercial real estate loans of $0 and $79 million at December 31 2011 and 2010
(2) Includes allowance for U S small business commercial loans of $883 million and $1 5 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010
(3) Includes allowance for loan and lease losses for impaired commercial loans of $545 million and $1 1 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010
(4) Includes $6 5 billion and $8 4 billion of valuation reserves presented with the allowance for credit losses related to PCI loans at December 31 2011 and 2010

Reserve for Unfunded Lending Commitments

In addition to the allowance for loan and lease losses we also estimate probable losses related to unfunded lending commitments such as letters of credit financial guarantees unfunded bankers acceptances and binding loan commitments excluding commitments accounted for under the fair value option Unfunded lending commitments are subject to the same assessment as funded loans including estimates of probability of default and LGD Due to the nature of unfunded commitments the estimate of probable losses must also consider utilization To estimate the portion of these undrawn commitments that is likely to be drawn by a borrower at the time of estimated default analyses of the Corporation s historical experience are applied to the unfunded commitments to estimate the funded EAD The expected loss for unfunded lending commitments is the product of the probability of default the LGD and the EAD adjusted for any qualitative factors including economic uncertainty and inherent imprecision in models

The reserve for unfunded lending commitments at December 31 2011 was $714 million $474 million lower than December 31 2010 driven by accretion of purchase accounting adjustments on acquired Merrill Lynch unfunded positions and improved credit quality in the unfunded portfolio

Market Risk Management

Market risk is the risk that values of assets and liabilities or revenues will be adversely affected by changes in market conditions This risk is inherent in the financial instruments associated with our operations and/or activities including loans deposits securities short-term borrowings long-term debt trading account assets and liabilities and derivatives Market-sensitive assets and liabilities are generated through loans and deposits associated with our traditional banking business customer and other trading operations the ALM process credit risk mitigation activities and mortgage banking activities In the event of market volatility factors such as underlying market movements and liquidity have an impact on the results of the Corporation

Our traditional banking loan and deposit products are nontrading positions and are generally reported at amortized cost for assets or the amount owed for liabilities (historical cost) However these positions are still subject to changes in economic value based on varying market conditions primarily changes in the levels of interest rates The risk of adverse changes in the economic value of our nontrading positions is managed through our ALM activities We have elected to account for certain assets and liabilities under the fair value option For further information on the fair value of certain financial assets and liabilities see Note 22 – Fair Value Measurements to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Our trading positions are reported at fair value with changes currently reflected in income Trading positions are subject to various risk factors which include exposures to interest rates and foreign exchange rates as well as mortgage equity commodity issuer credit and market liquidity risk factors We seek to mitigate these risk exposures by using techniques that encompass a variety of financial instruments in both the cash and derivatives markets The following discusses the key risk components along with respective risk mitigation techniques

Interest Rate Risk

Interest rate risk represents exposures to instruments whose values vary with the level or volatility of interest rates These instruments include but are not limited to loans debt securities certain trading-related assets and liabilities deposits borrowings and derivatives Hedging instruments used to mitigate these risks include derivatives such as options futures forwards and swaps

Foreign Exchange Risk

Foreign exchange risk represents exposures to changes in the values of current holdings and future cash flows denominated in currencies other than the U S dollar The types of instruments exposed to this risk include investments in non-U S subsidiaries foreign currency-denominated loans and securities future cash flows in foreign currencies arising from foreign exchange transactions foreign currency-denominated debt and various foreign exchange derivatives whose values fluctuate with changes in the level or volatility of currency exchange rates or non-U S interest rates Hedging instruments used to mitigate this risk include foreign exchange options currency swaps futures forwards foreign currency-denominated debt and deposits

Mortgage Risk

Mortgage risk represents exposures to changes in the value of mortgage-related instruments The values of these instruments are sensitive to prepayment rates mortgage rates agency debt ratings default market liquidity government participation and interest rate volatility Our exposure to these instruments takes several forms First we trade and engage in market-making activities in a variety of mortgage securities including whole loans pass-through certificates commercial mortgages and collateralized mortgage obligations including CDOs using mortgages as underlying collateral Second we originate a variety of MBS which involves the accumulation of mortgage related loans in anticipation of eventual securitization Third we may hold positions in mortgage securities and residential mortgage loans as part of the ALM portfolio Fourth we create MSRs as part of our mortgage origination activities See Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles and Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights to the Consolidated Financial Statements for additional information on MSRs Hedging instruments used to mitigate this risk include foreign exchange options currency swaps futures forwards and foreign currency-denominated debt

Equity Market Risk

Equity market risk represents exposures to securities that represent an ownership interest in a corporation in the form of domestic and foreign common stock or other equity-linked instruments Instruments that would lead to this exposure include but are not limited to the following common stock exchange-traded funds American Depositary Receipts convertible bonds listed equity options (puts and calls) OTC equity options equity total return swaps equity index futures and other equity derivative products Hedging instruments used to mitigate this risk include options futures swaps convertible bonds and cash positions

Commodity Risk

Commodity risk represents exposures to instruments traded in the petroleum natural gas power and metals markets These instruments consist primarily of futures forwards swaps and options Hedging instruments used to mitigate this risk include options futures and swaps in the same or similar commodity product as well as cash positions

Issuer Credit Risk

Issuer credit risk represents exposures to changes in the creditworthiness of individual issuers or groups of issuers Our portfolio is exposed to issuer credit risk where the value of an asset may be adversely impacted by changes in the levels of credit spreads by credit migration or by defaults Hedging instruments used to mitigate this risk include bonds CDS and other credit fixed-income instruments

Market Liquidity Risk

Market liquidity risk represents the risk that the level of expected market activity changes dramatically and in certain cases may even cease This exposes us to the risk that we will not be able to transact business and execute trades in an orderly manner which may impact our results This impact could further be exacerbated if expected hedging or pricing correlations are compromised by disproportionate demand or lack of demand for certain instruments We utilize various risk mitigating techniques as discussed in more detail in Trading Risk Management

Trading Risk Management

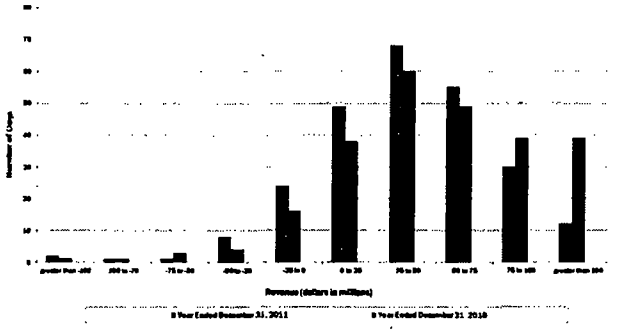
Trading-related revenues represent the amount earned from trading positions including market-based net interest income which are taken in a diverse range of financial instruments and markets Trading account assets and liabilities and derivative positions are reported at fair value For more information on fair value see Note 22 – Fair Value Measurements to the Consolidated Financial Statements Trading-related revenues can be volatile and are largely driven by general market conditions and customer demand Also trading-related revenues are dependent on the volume and type of transactions the level of risk assumed and the volatility of price and rate movements at any given time within the ever-changing market environment

The Global Markets Risk Committee (GRC) chaired by the Global Markets Risk Executive has been designated by ALMRC as the primary governance authority for global markets risk management including trading risk management The GRC s focus is to take a forward-looking view of the primary credit and market risks impacting GBAM and prioritize those that need a proactive risk mitigation strategy Market risks that impact businesses outside of GBAM are monitored and governed by their respective governance authorities

The GRC monitors significant daily revenues and losses by business and the primary drivers of the revenues or losses Thresholds are in place for each of our businesses in order to determine if the revenue or loss is considered to be significant for that business If any of the thresholds are exceeded an explanation of the variance is provided to the GRC The thresholds are developed in coordination with the respective risk managers to highlight those revenues or losses that exceed what is considered to be normal daily income statement volatility

The histogram below is a graphic depiction of trading volatility and illustrates the daily level of trading related revenue for 2011 and 2010 During 2011 positive trading related revenue was recorded for 86 percent (214 days) of the trading days of which 66 percent (165 days) were daily trading gains of over $25 million five percent (12 days) of the trading days had losses greater than $25 million and the largest loss was $119 million This is compared to 2010 where positive trading-related revenue was recorded for 90 percent (225 days) of the trading days of which 75 percent (187 days) were daily trading gains of over $25 million four percent (nine days) of the trading days had losses greater than $25 million and the largest loss was $102 million

Histogram of Daily Trading-related Revenue



To evaluate risk in our trading activities we focus on the actual and potential volatility of individual positions as well as portfolios VaR is a key statistic used to measure market risk In order to manage day-to-day risks VaR is subject to trading limits both for our overall trading portfolio and within individual businesses All limit excesses are communicated to management for review

A VaR model simulates the value of a portfolio under a range of hypothetical scenarios in order to generate a distribution of potential gains and losses VaR represents the worst loss the portfolio is expected to experience based on historical trends with a given level of confidence and depends on the volatility of the positions in the portfolio and on how strongly their risks are correlated Within any VaR model there are significant and numerous assumptions that will differ from company to company In addition the accuracy of a VaR model depends on the availability and quality of historical data for each of the positions in the portfolio A VaR model may require additional modeling assumptions for new products that do not have extensive historical price data or for illiquid positions for which accurate daily prices are not consistently available

A VaR model is an effective tool in estimating ranges of potential gains and losses on our trading portfolios There are however many limitations inherent in a VaR model as it utilizes historical results over a defined time period to estimate future performance Historical results may not always be indicative of future results and changes in market conditions or in the composition of the underlying portfolio could have a material impact on the accuracy of the VaR model In order for the VaR model to reflect current market conditions we update the historical data underlying our VaR model on a bi-weekly basis and regularly review the assumptions underlying the model Our VaR model utilizes three years of historical data This time period was chosen to ensure that the VaR reflects both a broad range of market movements as well as being sensitive to recent changes in market volatility

We continually review evaluate and enhance our VaR model so that it reflects the material risks in our trading portfolio Nevertheless due to the limitations previously discussed we have historically used the VaR model as only one of the components in managing our trading risk and also use other techniques such as stress testing and desk level limits Periods of extreme market stress influence the reliability of these techniques to varying degrees

The accuracy of the VaR methodology is reviewed by backtesting which involves comparing actual results against expectations derived from historical data the VaR results against the daily profit and loss Graphic representation of the backtesting results with additional explanation of backtesting excesses are reported to the GRC Backtesting excesses occur when trading losses exceed VaR Senior management reviews and evaluates the results of these tests In periods of market stress the GRC members communicate daily to discuss losses and VaR limit excesses As a result of this process the businesses may selectively reduce risk Where economically feasible positions are sold or macroeconomic hedges are executed to reduce the exposure

Our VaR model uses a historical simulation approach based on three years of historical data and an expected shortfall methodology equivalent to a 99 percent confidence level Statistically this means that losses will exceed VaR on average one out of 100 trading days or two to three times each year The number of actual backtesting excesses observed is dependent on current market performance relative to historic market volatility For most of 2011 the three years of historical market data utilized for VaR included the volatile fourth quarter of 2008 Subsequent market volatility has generally been lower and as a result the size of the largest trading losses experienced since then has been lower than would be expected based on the VaR measure Actual losses did not exceed daily trading VaR in 2011 or 2010 The graph below shows daily trading-related revenue and VaR for 2011

(1) The high and low for the total portfolio may not equal the sum of the individual components as the high or loss of the individual portfolios may have occurred on different trading days

The $35 million decrease in average VaR during 2011 was primarily due to a reduction in risk during the year This was driven primarily by a decrease in credit exposures where average VaR decreased $62 million compared to 2010 In addition for 2010 and 2011 data from the more volatile periods of 2007 and 2008 were no longer included in our three-year historical dataset These impacts were partially offset by a reduction in portfolio diversification VaR of $37 million

the business and enterprise control function levels to address operational risk in revenue producing and non-revenue producing units A sound internal governance structure enhances the effectiveness of the Corporation's Operational Risk Management Program and is accomplished at the enterprise level through formal oversight by the Board the CRO and a variety of management committees and risk oversight groups aligned to the Corporation's overall risk governance framework and practices Of these the Operational Risk Committee (ORC) oversees and approves the Corporation's policies and processes for sound operational risk management The ORC also serves as an escalation point for critical operational risk matters within the Corporation The ORC reports operational risk activities to the Enterprise Risk Committee of the Board

Within the Global Risk Management organization the Corporate Operational Risk team develops and guides the strategies policies practices controls and monitoring tools for assessing and managing operational risks across the organization and reports results to the businesses enterprise control functions senior management governance committees and the Board

The business and enterprise control functions are responsible for all the risks within the business line including operational risks In addition to enterprise risk management tools such as loss reporting scenario analysis and RCSAs operational risk executives working in conjunction with senior business executives have developed key tools to help identify measure mitigate and monitor risk in each business and enterprise control function Examples of these include personnel management practices data reconciliation processes fraud management units transaction processing monitoring and analysis business recovery planning and new product introduction processes The business and enterprise control functions are also responsible for consistently implementing and monitoring adherence to corporate practices

Business and enterprise control function management uses the enterprise risk and control self-assessment process to identify and evaluate the status of risk and control issues including mitigation plans as appropriate The goal of this process is to assess changing market and business conditions to evaluate key risks impacting each business and enterprise control function and assess the controls in place to mitigate the risks The risk and control self-assessment process is documented at periodic intervals Key operational risk indicators for these risks have been developed and are used to help identify trends and issues on an enterprise business and enterprise control function level Independent review and challenge to the Corporation's overall operational risk management framework is performed by the Corporate Operational Risk Validation Team

The enterprise control functions participate in the operational risk management process in two ways First these organizations manage risk in their functional department Second they provide specialized risk management services (e.g. information management vendor management) within their area of expertise to the enterprise and the businesses and other enterprise control functions they support These groups also work with business and risk executives to develop and guide appropriate strategies policies practices controls and monitoring tools for each business and enterprise control function relative to these programs

Additionally where appropriate insurance policies are purchased to mitigate the impact of operational losses when and if they occur These insurance policies are explicitly incorporated in the structural features of operational risk evaluation As insurance recoveries especially given recent market events are subject to legal and financial uncertainty the inclusion of these insurance policies is subject to reductions in their expected mitigating benefits

Complex Accounting Estimates

Our significant accounting principles as described in Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements are essential in understanding the Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations Many of our significant accounting principles require complex judgments to estimate the values of assets and liabilities We have procedures and processes in place to facilitate making these judgments

The more judgmental estimates are summarized in the following discussion We have identified and described the development of the variables most important in the estimation processes that with the exception of accrued taxes involve mathematical models to derive the estimates In many cases there are numerous alternative judgments that could be used in the process of determining the inputs to the models Where alternatives exist we have used the factors that we believe represent the most reasonable value in developing the inputs Actual performance that differs from our estimates of the key variables could impact our results of operations Separate from the possible future impact to our results of operations from input and model variables the value of our lending portfolio and market-sensitive assets and liabilities may change subsequent to the balance sheet date often significantly due to the nature and magnitude of future credit and market conditions Such credit and market conditions may change quickly and in unforeseen ways and the resulting volatility could have a significant negative effect on future operating results These fluctuations would not be indicative of deficiencies in our models or inputs

The allowance for credit losses which includes the allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments represents management's estimate of probable losses inherent in the Corporation's loan portfolio excluding those loans accounted for under the fair value option Changes to the allowance for credit losses are reported in the Consolidated Statement of Income in the provision for credit losses Our process for determining the allowance for credit losses is discussed in Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles to the Consolidated Financial Statements We evaluate our allowance at the portfolio segment level and our portfolio segments are home loans credit card and other consumer and commercial Due to the variability in the drivers of the assumptions used in this process estimates of the portfolio's inherent risks and overall collectability change with changes in the economy individual industries countries and borrowers' or counterparties' ability and willingness to repay their obligations The degree to which any particular assumption affects the allowance for credit losses depends on the severity of the change and its relationship to the other assumptions

Key judgments used in determining the allowance for credit losses include risk ratings for pools of commercial loans and leases market and collateral values and discount rates for individually evaluated loans product type classifications for consumer and commercial loans and leases loss rates used for consumer and commercial loans and leases adjustments made to address current events and conditions considerations regarding domestic and global economic uncertainty and overall credit conditions

Our estimate for the allowance for loan and lease losses is sensitive to the loss rates and expected cash flows from our home loans and credit card and other consumer portfolio segments For each one percent increase in the loss rates on loans collectively evaluated for impairment in our home loans portfolio segment excluding PCI loans coupled with a one percent decrease in the discounted cash flows on those loans individually evaluated for impairment within the portfolio segment the allowance for loan and lease losses at December 31 2011 would have increased by $158 million PCI loans within our home loans portfolio segment are initially recorded at fair value Applicable accounting guidance prohibits carry-over or creation of valuation allowances in the initial accounting However subsequent decreases in the expected cash flows from the date of acquisition result in a charge to the provision for credit losses and a corresponding increase to the allowance for loan and lease losses We subject our PCI portfolio to stress scenarios to evaluate the potential impact given certain events A one percent decrease in the expected cash flows could result in a $241 million impairment of the portfolio of which $115 million would be related to our discontinued real estate portfolio For each one percent increase in the loss rates on loans collectively evaluated for impairment within our credit card and other consumer portfolio segment coupled with a one percent decrease in the expected cash flows on those loans individually evaluated for impairment within this portfolio segment the allowance for loan and lease losses at December 31 2011 would have increased by $84 million

Our allowance for loan and lease losses is sensitive to the risk ratings assigned to loans and leases within our commercial portfolio segment Assuming a downgrade of one level in the internal risk ratings for commercial loans and leases except loans and leases already risk-rated Doubtful as defined by regulatory authorities the allowance for loan and lease losses would have increased by $3 1 billion at December 31 2011

The allowance for loan and lease losses as a percentage of total loans and leases at December 31 2011 was 3 69 percent and these hypothetical increases in the allowance would raise the ratio to 4 00 percent

These sensitivity analyses do not represent management's expectations of the deterioration in risk ratings or the increases in loss rates but are provided as hypothetical scenarios to assess the sensitivity of the allowance for loan and lease losses to changes in key inputs We believe the risk ratings and loss severities currently in use are appropriate and that the probability of the alternative scenarios outlined above occurring within a short period of time is remote

The process of determining the level of the allowance for credit losses requires a high degree of judgment It is possible that others given the same information may at any point in time reach different reasonable conclusions

MSRs are nonfinancial assets that are created when a mortgage loan is sold and we retain the right to service the loan We account for consumer MSRs at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in the Consolidated Statement of Income in mortgage banking income Commercial-related and residential reverse mortgage MSRs are accounted for using the amortization method lower of amortized cost or fair value with impairment recognized as a reduction of mortgage banking income At December 31 2011 our total MSR balance was $7 5 billion

We determine the fair value of our consumer MSRs using a valuation model that calculates the present value of estimated future net servicing income The model incorporates key economic assumptions including estimates of prepayment rates and resultant weighted-average lives of the MSRs and the option-adjusted spread levels These variables can and generally do change from quarter to quarter as market conditions and projected interest rates change These assumptions are subjective in nature and changes in these assumptions could materially affect our operating results For example decreasing the prepayment rate assumption used in the valuation of our consumer MSRs by 10 percent while keeping all other assumptions unchanged could have resulted in an estimated increase of $839 million in MSRs and mortgage banking income at December 31 2011 This impact does not reflect any hedge strategies that may be undertaken to mitigate such risk

We manage potential changes in the fair value of MSRs through a comprehensive risk management program The intent is to mitigate the effects of changes in the fair value of MSRs through the use of risk management instruments To reduce the sensitivity of earnings to interest rate and market value fluctuations securities as well as certain derivatives such as options and interest rate swaps may be used as economic hedges of the MSRs but are not designated as accounting hedges These instruments are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recognized in mortgage banking income For more information see Mortgage Banking Risk Management on page 119

For additional information on MSRs including the sensitivity of weighted-average lives and the fair value of MSRs to changes in modeled assumptions see Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Fair Value of Financial Instruments

We determine the fair values of financial instruments based on the fair value hierarchy under applicable accounting guidance which requires an entity to maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs when measuring fair value Applicable accounting guidance establishes three levels of inputs used to measure fair value We carry trading account assets and liabilities derivative assets and liabilities AFS debt and marketable equity securities certain MSRs and certain other assets at fair value Also we account for certain corporate loans and loan commitments LHFS other short-term borrowings securities financing agreements asset-backed secured financings long-term deposits and long-term debt under the fair value option For more information see Note 22 – Fair Value Measurements and Note 23 – Fair Value Option to the Consolidated Financial Statements

The fair values of assets and liabilities include adjustments for market liquidity credit quality and other deal specific factors where appropriate Valuations of products using models or other techniques are sensitive to assumptions used for the significant inputs Where market data is available the inputs used for valuation reflect that information as of our valuation date Inputs to valuation models are considered unobservable if they are supported by little or no market activity In periods of extreme volatility lessened liquidity or an illiquid market there may be more variability in market pricing or a lack of market data to use in the valuation process In keeping with the prudent application of estimates and management judgment in determining the fair value of assets and liabilities we have in place various processes and controls that include a model validation policy that requires review and approval of quantitative models used for deal pricing financial statement fair value determination and risk quantification a trading product valuation policy that requires verification of all traded product valuations and a periodic review and substantiation of daily profit and loss reporting for all traded products Primarily through validation controls we utilize both broker and pricing service inputs which can and do include both market observable and internally-modeled values and/or valuation inputs Our reliance on this information is tempered by the knowledge of how the broker and/or pricing service develops its data with a higher degree of reliance applied to those that are more directly observable and lesser reliance applied to those developed through their own internal modeling Similarly broker quotes that are executable are given a higher level of reliance than indicative broker quotes which are not executable These processes and controls are performed independently of the business

Trading account assets and liabilities are carried at fair value based primarily on actively traded markets where prices are from either direct market quotes or observed transactions Liquidity is a significant factor in the determination of the fair value of trading account assets and liabilities Market price quotes may not be readily available for some positions or positions within a market sector where trading activity has slowed significantly or ceased Situations of illiquidity generally are triggered by market perception of credit uncertainty regarding a single company or a specific market sector In these instances fair value is determined based on limited available market information and other factors principally from reviewing the issuer's financial statements and changes in credit ratings made by one or more of the rating agencies

Trading account profits which represent the net amount earned from our trading positions can be volatile and are largely driven by general market conditions and customer demand Trading account profits are dependent on the volume and type of transactions the level of risk assumed and the volatility of price and rate movements at any given time within the ever-changing market environment To evaluate risk in our trading activities we focus on the actual and potential volatility of individual positions as well as portfolios At a portfolio and corporate level we use trading limits stress testing and tools such as VaR modeling which estimates a potential daily loss that we do not expect to exceed with a specified confidence level to measure and manage market risk For more information on VaR see Trading Risk Management on page 113

The fair values of derivative assets and liabilities traded in the OTC market are determined using quantitative models that require the use of multiple market inputs including interest rates prices and indices to generate continuous yield or pricing curves and volatility factors which are used to value the positions The majority of market inputs are actively quoted and can be validated through external sources including brokers market transactions and third-party pricing services Estimation risk is greater for derivative asset and liability positions that are either option-based or have longer maturity dates where observable market inputs are less readily available or are unobservable in which case quantitative-based extrapolations of rate price or index scenarios are used in determining fair values The Corporation incorporates within its fair value measurements of OTC derivatives a valuation adjustment to reflect the credit risk associated with the net position Positions are netted by counterparty and fair value for net long exposures is adjusted for counterparty credit risk while the fair value for net short exposures is adjusted for our own credit risk The credit adjustments are determined by reference to existing direct market reference costs of credit or where direct references are not available a proxy is applied consistent with direct references for other counterparties that are similar in credit risk An estimate of severity of loss is also used in the determination of fair value primarily based on market implied experience adjusted for any more recent name specific expectations

Level 3 Assets and Liabilities

Financial assets and liabilities whose values are based on valuation techniques that require inputs that are both unobservable and are significant to the overall fair value measurement are classified as Level 3 under the fair value hierarchy established in applicable accounting guidance The Level 3 financial assets and liabilities include consumer MSRs highly structured complex or long-dated derivative contracts and private equity investments as well as certain loans MBS ABS structured liabilities and CDOs The fair value of these Level 3 financial assets and liabilities is determined using pricing models discounted cash flow methodologies or similar techniques for which the determination of fair value requires significant management judgment or estimation

(1) Level 3 total assets and liabilities are shown before the impact of counterparty netting related to our derivative positions

During 2011 we recognized net gains of $451 million on Level 3 assets and liabilities The net gains during the year were primarily in trading account profits combined with gains on IRLCs partially offset by losses on MSRs There were net unrealized gains of $19 million in accumulated OCI on Level 3 assets and liabilities at December 31 2011

Level 3 financial instruments such as our consumer MSRs may be economically hedged with derivatives classified as Level 1 or 2 therefore gains or losses associated with Level 3 financial instruments may be offset by gains or losses associated with financial instruments classified in other levels of the fair value hierarchy The Level 3 gains and losses recorded in earnings did not have a significant impact on our liquidity or capital resources

We conduct a review of our fair value hierarchy classifications on a quarterly basis Transfers into or out of Level 3 are made if the significant inputs used in the financial models measuring the fair values of the assets and liabilities became unobservable or observable respectively in the current marketplace These transfers are considered to be effective as of the beginning of the quarter in which they occur For additional information on the significant transfers into and out of Level 3 during 2011 see Note 22 – Fair Value Measurements to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Global Principal Investments

GPI is included within Equity Investments in All Other on page 54 GPI is comprised of a diversified portfolio of private equity real estate and other alternative investments in both privately-held and publicly-traded companies These investments are made either directly in a company or held through a fund At December 31 2011 this portfolio totaled $5 6 billion including $4 3 billion of non-public investments

Certain equity investments in the portfolio are subject to investment company accounting under applicable accounting guidance and accordingly are carried at fair value with changes in fair value reported in equity investment income Initially the transaction price of the investment is generally considered to be the best indicator of fair value Thereafter valuation of direct investments is based on an assessment of each individual investment using methodologies that include publicly-traded comparables derived by multiplying a key performance metric (e g earnings before interest taxes depreciation and amortization) of the portfolio company by the relevant valuation multiple observed for comparable companies acquisition comparables entry-level multiples and discounted cash flows and are subject to appropriate discounts for lack of liquidity or marketability Certain factors that may influence changes in fair value include but are not limited to recapitalizations subsequent rounds of financing and offerings in the equity or debt capital markets For fund investments we generally record the fair value of our proportionate interest in the fund's capital as reported by the fund's respective managers

Accrued Income Taxes and Deferred Tax Assets

Accrued income taxes reported as a component of accrued expenses and other liabilities on our Consolidated Balance Sheet represent the net amount of current income taxes we expect to pay to or receive from various taxing jurisdictions attributable to our operations to date We currently file income tax returns in more than 100 jurisdictions and consider many factors including statutory judicial and regulatory guidance, in estimating the appropriate accrued income taxes for each jurisdiction

In applying the applicable accounting guidance we monitor relevant tax authorities and change our estimate of accrued income taxes due to changes in income tax laws and their interpretation by the courts and regulatory authorities These revisions of our estimate of accrued income taxes which also may result from our income tax planning and from the resolution of income tax controversies may be material to our operating results for any given period

Net deferred tax assets reported as a component of other assets on our Consolidated Balance Sheet represent the net decrease in taxes expected to be paid in the future because of net operating loss (NOL) and tax credit carryforwards and because of future reversals of temporary differences in the bases of assets and liabilities as measured by tax laws and their bases as reported in the financial statements NOL and tax credit carryforwards result in reductions to future tax liabilities and many of these attributes can expire if not utilized within certain periods We consider the need for valuation allowances to reduce net deferred tax assets to the amounts we estimate are more-likely-than-not to be realized

While we have established some valuation allowances for certain state and non-U S deferred tax assets we have concluded that our estimates of future taxable income by jurisdiction will be sufficient to realize all U S federal and U K deferred tax assets including NOL and tax credit carryforwards that are not subject to any special limitations (such as change-in-control limitations) prior to any expiration Significant decreases to our estimate of future taxable income by jurisdiction could materially change our conclusions about how much of our tax attributes and other deferred tax assets are more likely than not to be realized prior to their expiration See Note 21 – Income Taxes to the Consolidated Financial Statements for a table of significant tax attributes and additional information

Background

The nature of and accounting for goodwill and intangible assets are discussed in Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles and Note 10 – Goodwill and Intangible Assets to the Consolidated Financial Statements Goodwill is reviewed for potential impairment at the reporting unit level on an annual basis which for the Corporation is performed as of June 30 and in interim periods if events or circumstances indicate a potential impairment A reporting unit is an operating segment or one level below As reporting units are determined after an acquisition or evolve with changes in business strategy goodwill is assigned to reporting units and it no longer retains its association with a particular acquisition All of the revenue streams and related activities of a reporting unit whether acquired or organic are available to support the value of the goodwill

We use the reporting units allocated equity as a proxy for the carrying amount of equity for each reporting unit in our goodwill impairment tests as we do not maintain a record of equity as defined under GAAP at the reporting unit level Allocated equity includes economic capital goodwill and a percentage of intangible assets allocated to the reporting units The allocation of economic capital to the reporting units utilized for goodwill impairment testing has the same basis as the allocation of economic capital to our operating segments Economic capital allocation plans are incorporated into the Corporation s financial plan which is approved by the Board on an annual basis Allocated equity is updated on a quarterly basis

The Corporation s common stock price remained volatile during 2011 and 2010 primarily due to the continued uncertainty in the economy and in the financial services industry as well as adverse developments related to our mortgage business and increased regulation During these periods our market capitalization remained below our recorded book value We estimate that the fair value of all reporting units in aggregate as of the June 30 2011 annual goodwill impairment test was $210 2 billion and the common stock market capitalization of the Corporation as of that date was $111 1 billion ($58 6 billion at December 31 2011) As none of our reporting units are publicly-traded individual reporting unit fair value determinations do not directly correlate to the Corporation s stock price Although we believe it is reasonable to conclude that market capitalization could be an indicator of fair value over time we do not believe that recent fluctuations in our market capitalization reflect the fair value of our individual reporting units

Estimating the fair value of reporting units is a subjective process that involves the use of estimates and judgments particularly related to cash flows the appropriate discount rates and an applicable control premium We determined the fair values of the reporting units using a combination of valuation techniques consistent with the market approach and the income approach and included the use of independent valuation specialists

The market approach we used estimates the fair value of the individual reporting units by incorporating any combination of the tangible capital book capital and earnings multiples from comparable publicly-traded companies in industries similar to that of the reporting unit The relative weight assigned to these multiples varies among the reporting units based on qualitative and quantitative characteristics primarily the size and relative profitability of the reporting unit as compared to the comparable publicly-traded companies Since the fair values determined under the market approach are representative of a noncontrolling interest a control premium was added to arrive at the reporting units estimated fair values on a controlling basis

For purposes of the income approach we calculated discounted cash flows by taking the net present value of estimated future cash flows and an appropriate terminal value Our discounted cash flow analysis employs a capital asset pricing model in estimating the discount rate (i e cost of equity financing) for each reporting unit The inputs to this model include the risk free rate of return beta which is a measure of the level of non diversifiable risk associated with comparable companies for each specific reporting unit market equity risk premium and in certain cases an unsystematic (company-specific) risk factor The unsystematic risk factor is the input that specifically addresses uncertainty related to our projections of earnings and growth including the uncertainty related to loss expectations We utilized discount rates that we believe adequately reflect the risk and uncertainty in the financial markets generally and specifically in our internally developed forecasts We estimated expected rates of equity returns based on historical market returns and risk/return rates for similar industries of the reporting unit We use our internal forecasts to estimate future cash flows and actual results may differ from forecasted results

International Consumer Card Businesses

Of the $1 9 billion of goodwill associated with the international consumer card businesses $526 million of goodwill was allocated on a relative fair value basis to the Canadian consumer card business which was sold on December 1 2011

During the three months ended December 31 2011 a goodwill impairment test was performed for the European consumer card businesses reporting unit as it was likely that the carrying amount of the business exceeded the fair value due to a decrease in future growth projections We concluded that goodwill was impaired and accordingly recorded a non-cash non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge of $581 million for the European consumer card businesses

Consumer Real Estate Services

In connection with the sale of Balboa on June 1 2011 we allocated on a relative fair value basis $193 million of CRES goodwill to the business in determining the gain on the sale

During the three months ended June 30 2011 as a consequence of the BNY Mellon Settlement entered into by the Corporation on June 28 2011 the adverse impact of the incremental mortgage-related charges and the continued economic slowdown in the mortgage business we performed a goodwill impairment test for the CRES reporting unit We concluded that the remaining balance of goodwill of $2 6 billion was impaired and accordingly recorded a non cash non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge to reduce the carrying value of the goodwill in CRES to zero

2011 Annual Impairment Test

During the three months ended September 30 2011 we completed our annual goodwill impairment test as of June 30 2011 for all reporting units which had goodwill In performing the first step of the annual goodwill impairment analysis we compared the fair value of each reporting unit to its current carrying value including goodwill To determine fair value we utilized a combination of the market approach and income approach Under the market approach we compared earnings and equity multiples of the individual reporting units to multiples of public companies comparable to the individual reporting units The control premiums used in the June 30 2011 annual goodwill impairment test ranged from 25 percent to 35 percent Under the income approach we updated our assumptions to reflect the current market environment The discount rates used in the June 30 2011 annual goodwill impairment test ranged from 11 percent to 16 percent depending on the relative risk of a reporting unit Growth rates developed by management for individual revenue and expense items in each reporting unit ranged from 0 7 percent to 6 7 percent For certain revenue and expense items that have been significantly affected by the current economic environment and financial reform management developed separate long-term forecasts

Based on the results of step one of the annual goodwill impairment test we determined that step two was not required for any of the reporting units as their fair value exceeded their carrying value indicating there was no impairment

2010 Impairment Tests

During the three months ended September 30 2010 we performed a goodwill impairment test for Card Services due to the continued stress on the business and the uncertain debit card interchange provisions under the Financial Reform Act We concluded that goodwill was impaired and accordingly recorded a non-cash non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge of $10 4 billion to reduce the carrying value of the goodwill in Card Services

During the three months ended December 31 2010 we performed a goodwill impairment test for the CRES reporting unit as it was likely that there was a decline in its fair value as a result of increased uncertainties including existing and potential litigation exposure and other related risks higher servicing costs including those related to loss mitigation foreclosure related issues and the redeployment of centralized sales resources We concluded that goodwill was impaired and accordingly recorded a non-cash non-tax deductible goodwill impairment charge of $2 0 billion in CRES

The methodology used to estimate the liability for obligations under representations and warranties related to transfers of residential mortgage loans is a function of the representations and warranties given and considers a variety of factors Depending upon the counterparty these factors include actual defaults estimated future defaults historical loss experience estimated home prices other economic conditions estimated probability that we will receive a repurchase request including consideration of whether presentation thresholds will be met number of payments made by the borrower prior to default estimated probability that we will be required to repurchase a loan and the experience with and the behavior of the counterparty It also considers bulk settlements as appropriate The estimate of the liability for obligations under representations and warranties is based upon currently available information significant judgment and a number of factors including those set forth above that are subject to change Changes to any one of these factors could significantly impact the estimate of our liability

The provision for representations and warranties may vary significantly each period as the methodology used to estimate the expense continues to be refined based on the level and type of repurchase requests presented defects identified the latest experience gained on repurchase requests and other relevant facts and circumstances The estimated range of possible loss related to non-GSE representations and warranties exposure has been disclosed For the GSE claims where we have established a representations and warranties liability as discussed in Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees to the Consolidated Financial Statements an assumed simultaneous increase or decrease of 10 percent in estimated future defaults loss severity and the net repurchase rate would result in an increase of approximately $850 million or decrease of approximately $800 million in the representations and warranties liability as of December 31 2011 Viewed from the perspective of home prices for each one percent change in home prices the liability for representations and warranties on unsettled GSE originations is estimated to be impacted by $125 million based on projected collateral losses and defect rates These sensitivities are hypothetical and are intended to provide an indication of the impact of a significant change in these key assumptions on the representations and warranties liability In reality changes in one assumption may result in changes in other assumptions which may or may not counteract the sensitivity

For additional information on representations and warranties see Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements and Contractual Obligations – Representations and Warranties on page 56 as well as Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements

Litigation Reserve

In accordance with applicable accounting guidance the Corporation establishes an accrued liability for litigation and regulatory matters when those matters present loss contingencies that are both probable and estimable In such cases there may be an exposure to loss in excess of any amounts accrued When a loss contingency is not both probable and estimable the Corporation does not establish an accrued liability As a litigation or regulatory matter develops the Corporation in conjunction with any outside counsel handling the matter evaluates on an ongoing basis whether such matter presents a loss contingency that is both probable and estimable If at the time of evaluation the loss contingency related to a litigation or regulatory matter is not both probable and estimable the matter will continue to be monitored for further developments that would make such loss contingency both probable and estimable Once the loss contingency related to a litigation or regulatory matter is deemed to be both probable and estimable the Corporation will establish an accrued liability with respect to such loss contingency and record a corresponding amount of litigation-related expense The Corporation will continue to monitor the matter for further developments that could affect the amount of the accrued liability that has been previously established

For a limited number of the matters disclosed in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements for which a loss is probable or reasonably possible in future periods whether in excess of a related accrued liability or where there is no accrued liability we are able to estimate a range of possible loss In determining whether it is possible to provide an estimate of loss or range of possible loss the Corporation reviews and evaluates its material litigation and regulatory matters on an ongoing basis in conjunction with any outside counsel handling the matter in light of potentially relevant factual and legal developments These may include information learned through the discovery process rulings on dispositive motions settlement discussions and other rulings by courts arbitrators or others In cases in which the Corporation possesses sufficient information to develop an estimate of loss or range of possible loss that estimate is aggregated and disclosed in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements For other disclosed matters for which a loss is probable or reasonably possible such an estimate is not possible Those matters for which an estimate is not possible are not included within this estimated range Therefore the estimated range of possible loss represents what we believe to be an estimate of possible loss only for certain matters meeting these criteria It does not represent the Corporation's maximum loss exposure Information is provided in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies to the Consolidated Financial Statements regarding the nature of all of these contingencies and where specified the amount of the claim associated with these loss contingencies

Consolidation and Accounting for Variable Interest Entities

In accordance with applicable accounting guidance an entity that has a controlling financial interest in a VIE is referred to as the primary beneficiary and consolidates the VIE The Corporation is deemed to have a controlling financial interest and is the primary beneficiary of a VIE if it has both the power to direct the activities of the VIE that most significantly impact the VIE's economic performance and an obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that could potentially be significant to the VIE

Determining whether an entity has a controlling financial interest in a VIE requires significant judgment An entity must assess the purpose and design of the VIE including explicit and implicit contractual arrangements and the entity's involvement in both the design of the VIE and its ongoing activities The entity must then determine which activities have the most significant impact on the economic performance of the VIE and whether the entity has the power to direct such activities For VIEs that hold financial assets the party that services the assets or makes investment management decisions may have the power to direct the most significant activities of a VIE Alternatively a third party that has the unilateral right to replace the servicer or investment manager or to liquidate the VIE may be deemed to be the party with power If there are no significant ongoing activities the party that was responsible for the design of the VIE may be deemed to have power If the entity determines that it has the power to direct the most significant activities of the VIE then the entity must determine if it has either an obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that could potentially be significant to the VIE Such economic interests may include investments in debt or equity instruments issued by the VIE liquidity commitments and explicit and implicit guarantees

On a quarterly basis we reassess whether we have a controlling financial interest and are the primary beneficiary of a VIE The quarterly reassessment process considers whether we have acquired or divested the power to direct the activities of the VIE through changes in governing documents or other circumstances The reassessment also considers whether we have acquired or disposed of a financial interest that could be significant to the VIE or whether an interest in the VIE has become significant or is no longer significant The consolidation status of the VIEs with which we are involved may change as a result of such reassessments Changes in consolidation status are applied prospectively with assets and liabilities of a newly consolidated VIE initially recorded at fair value A gain or loss may be recognized upon deconsolidation of a VIE depending on the carrying amounts of deconsolidated assets and liabilities compared to the fair value of retained interests and ongoing contractual arrangements

2010 Compared to 2009

The following discussion and analysis provides a comparison of our results of operations for 2010 and 2009 This discussion should be read in conjunction with the Consolidated Financial Statements and related Notes Tables 7 and 8 contain financial data to supplement this discussion

Overview

Net Income/Loss

Net loss totaled $2 2 billion in 2010 compared to net income of $6 3 billion in 2009 Including preferred stock dividends the net loss applicable to common shareholders was $3 6 billion or $(0 37) per diluted share Those results compared to a net loss applicable to common shareholders of $2 2 billion or $(0 29) per diluted share for 2009

Net Interest Income

Net interest income on a FTE basis increased $4 3 billion to $52 7 billion for 2010 compared to 2009 The increase was due to the impact of deposit pricing and the adoption of new consolidation guidance which contributed $10 5 billion to net interest income in 2010 The increase was partially offset by lower commercial and consumer loan levels the sale of First Republic in 2010 and lower rates on core assets and trading assets and liabilities including derivative exposures The net interest yield on a FTE basis increased 13 bps to 2 78 percent for 2010 compared to 2009 due to the factors described above

Noninterest Income

Noninterest income decreased $13 6 billion to $58 7 billion in 2010 compared to 2009 Card income decreased $245 million due to the implementation of the CARD Act partially offset by the impact of the new consolidation guidance and higher interchange income Service charges decreased $1 6 billion largely due to the impact of overdraft policy changes in conjunction with Regulation E which became effective in the third quarter of 2010 and the impact of our overdraft policy changes implemented in late 2009 Equity investment income decreased $4 8 billion as net gains on the sales of certain strategic investments during 2010 were less than gains in 2009 that included a $7 3 billion gain related to the sale of a portion of our investment in CCB Trading account profits decreased $2 2 billion due to more favorable market conditions in 2009 and investor concerns regarding sovereign debt fears and regulatory uncertainty DVA gains net of hedges on derivative liabilities of $262 million for 2010 compared to losses of $662 million for 2009 Mortgage banking income decreased $6 1 billion due to an increase of $4 9 billion in representations and warranties provision and lower volume and margins Gains on sales of debt securities decreased $2 2 billion driven by a lower volume of sales of debt securities The decrease also included the impact of losses in 2010 related to portfolio restructuring activities Other income (loss) improved by $2 4 billion 2009 included a net negative fair value adjustment related to our own credit of $4 9 billion on structured liabilities compared to a net positive adjustment of $18 million in 2010 and 2009 also included a $3 8 billion gain on the contribution of our merchant services business to a joint venture Legacy asset write-downs included in other income (loss) were $1 7 billion in 2009 compared to net gains of $256 million in 2010 Impairment losses recognized in earnings on AFS debt securities decreased $1 9 billion reflecting lower impairment write-downs on non-agency RMBS and CDOs

Provision for Credit Losses

The provision for credit losses decreased $20 1 billion to $28 4 billion for 2010 compared to 2009 due to improving portfolio trends across the consumer and commercial portfolios Net charge-offs totaled $34 3 billion or 3 60 percent of average loans and leases for 2010 compared to $33 7 billion or 3 58 percent for 2009

Noninterest Expense

Noninterest expense increased $16 4 billion to $83 1 billion for 2010 compared to 2009 largely due to goodwill impairment charges of $12 4 billion The increase was also driven by a $3 6 billion increase in personnel costs reflecting the build out of several businesses the recognition of expense on proportionally larger 2009 incentive deferrals and the U K payroll tax on certain year-end incentive payments as well as a $1 6 billion increase in litigation costs These increases were partially offset by a $901 million decline in merger and restructuring charges compared to 2009 Noninterest expense for 2009 included a special FDIC assessment of $724 million

Income Tax Expense

Income tax expense was $915 million for 2010 compared to a benefit of $1 9 billion for 2009 The effective tax rate in 2010 was not meaningful due to the impact of non-deductible goodwill impairment charges of $12 4 billion The effective tax rate for 2010 excluding goodwill impairment charges was 8 3 percent compared to (44 0) percent in 2009 The change in the effective tax rate from the prior year was primarily driven by an increase in pre-tax income excluding the non-deductible goodwill impairment charges Also impacting the 2010 effective tax rate was a $392 million charge from a U K law change and a $1 7 billion tax benefit from the release of a portion of the deferred tax asset valuation allowance related to acquired capital loss carryforward tax benefits compared to $650 million in 2009

Business Segment Operations

Deposits

Net income decreased $1 3 billion to $1 4 billion in 2010 due to a decline in revenue and higher noninterest expense Net interest income increased $1 1 billion to $8 3 billion as a result of a customer shift to more liquid products and continued pricing discipline partially offset by a lower net interest income allocation related to ALM activities Noninterest income decreased $1 8 billion to $5 3 billion driven by the impact of overdraft policy changes in conjunction with Regulation E which was effective in the third quarter of 2010 and our overdraft policy changes implemented in late 2009 Noninterest expense increased $1 5 billion to $11 2 billion as a higher proportion of banking center sales and service costs was aligned to Deposits from the other segments and increased litigation expenses partially offset by a decrease in FDIC expenses as 2009 included a special assessment

Card Services

Card Services recorded a net loss of $7 0 billion primarily due to a $10 4 billion goodwill impairment charge Net interest income decreased $2 1 billion to $14 4 billion driven by a decrease in average loans and yields partially offset by lower funding costs Noninterest income decreased $348 million to $7 9 billion driven by lower card income primarily due to the implementation of the CARD Act partially offset by higher interchange income during 2010 and the gain on the sale of our MasterCard position The provision for credit losses improved $15 4 billion to $11 0 billion due to lower delinquencies and bankruptcies as a result of the improved economic environment which resulted in a reduction in the allowance for credit losses in 2010 compared to an increase in 2009 Noninterest expense increased $9 8 billion to $16 4 billion primarily due to the goodwill impairment charge

Consumer Real Estate Services

CRES net loss increased $5 1 billion to a net loss of $8 9 billion in 2010 primarily due to a $4 9 billion increase in representations and warranties provision and a $2 0 billion goodwill impairment charge partially offset by a decline in the provision for credit losses driven by improving portfolio trends Mortgage banking income declined driven by the increased representations and warranties provision and lower production volume reflecting a drop in the overall size of the mortgage market The provision for credit losses decreased $2 8 billion to $8 5 billion driven by improving portfolio trends which led to lower reserve additions including those associated with the Countrywide PCI home equity portfolio Noninterest expense increased $3 4 billion to $14 9 billion due to the goodwill impairment charge higher litigation expense and an increase in default-related servicing expense partially offset by lower production expense and insurance losses

Global Commercial Banking

Net income increased $1 0 billion to $3 2 billion in 2010 Net interest income remained relatively flat as growth in average deposits was offset by a lower net interest income allocation related to ALM activities Noninterest income decreased $4 2 billion to $3 2 billion largely due to the 2009 gain of $3 8 billion related to the contribution of the merchant services business into a joint venture The provision for credit losses decreased $5 8 billion to $2 0 billion driven by improvements from stabilizing values in the commercial real estate portfolio and improved borrower credit profiles in the U S commercial portfolio

Global Banking & Markets

Net income decreased $1 4 billion to $6 3 billion in 2010 driven by lower sales and trading revenue due to more favorable market conditions in 2009 partially offset by credit valuation gains on derivative liabilities and gains on legacy assets compared to losses in 2009 Sales and trading revenue was $17 0 billion in 2010 compared to $17 6 billion in 2009 due to increased investor risk aversion and more favorable market conditions in 2009 Noninterest expense decreased $2 3 billion to $17 5 billion driven by higher compensation costs as a result of the recognition of expense on a proportionally larger amount of prior year incentive deferrals and investments in infrastructure and personnel associated with further development of the business Income tax expense was adversely affected by a charge related to the U K tax rate reduction impacting the carrying value of deferred tax assets

Global Wealth & Investment Management

Net income decreased $329 million to $1 3 billion in 2010 driven by higher noninterest expense and the tax-related effect of the sale of the Columbia Management long-term asset management business partially offset by higher noninterest income and lower credit costs Net interest income decreased $205 million to $5 7 billion as the positive impact of higher deposit levels was more than offset by lower revenue from corporate ALM activity Noninterest income increased $708 million to $10 6 billion primarily due to higher asset management fees driven by stronger markets continued long-term AUM flows and higher transactional activity The provision for credit losses decreased $414 million to $646 million driven by improving portfolio trends and the recognition of a single large commercial charge-off in 2009 Noninterest expense increased $1 1 billion to $13 2 billion due primarily to higher revenue-related expenses support costs and personnel costs associated with further investment in the business

All Other

Net income increased $293 million to $1 5 billion in 2010 Net interest income decreased $1 9 billion to $3 7 billion driven by a $1 4 billion lower funding differential on certain securitizations and the impact of capital raises occurring throughout 2009 that were not allocated to the businesses Noninterest income decreased $5 7 billion to $6 0 billion as the prior year included a $7 3 billion gain resulting from a sale of shares of CCB and an increase of $1 4 billion on net gains on the sale of debt securities This was offset by net negative fair value adjustments related to our own credit of $4 9 billion on structured liabilities in 2009 compared to a net positive adjustment of $18 million in 2010 and higher valuation adjustments and gains on sales of select investments in GPI Also in 2010 we sold our investments in Itaú Unibanco and Santander resulting in a net gain of approximately $800 million as well as the gains on CCB and BlackRock The provision for credit losses decreased $4 9 billion to $6 3 billion due to improving portfolio trends in the residential mortgage portfolio partially offset by further deterioration in the Countrywide PCI discontinued real estate portfolio

(1) For this presentation, fees earned on overnight deposits placed with the Federal Reserve are reflected in the cash and cash equivalents line, consistent with the Corporation's Consolidated Balance Sheet presentation of these deposits. Net interest income and net interest yield in the loans are calculated excluding these fees.

(2) Yields on AFS debt securities are calculated based on fair values rather than the cost basis. The use of fair values does not have a material impact on net interest yield.

(3) Nonperforming loans are included in the respective average loan balances. Income on these nonperforming loans is recognized on a cash basis. PCI loans were recorded at fair value upon acquisition and accrete interest income over the remaining life of the loan.

(4) Includes non-U.S. residential mortgage loans of $91 million $410 million and $422 million in 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively.

(5) Includes non-U.S. consumer loans of $8 5 billion, $7 9 billion and $8 0 billion in 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively.

(6) Includes consumer finance loans of $1 6 billion, $2 1 billion and $2 4 billion, other non-U.S. consumer loans of $675 million, $731 million and $687 million, and consumer overdrafts of $83 million, $111 million and $217 million in 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively.

(7) Includes U.S. commercial real estate loans of $43 1 billion, $67 3 billion and $70 7 billion, and non-U.S. commercial real estate loans of $2 3 billion, $2 7 billion and $2 7 billion in 2011, 2010 and 2009, respectively.

(1) Excludes merger- and restructuring charges and goodwill impairment charges.
(2) Per the fourth quarter 2011 and the fourth and third quarters of 2010, the impact of outstanding mandatorily convertible preferred stock was antidilutive and excluded from diluted earnings (loss) per share and average diluted common shares.
(3) Calculated as total net income for four quarters divided by average assets for the period.
(4) Tangible equity ratios and tangible book value per share of common stock are non-GAAP financial measures. Other companies may define or calculate these measures differently. For additional information on these ratios and corresponding reconciliations to GAAP financial measures, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 34 and Table XVII.
(5) For more information on the impact of the PCI loan portfolio on asset quality, see Consumer Portfolio Credit Risk Management on page 81 and Commercial Portfolio Credit Risk Management on page 94.
(6) Includes the allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments.
(7) Balances and ratios do not include loans accounted for under the fair value option. For additional information on loans, nonperforming loans, leases and foreclosed properties, see Nonperforming Consumer Loans and Foreclosed Properties Activity on page 97 and corresponding Table 34, and Nonperforming Commercial Loans, Leases and Foreclosed Properties Activity on page 100 and corresponding Table 40.
(8) Amounts are based on allowance that are available from nonperforming loans, pursuant to credit policies also used in Card Services portfolio. PCI loans and the non-U.S. credit card portfolio in All Other.

(1) For this presentation, fees earned on overnight deposits placed with the Federal Reserve are included in the cash and cash equivalents line consistent with the Corporation's Consolidated Balance Sheet presentation of these deposits. Net interest income and net interest yield in the table are calculated excluding these fees.

(2) Yields on AFS debt securities are calculated based on fair value rather than the cost basis. The use of fair value does not have a material impact on net interest yield.

(3) Nonperforming loans are included in the respective average loan balances. Income on these nonperforming loans is recognized on a cash basis. PCI loans were recorded at fair value upon acquisition and accrete interest income over the remaining life of the loan.

(4) Includes non-U.S. residential mortgage loans of $68 million, $81 million, $94 million and $93 million in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $96 million in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively.

(5) Includes non-U.S. consumer loans of $8.4 billion, $8.6 billion, $8.7 billion and $8.2 billion in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $7.9 billion in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively.

(6) Includes consumer finance loans of $1.7 billion, $1.8 billion, $1.8 billion and $1.9 billion in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $2.0 billion in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively; other non-U.S. consumer loans of $869 million, $832 million, $840 million and $777 million in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $791 million in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively; and consumer overdrafts of $107 million, $107 million, $79 million and $78 million in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $84 million in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively.

(7) Includes U.S. commercial real estate loans of $36.7 billion, $40.7 billion, $43.4 billion and $46.7 billion in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $48.0 billion in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively; and non-U.S. commercial real estate loans of $1.9 billion, $2.2 billion, $2.3 billion and $2.7 billion in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $2.6 billion in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively.

(8) Interest income includes the impact of interest rate risk management contracts, which decreased interest income on the underlying assets by $427 million, $1.0 billion, $736 million and $338 million in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $28 million in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively. Interest expense includes the impact of interest rate risk management contracts, which decreased interest expense on the underlying liabilities by $763 million, $621 million, $425 million and $421 million in the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $472 million in the fourth quarter of 2010, respectively. For further information on interest rate contracts, see Interest Rate Risk Management for Nontrading Activities on page 116.

(9) Primarily consists of cash and due from banks, and interest-bearing deposits with banks.

(1) Supplemental financial data on a FTE basis and performance measures and ratios excluding the impact of goodwill impairment charges are non-GAAP financial measures. Other companies may define or calculate these measures differently. For additional information on these performance measures and ratios, see Supplemental Financial Data on page 38 and for corresponding reconciliations to GAAP financial measures, see Table XVI.

(2) Calculations excludes fees earned on overnight deposits placed with the Federal Reserve of $26 million, $48 million and $62 million for the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2011, and $63 million, $107 million, $106 million and $92 million for the fourth, third, second and first quarters of 2010, respectively.

(3) Performance ratios are calculated excluding the impact of the goodwill impairment charges of $581 million and $2.0 billion recorded during the fourth and second quarters of 2011 and $2.0 billion and $10.4 billion recorded during the fourth and third quarters of 2010, respectively.

(4) Calculated as total net income for four consecutive quarters divided by average assets for the period.

Glossary

Alt-A Mortgage – A type of U.S. mortgage that, for various reasons, is considered riskier than A paper or "prime" and less risky than "subprime," the riskiest category. Alt-A interest rates, which are determined by credit risk, therefore tend to be between those of prime and subprime home loans. Typically, Alt-A mortgages are characterized by borrowers with less than full documentation, lower credit scores and higher LTVs.

Assets in Custody – Consist largely of custodial and non-discretionary trust assets, excluding brokerage assets, administered for clients. Trust assets encompass a broad range of asset types including real estate, private company ownership interest, personal property and investments.

Assets Under Management (AUM) – The total market value of assets under the investment advisory and discretion of GWIM, which generate asset management fees based on a percentage of the assets' market values. AUM reflects assets that are generally managed for institutional, high net-worth and retail clients, and are distributed through various investment products including mutual funds, other commingled vehicles and separate accounts.

Carrying Value (with respect to loans) – The amount at which a loan is recorded on the balance sheet. For loans recorded at amortized cost, carrying value is the unpaid principal balance, net of unamortized deferred loan origination fees and costs, and unamortized purchase premium or discount. For loans that are or have been on nonaccrual status, the carrying value is also reduced by any net charge-offs that have been recorded, and the amount of interest payments applied as a reduction of principal under the cost recovery method. For PCI loans, the carrying value equals fair value upon acquisition, adjusted for subsequent cash collections and yield accreted to date. For credit card loans, the carrying value also includes interest that has been billed to the customer. For loans classified as held-for-sale, carrying value is the lower of carrying value as described in the sentences above, or fair value. For loans for which we have elected the fair value option, the carrying value is fair value.

Client Brokerage Assets – Include client assets which are held in brokerage accounts. This includes non-discretionary brokerage and fee-based assets which generate brokerage income and asset management fee revenue.

Committed Credit Exposure – Includes any funded portion of a facility plus the unfunded portion of a facility on which the lender is legally bound to advance funds during a specified period under prescribed conditions.

Core Net Interest Income – Net interest income on a FTE basis excluding the impact of market-based activities.

Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 (CARD Act) – Legislation signed into law on May 22, 2009 that changes credit card industry practices including significantly restricting credit card issuers' ability to change interest rates and assess fees to reflect individual consumer risk, changes the way payments are applied and changes consumer credit card disclosures. The majority of the provisions became effective on February 22, 2010, while certain provisions became effective in the third quarter of 2010.

Credit Derivatives – Contractual agreements that provide protection against a credit event on one or more referenced obligations. The nature of a credit event is established by the protection purchaser and protection seller at the inception of the transaction, and such events generally include bankruptcy or insolvency of the referenced credit entity, failure to meet payment obligations when due, as well as acceleration of indebtedness and payment repudiation or moratorium. The purchaser of the credit derivative pays a periodic fee in return for a payment by the protection seller upon the occurrence, if any, of such a credit event. A credit default swap is a type of a credit derivative.

Interest Rate Lock Commitment (IRLC) – Commitment with a loan applicant in which the loan terms, including interest rate and price, are guaranteed for a designated period of time, subject to credit approval.

Letter of Credit – A document issued on behalf of a customer to a third party promising to pay the third party upon presentation of specified documents. A letter of credit effectively substitutes the issuer's credit for that of the customer.

Loan-to-value (LTV) – A commonly used credit quality metric that is reported in terms of ending and average LTV. Ending LTV is calculated as the outstanding carrying value of the loan at the end of the period divided by the estimated value of the property securing the loan. Estimated property values are primarily determined by utilizing the Case-Schiller Home Index, a widely used index based on data from repeat sales of single family homes. Case-Schiller indices are updated quarterly and are reported on a three-month or one-quarter lag. An additional metric related to LTV is combined loan-to-value (CLTV) which is similar to the LTV metric, yet combines the outstanding balance on the residential mortgage loan and the outstanding carrying value on the home equity loan or available line of credit, both of which are secured by the same property, divided by the estimated value of the property. A LTV of 100 percent reflects a loan that is currently secured by a property valued at an amount exactly equal to the carrying value or available line of the loan. Under certain circumstances, estimated values can also be determined by utilizing an automated valuation method (AVM) or Mortgage Risk Assessment Corporation (MRAC) index. An AVM is a tool that estimates the value of a property by reference to large volumes of market data including sales of comparable properties and price trends specific to the MSA in which the property being valued is located. The MRAC index is similar to the Case-Schiller Home Index in that it is an index that is based on data from repeat sales of single family homes and is reported on a lag.

Mortgage Servicing Right (MSR) – The right to service a mortgage loan when the underlying loan is sold or securitized. Servicing includes collections for principal, interest and escrow payments from borrowers and accounting for and remitting principal and interest payments to investors.

Net Interest Yield – Net interest income divided by average total interest-earning assets.

Nonperforming Loans and Leases – Includes loans and leases that have been placed on nonaccrual status, including nonaccruing loans whose contractual terms have been restructured in a manner that grants a concession to a borrower experiencing financial difficulties (TDRs). Loans accounted for under the fair value option, PCI loans and LHFS are not reported as nonperforming loans and leases. Consumer credit card loans, business card loans, consumer loans not secured by real estate, and consumer loans secured by real estate which include loans insured by the FHA and individually insured long-term credit protection agreements with FNMA and FHLMC (fully-insured loan portfolio) are not placed on nonaccrual status and are therefore not reported as nonperforming loans and leases.

Purchased Credit-Impaired (PCI) Loan – A loan purchased as an individual loan, in a portfolio of loans or in a business combination with evidence of deterioration in credit quality since origination for which it is probable, upon acquisition, that the investor will be unable to collect all contractually required payments. These loans are recorded at fair value upon acquisition.

Subprime Loans – Although a standard industry definition for subprime loans (including subprime mortgage loans) does not exist, the Corporation defines subprime loans as specific product offerings for higher risk borrowers, including individuals with one or a combination of high credit risk factors such as low FICO scores, high debt to income ratios and inferior payment history.

Super Senior CDO Exposure – Represents the most senior class of commercial paper or notes that are issued by CDO vehicles. These financial instruments benefit from the subordination of all other securities, including AAA-rated securities, issued by CDO vehicles.

Tier 1 Common Capital – Tier 1 capital, including any CES, less preferred stock, qualifying trust preferred securities, hybrid securities and qualifying noncontrolling interest in subsidiaries.

Troubled Debt Restructurings (TDRs) – Loans whose contractual terms have been restructured in a manner that grants a concession to a borrower experiencing financial difficulties. Certain consumer loans for which a binding offer to restructure has been extended are also classified as TDRs. Concessions could include a reduction in the interest rate to a rate that is below market on the loan, payment extensions, forgiveness of principal, forbearance or other actions intended to maximize collection. TDRs are generally reported as nonperforming loans and leases while on nonaccrual status. Nonperforming TDRs may be returned to accrual status when, among other criteria, payment in full of all amounts due under the restructured terms is expected and the borrower has demonstrated a sustained period of repayment performance, typically six months. TDRs that are on accrual status are reported as performing TDRs through the end of the calendar year in which the restructuring occurred or the year in which they are returned to accrual status. In addition, if accruing TDRs bear less than a market rate of interest at the time of modification, they are reported as performing TDRs throughout their remaining lives unless and until they cease to perform in accordance with their modified contractual terms, at which time they would be placed on nonaccrual status and reported as nonperforming TDRs.

Value-at-Risk (VaR) – VaR represents the worst loss a portfolio is expected to experience based on historical trends with a given level of confidence, and depends on the volatility of the positions in the portfolio and on how strongly their risks are correlated. A VaR model is an effective tool in estimating ranges of potential gains and losses on our trading portfolios and is a key statistic used to measure and manage market risk.

Report of Management on Internal Control Over Financial Reporting

The management of Bank of America Corporation is responsible for establishing and maintaining adequate internal control over financial reporting

The Corporation's internal control over financial reporting is a process designed to provide reasonable assurance regarding the reliability of financial reporting and the preparation of financial statements for external purposes in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America The Corporation's internal control over financial reporting includes those policies and procedures that (i) pertain to the maintenance of records that, in reasonable detail accurately and fairly reflect the transactions and dispositions of the assets of the Corporation (ii) provide reasonable assurance that transactions are recorded as necessary to permit preparation of financial statements in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America and that receipts and expenditures of the Corporation are being made only in accordance with authorizations of management and directors of the Corporation and (iii) provide reasonable assurance regarding prevention or timely detection of unauthorized acquisition use or disposition of the Corporation's assets that could have a material effect on the financial statements

Because of its inherent limitations internal control over financial reporting may not prevent or detect misstatements Also projections of any evaluation of effectiveness to future periods are subject to the risk that controls may become inadequate because of changes in conditions or that the degree of compliance with the policies or procedures may deteriorate

Management assessed the effectiveness of the Corporation's internal control over financial reporting as of December 31 2011 based on the framework set forth by the Committee of Sponsoring Organizations of the Treadway Commission in Internal Control – Integrated Framework Based on that assessment, management concluded that as of December 31 2011 the Corporation's internal control over financial reporting is effective based on the criteria established in Internal Control – Integrated Framework

The Corporation's internal control over financial reporting as of December 31 2011 has been audited by PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP an independent registered public accounting firm as stated in their accompanying report which expresses an unqualified opinion on the effectiveness of the Corporation's internal control over financial reporting as of December 31 2011

Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements

NOTE 1 Summary of Significant Accounting Principles

Bank of America Corporation (collectively with its subsidiaries, the Corporation) a financial holding company provides a diverse range of financial services and products throughout the U S and in certain international markets The term "the Corporation" as used herein may refer to the Corporation individually the Corporation and its subsidiaries or certain of the Corporation s subsidiaries or affiliates

The Corporation conducts its activities through banking and nonbanking subsidiaries The Corporation operates its banking activities primarily under two charters Bank of America National Association (Bank of America N A or BANA) and FIA Card Services National Association (FIA Card Services N A)

Principles of Consolidation and Basis of Presentation

The Consolidated Financial Statements include the accounts of the Corporation and its majority-owned subsidiaries and those variable interest entities (VIEs) where the Corporation is the primary beneficiary Intercompany accounts and transactions have been eliminated Results of operations of acquired companies are included from the dates of acquisition and for VIEs from the dates that the Corporation became the primary beneficiary Assets held in an agency or fiduciary capacity are not included in the Consolidated Financial Statements The Corporation accounts for investments in companies for which it owns a voting interest and for which it has the ability to exercise significant influence over operating and financing decisions using the equity method of accounting or at fair value under the fair value option These investments are included in other assets Equity method investments are subject to impairment testing and the Corporation s proportionate share of income or loss is included in equity investment income

The preparation of the Consolidated Financial Statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect reported amounts and disclosures Realized results could differ from those estimates and assumptions

The Corporation evaluates subsequent events through the date of filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) Certain prior period amounts have been reclassified to conform to current period presentation

New Accounting Pronouncements

In April 2011 the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) issued new accounting guidance on troubled debt restructurings (TDRs) including criteria to determine whether a loan modification represents a concession and whether the debtor is experiencing financial difficulties This new accounting guidance was effective for the Corporation as of September 30 2011 with retrospective application back to January 1 2011 As a result of the retrospective application the Corporation classified $1 1 billion of commercial loan modifications as TDRs that in previous periods had not been classified as TDRs These loans were newly identified as TDRs typically because the Corporation was not able to demonstrate that the modified rate of interest although significantly higher than the rate prior to modification was a market rate of interest These loans include $402 million of performing commercial loans that had an aggregate allowance for credit losses of $27 million at December 31 2011 Also as a result of the new accounting guidance loans that are participating in or that have been offered a binding trial modification are classified as TDRs At December 31 2011 the Corporation classified an additional $2 6 billion of home loans with an aggregate allowance for credit losses of $154 million as TDRs that were participating in or had been offered a trial modification

In April 2011 the FASB issued new accounting guidance that addresses effective control in repurchase agreements and eliminates the requirement for entities to consider whether the transferor/seller has the ability to repurchase the financial assets in a repurchase agreement This new accounting guidance was effective on a prospective basis for new transactions or modifications to existing transactions on January 1 2012 The adoption of this guidance will not have a material impact on the Corporation s consolidated financial position or results of operations

In May 2011 the FASB issued amendments to the fair value accounting guidance The amendments clarify the application of the highest and best use and valuation premise concepts preclude the application of blockage factors in the valuation of all financial instruments and include criteria for applying the fair value measurement principles to portfolios of financial instruments The amendments additionally prescribe enhanced financial statement disclosures for Level 3 fair value measurements The new amendments were effective on January 1 2012 The adoption of this guidance will not have a material impact on the Corporation s consolidated financial position or results of operations

In June 2011 the FASB issued new accounting guidance on the presentation of comprehensive income in financial statements The new guidance requires entities to report components of comprehensive income in either a continuous statement of comprehensive income or two separate but consecutive statements This new accounting guidance is effective for the Corporation for the three months ended March 31 2012

In September 2011 the FASB issued new accounting guidance that simplifies goodwill impairment testing The new guidance permits entities to make a qualitative assessment of whether it is likely that the fair value of a reporting unit is less than its carrying value If under this assessment it is likely that the fair value of a reporting unit is less than the carrying amount an entity is required to perform the two-step impairment test The Corporation early adopted the new accounting guidance for certain goodwill impairment tests during the three months ended September 30 2011

In December 2011 the FASB issued new accounting guidance that requires additional disclosures on financial instruments and derivative instruments that are either offset in accordance with existing accounting guidance or are subject to an enforceable master netting arrangement or similar agreement The new requirements do not change the accounting guidance on netting but rather enhance the disclosures to more clearly show the impact of netting arrangements on a company's financial position This new accounting guidance will be effective on a retrospective basis for all comparative periods presented beginning on January 1 2013

Cash and cash equivalents include cash on hand cash items in the process of collection and amounts due from correspondent banks and the Federal Reserve Bank

Securities Financing Agreements

Securities borrowed or purchased under agreements to resell and securities loaned or sold under agreements to repurchase (securities financing agreements) are treated as collateralized financing transactions These agreements are recorded at the amounts at which the securities were acquired or sold plus accrued interest except for certain securities financing agreements that the Corporation accounts for under the fair value option Changes in the fair value of securities financing agreements that are accounted for under the fair value option are recorded in other income For more information on securities financing agreements that the Corporation accounts for under the fair value option see Note 23 - Fair Value Option

The Corporation's policy is to obtain possession of collateral with a market value equal to or in excess of the principal amount loaned under resale agreements To ensure that the market value of the underlying collateral remains sufficient, collateral is generally valued daily and the Corporation may require counterparties to deposit additional collateral or may return collateral pledged when appropriate Securities financing agreements give rise to negligible credit risk as a result of these collateral provisions and accordingly no allowance for loan losses is considered necessary

Substantially all repurchase and resale activities are transacted under legally enforceable master repurchase agreements that give the Corporation in the event of default by the counterparty the right to liquidate securities held and to offset receivables and payables with the same counterparty The Corporation offsets repurchase and resale transactions with the same counterparty on the Consolidated Balance Sheet where it has such a legally enforceable master agreement and the transactions have the same maturity date

In transactions where the Corporation acts as the lender in a securities lending agreement and receives securities that can be pledged or sold as collateral it recognizes an asset on the Consolidated Balance Sheet at fair value representing the securities received and a liability for the same amount representing the obligation to return those securities

In repurchase transactions typically the termination date for a repurchase agreement is before the maturity date of the underlying security However in certain situations the Corporation may enter into repurchase agreements where the termination date of the repurchase transaction is the same as the maturity date of the underlying security and these transactions are referred to as "repo to maturity" (RTM) transactions In accordance with applicable accounting guidance the Corporation accounts for RTM transactions as sales and purchases when the transferred securities are highly liquid In instances where securities are considered sold or purchased the Corporation removes or recognizes the securities from the Consolidated Balance Sheet and in the case of sales recognizes a gain or loss in the Consolidated Statement of Income At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had no outstanding RTM transactions that had been accounted for as sales and an immaterial amount of transactions that had been accounted for as purchases

Collateral

The Corporation accepts securities as collateral that it is permitted by contract or custom to sell or repledge At December 31 2011 and 2010 the fair value of the collateral was $393 9 billion and $401 7 billion of which $287 7 billion and $257 6 billion was sold or repledged The primary sources of this collateral are repurchase agreements and securities borrowed The Corporation also pledges firm-owned securities and loans as collateral in transactions that include repurchase agreements securities loaned public and trust deposits U S Treasury tax and loan notes and other short-term borrowings This collateral which in some cases can be sold or repledged by the counterparties to the transactions is parenthetically disclosed on the Consolidated Balance Sheet

In certain cases the Corporation has transferred assets to consolidated VIEs where those restricted assets serve as collateral for the interests issued by the VIEs These assets are disclosed on the Consolidated Balance Sheet as Assets of Consolidated VIEs

In addition the Corporation obtains collateral in connection with its derivative contracts Required collateral levels vary depending on the credit risk rating and the type of counterparty Generally the Corporation accepts collateral in the form of cash U S Treasury securities and other marketable securities Based on provisions contained in legal netting agreements the Corporation nets cash collateral against the applicable derivative fair value The Corporation also pledges collateral on its own derivative positions which can be applied against derivative liabilities

Trading Instruments

Financial instruments utilized in trading activities are carried at fair value Fair value is generally based on quoted market prices or quoted market prices for similar assets and liabilities If these market prices are not available fair values are estimated based on dealer quotes pricing models discounted cash flow methodologies or similar techniques where the determination of fair value may require significant management judgment or estimation Realized and unrealized gains and losses are recognized in trading account profits (losses)

Derivatives and Hedging Activities

Derivatives are entered into on behalf of customers for trading as economic hedges or as qualifying accounting hedges Derivatives utilized by the Corporation include swaps financial futures and forward settlement contracts and option contracts A swap agreement is a contract between two parties to exchange cash flows based on specified underlying notional amounts assets and/or indices Financial futures and forward settlement

contracts are agreements to buy or sell a quantity of a financial instrument index currency or commodity at a predetermined future date and rate or price An option contract is an agreement that conveys to the purchaser the right but not the obligation to buy or sell a quantity of a financial instrument (including another derivative financial instrument) index currency or commodity at a predetermined rate or price during a period or at a date in the future Option agreements can be transacted on organized exchanges or directly between parties

All derivatives are recorded on the Consolidated Balance Sheet at fair value taking into consideration the effects of legally enforceable master netting agreements that allow the Corporation to settle positive and negative positions and offset cash collateral held with the same counterparty on a net basis For exchange-traded contracts fair value is based on quoted market prices For non-exchange traded contracts fair value is based on dealer quotes pricing models discounted cash flow methodologies or similar techniques for which the determination of fair value may require significant management judgment or estimation

Valuations of derivative assets and liabilities reflect the value of the instrument including counterparty credit risk These values also take into account the Corporation's own credit standing thus including in the valuation of the derivative instrument the value of the net credit differential between the counterparties to the derivative contract

Trading Derivatives and Economic Hedges

Derivatives held for trading purposes are included in derivative assets or derivative liabilities with changes in fair value included in trading account profits (losses)

Derivatives used as economic hedges because either they did not qualify for or were not designated as an accounting hedge are also included in derivative assets or derivative liabilities Changes in the fair value of derivatives that serve as economic hedges of mortgage servicing rights (MSRs) interest rate lock commitments (IRLCs) and first mortgage loans held-for-sale (LHFS) that are originated by the Corporation are recorded in mortgage banking income Changes in the fair value of derivatives that serve as economic hedges of credit exposures interest rate risk and foreign currency exposures are included in other income (loss) Credit derivatives used by the Corporation as economic hedges do not qualify as accounting hedges but can protect the Corporation from various credit exposures as economic hedges and changes in the fair value of these derivatives are included in other income (loss)

Derivatives Used For Hedge Accounting Purposes (Accounting Hedges)

For accounting hedges the Corporation formally documents at inception all relationships between hedging instruments and hedged items as well as the risk management objectives and strategies for undertaking various accounting hedges Additionally the Corporation primarily uses regression analyses at the inception of a hedge and for each reporting period thereafter to assess whether the derivative used in a hedging transaction is expected to be and has been highly effective in offsetting changes in the fair value or cash flows of a hedged item The Corporation discontinues hedge accounting when it is determined that a derivative is not expected to be or has ceased to be highly effective as a hedge and then reflects changes in fair value of the derivative in earnings after termination of the hedge relationship

The Corporation uses its accounting hedges as either fair value hedges cash flow hedges or hedges of net investments in foreign operations The Corporation manages interest rate and foreign currency exchange rate sensitivity predominantly through the use of derivatives Fair value hedges are used to protect against changes in the fair value of the Corporation's assets and liabilities that are attributable to interest rate or foreign exchange volatility Cash flow hedges are used primarily to minimize the variability in cash flows of assets or liabilities or forecasted transactions caused by interest rate or foreign exchange fluctuations For terminated cash flow hedges the maximum length of time over which forecasted transactions are hedged is approximately 25 years with a substantial portion of the hedged transactions being less than 10 years For open or future cash flow hedges the maximum length of time over which forecasted transactions are or will be hedged is less than seven years

Changes in the fair value of derivatives designated as fair value hedges are recorded in earnings together and in the same income statement line item with changes in the fair value of the related hedged item Changes in the fair value of derivatives designated as cash flow hedges are recorded in accumulated other comprehensive income (OCI) and are reclassified into the line item in the income statement in which the hedged item is recorded and in the same period the hedged item affects earnings Hedge ineffectiveness and gains and losses on the excluded component of a derivative in assessing hedge effectiveness are recorded in earnings in the same income statement line item The Corporation records changes in the fair value of derivatives used as hedges of the net investment in foreign operations to the extent effective as a component of accumulated OCI

If a derivative instrument in a fair value hedge is terminated or the hedge designation removed the previous adjustments to the carrying amount of the hedged asset or liability are subsequently accounted for in the same manner as other components of the carrying amount of that asset or liability For interest-earning assets and interest-bearing liabilities such adjustments are amortized to earnings over the remaining life of the respective asset or liability If a derivative instrument in a cash flow hedge is terminated or the hedge designation is removed related amounts in accumulated OCI are reclassified into earnings in the same period or periods during which the hedged forecasted transaction affects earnings If it is probable that a forecasted transaction will not occur any related amounts in accumulated OCI are reclassified into earnings in that period

Interest Rate Lock Commitments

The Corporation enters into IRLCs in connection with its mortgage banking activities to fund residential mortgage loans at specified times in the future IRLCs that relate to the origination of mortgage loans that will be held-for-sale are considered derivative instruments under applicable accounting guidance As such these IRLCs are recorded at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in mortgage banking income

In estimating the fair value of an IRLC the Corporation assigns a probability to the loan commitment based on an expectation that it will be exercised and the loan will be funded The fair value of the commitments is derived from the fair value of related mortgage loans which is based on observable market data and includes the expected net future cash flows related to servicing of the loans Changes to the fair value of IRLCs are recognized based on interest rate changes changes in the probability that the commitment will be exercised and the passage of time Changes from the expected future cash flows related to the customer relationship are excluded from the valuation of IRLCs

Outstanding IRLCs expose the Corporation to the risk that the price of the loans underlying the commitments might decline from inception of the rate lock to funding of the loan To protect against this risk the Corporation utilizes forward loan sales commitments and other derivative instruments including interest rate swaps and options to economically hedge the risk of potential changes in the value of the loans that would result from the commitments The changes in the fair value of these derivatives are recorded in mortgage banking income

Securities

Debt securities are recorded on the Consolidated Balance Sheet as of their trade date Debt securities bought principally with the intent to buy and sell in the short term as part of the Corporation s trading activities are reported at fair value in trading account assets with unrealized gains and losses included in trading account profits (losses) Debt securities purchased for longer term investment purposes as part of asset and liability management (ALM) and other strategic activities are reported at fair value with net unrealized gains and losses included in accumulated OCI and presented as available-for-sale (AFS) securities Certain debt securities which management has the intent and ability to hold to maturity (HTM) are reported at amortized cost and presented as HTM securities Other debt securities purchased as economic hedges are reported in other assets at fair value with unrealized gains and losses reported in the same line item in the Consolidated Statement of Income as unrealized gains and losses on the item being hedged are reported

The Corporation regularly evaluates each AFS and HTM debt security where the value has declined below amortized cost to assess whether the decline in fair value is other than-temporary In determining whether an impairment is other-than-temporary the Corporation considers the severity and duration of the decline in fair value the length of time expected for recovery the financial condition of the issuer and other qualitative factors as well as whether the Corporation either plans to sell the security or it is more likely-than-not that it will be required to sell the security before recovery of its amortized cost If the impairment of the AFS or HTM debt security is credit-related an other-than-temporary impairment (OTTI) is recorded in earnings For AFS debt securities the non credit related impairment is recognized in accumulated OCI If the Corporation intends to sell an AFS debt security or believes it will more likely than not be required to sell a security the Corporation records the full amount of the impairment as an OTTI

Interest on debt securities including amortization of premiums and accretion of discounts is included in interest income Realized gains and losses from the sales of debt securities which are included in gains (losses) on sales of debt securities are determined using the specific identification method

Marketable equity securities are classified based on management s intention on the date of purchase and recorded on the Consolidated Balance Sheet as of the trade date Marketable equity securities that are bought and held principally for the purpose of resale in the near term are classified as trading and are carried at fair value with unrealized gains and losses included in trading account profits (losses) Other marketable equity securities are accounted for as AFS and classified in other assets All AFS marketable equity securities are carried at fair value with net unrealized gains and losses included in accumulated OCI on an after-tax basis If there is an other than temporary decline in the fair value of any individual AFS marketable equity security the cost basis is reduced and the Corporation reclassifies the associated net unrealized loss out of accumulated OCI with a corresponding charge to equity investment income Dividend income on AFS marketable equity securities is included in equity investment income Realized gains and losses on the sale of all AFS marketable equity securities which are recorded in equity investment income are determined using the specific identification method

Certain equity investments held by Global Principal Investments (GPI) the Corporation s diversified equity investor in private equity real estate and other alternative investments are subject to investment company accounting under applicable accounting guidance and accordingly are carried at fair value with changes in fair value reported in equity investment income These investments are included in other assets Initially the transaction price of the investment is generally considered to be the best indicator of fair value Thereafter valuation of direct investments is based on an assessment of each individual investment using methodologies that include publicly-traded comparables derived by multiplying a key performance metric (e g earnings before interest taxes depreciation and amortization) of the portfolio company by the relevant valuation multiple observed for comparable companies acquisition comparables entry level multiples and discounted cash flows and are subject to appropriate discounts for lack of liquidity or marketability Certain factors that may influence changes in fair value include but are not limited to recapitalizations subsequent rounds of financing and offerings in the equity or debt capital markets For fund investments the Corporation generally records the fair value of its proportionate interest in the fund s capital as reported by the funds respective managers

Other investments held by GPI are accounted for under either the equity method or at cost, depending on the Corporation s ownership interest, and are reported in other assets

Loans measured at historical cost are reported at their outstanding principal balances net of any unearned income charge-offs unamortized deferred fees and costs on originated loans and for purchased loans net of any unamortized premiums or discounts Loan origination fees and certain direct origination costs are deferred and recognized as adjustments to interest income over the lives of the related loans Unearned income discounts and premiums are amortized to interest income using a level yield methodology The Corporation elects to account for certain loans under the fair value option with changes in fair value reported in other income for consumer and commercial loans

Under applicable accounting guidance for reporting purposes the loan and lease portfolio is categorized by portfolio segment and within each portfolio segment, by class of financing receivables A portfolio segment is defined as the level at which an entity develops and documents a systematic methodology to determine the allowance for credit losses and a class of financing receivables is defined as the level of disaggregation of portfolio segments based on the initial measurement attribute risk characteristics and methods for assessing risk The Corporation s three portfolio segments are home loans credit card and other consumer and commercial The classes within the home loans

portfolio segment are core portfolio residential mortgage Legacy Asset Servicing residential mortgage Countrywide Financial Corporation (Countrywide) residential mortgage purchased credit-impaired (PCI) core portfolio home equity Legacy Asset Servicing home equity Countrywide home equity PCI Legacy Asset Servicing discontinued real estate and Countrywide discontinued real estate PCI The classes within the credit card and other consumer portfolio segment are U S credit card non U S credit card direct/indirect consumer and other consumer The classes within the commercial portfolio segment are U S commercial commercial real estate commercial lease financing non-U S commercial and U S small business commercial

Purchased Credit-Impaired Loans

The Corporation purchases loans with and without evidence of credit quality deterioration since origination Evidence of credit quality deterioration as of the purchase date may include statistics such as past due status refreshed borrower credit scores and refreshed loan-to-value (LTV) ratios some of which are not immediately available as of the purchase date Purchased loans with evidence of credit quality deterioration for which it is probable that the Corporation will not receive all contractually required payments receivable are accounted for as PCI loans The excess of the cash flows expected to be collected on PCI loans measured as of the acquisition date over the estimated fair value is referred to as the accretable yield and is recognized in interest income over the remaining life of the loan using a level yield methodology The difference between contractually required payments as of the acquisition date and the cash flows expected to be collected is referred to as the nonaccretable difference PCI loans that have similar risk characteristics primarily credit risk collateral type and interest rate risk are pooled and accounted for as a single asset with a single composite interest rate and an aggregate expectation of cash flows

The Corporation continues to estimate cash flows expected to be collected over the life of the loan using internal credit risk interest rate and prepayment risk models that incorporate management s best estimate of current key assumptions such as default rates loss severity and payment speeds If upon subsequent evaluation the Corporation determines it is probable that the present value of the expected cash flows have decreased the PCI loan is considered further impaired resulting in a charge to the provision for credit losses and a corresponding increase to a valuation allowance included in the allowance for loan and lease losses If upon subsequent evaluation it is probable that there is an increase in the present value of the expected cash flows the Corporation reduces any remaining valuation allowance If there is no remaining valuation allowance the Corporation recalculates the amount of accretable yield as the excess of the revised expected cash flows over the current carrying value resulting in a reclassification from nonaccretable difference to accretable yield The present value of the expected cash flows is determined using the PCI loans effective interest rate adjusted for changes in the PCI loans interest rate indexes

Loan disposals which may include sales of loans receipt of payments in full from the borrower or foreclosure result in removal of the loan from the PCI loan pool Write downs are not recorded on the PCI loan pool until actual losses exceed the remaining nonaccretable difference To date no write-downs have been recorded for any of the PCI loan pools

Leases

The Corporation provides equipment financing to its customers through a variety of lease arrangements Direct financing leases are carried at the aggregate of lease payments receivable plus estimated residual value of the leased property less unearned income Leveraged leases which are a form of financing leases are carried net of nonrecourse debt Unearned income on leveraged and direct financing leases is accreted to interest income over the lease terms using methods that approximate the interest method

The allowance for credit losses which includes the allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments represents management s estimate of probable losses inherent in the Corporation s lending activities The allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments exclude amounts for loans and unfunded lending commitments accounted for under the fair value option as the fair values of these instruments reflect a credit component The allowance for loan and lease losses does not include amounts related to accrued interest receivable other than billed interest and fees on credit card receivables as accrued interest receivable is reversed when a loan is placed on nonaccrual status The allowance for loan and lease losses represents the estimated probable credit losses on funded consumer and commercial loans and leases while the reserve for unfunded lending commitments including standby letters of credit (SBLCs) and binding unfunded loan commitments represents estimated probable credit losses on these unfunded credit instruments based on utilization assumptions Credit exposures deemed to be uncollectible excluding derivative assets trading account assets and loans carried at fair value are charged against these accounts Cash recovered on previously charged off amounts is recorded as a recovery to these accounts Management evaluates the adequacy of the allowance for credit losses based on the combined total of the allowance for loan and lease losses and the reserve for unfunded lending commitments

The Corporation performs periodic and systematic detailed reviews of its lending portfolios to identify credit risks and to assess the overall collectability of those portfolios The allowance on certain homogeneous consumer loan portfolios which generally consist of consumer real estate within the home loans portfolio segment and credit card loans within the credit card and other consumer portfolio segment, is based on aggregated portfolio segment evaluations generally by product type Loss forecast models are utilized for these portfolios which consider a variety of factors including but not limited to historical loss experience estimated defaults or foreclosures based on portfolio trends delinquencies bankruptcies economic conditions and credit scores

The Corporation s home loans portfolio segment is comprised primarily of large groups of homogeneous consumer loans secured by residential real estate The amount of losses incurred in the homogeneous loan pools is estimated based upon how many of the loans will default and the loss in the event of default Using statistically valid modeling methodologies the Corporation estimates how many of the homogeneous loans will default based on the individual loans attributes aggregated into pools of homogeneous loans with similar attributes The attributes that are most significant to the probability of default and are used to estimate default includes refreshed LTV or in the case of a subordinated lien refreshed combined loan-to-value (CLTV) borrower credit score months since origination (referred to as vintage) and geography all of which are further broken down by present collection status (whether the loan is current delinquent in default or in bankruptcy) This estimate is based on the Corporation s historical experience with the loan portfolio The estimate is adjusted to reflect an assessment of environmental factors not yet reflected in the historical data underlying the loss estimates such as changes in real estate values local and national economies underwriting standards and the regulatory environment The probability of default on a loan is based on an analysis of the movement of loans with the measured attributes from either current or any of the delinquency categories to default over a twelve-month period On home equity loans where the Corporation holds only a second lien position and foreclosure is not the best alternative the loss severity is estimated at 100 percent

The allowance on certain commercial loans (except business card and certain small business loans) is calculated using loss rates delineated by risk rating and product type Factors considered when assessing loss rates include the value of the underlying collateral if applicable the industry of the obligor and the obligor s liquidity and other financial indicators along with certain qualitative factors These statistical models are updated regularly for changes in economic and business conditions Included in the analyses of consumer and commercial loan portfolios are reserves which are maintained to cover uncertainties that affect the Corporation s estimate of probable losses including domestic and global economic uncertainty and large single name defaults

The remaining commercial portfolios including nonperforming commercial loans as well as consumer real estate loans modified in a TDR renegotiated credit card unsecured consumer and small business loans are reviewed in accordance with applicable accounting guidance on impaired loans and TDRs If necessary a specific allowance is established for these loans if they are deemed to be impaired A loan is considered impaired when based on current information and events it is probable that the Corporation will be unable to collect all amounts due including principal and/or interest according to the contractual terms of the agreement and once a loan has been identified as impaired management measures impairment Impaired loans and TDRs are primarily measured based on the present value of payments expected to be received discounted at the loans original effective contractual interest rates or discounted at the portfolio average contractual annual percentage rate excluding promotionally priced loans in effect prior to restructuring for the renegotiated TDR portfolio Impaired loans and TDRs may also be measured based on observable market prices or for loans that are solely dependent on the collateral for repayment the estimated fair value of the collateral less estimated costs to sell If the recorded investment in impaired loans exceeds this amount a specific allowance is established as a component of the allowance for loan and lease losses unless these are consumer real estate loans that are solely dependent on the collateral for repayment in which case the initial amount that exceeds the fair value of the collateral is charged off

Generally when determining the fair value of the collateral securing consumer loans that are solely dependent on the collateral for repayment prior to performing a detailed property valuation including a walk-through of a property the Corporation initially estimates the fair value of the collateral securing consumer loans that are solely dependent on the collateral for repayment using an automated valuation method (AVM) An AVM is a tool that estimates the value of a property by reference to market data including sales of comparable properties and price trends specific to the Metropolitan Statistical Area in which the property being valued is located In the event that an AVM value is not available the Corporation utilizes publicized indices or if these methods provide less reliable valuations the Corporation uses appraisals or broker price opinions to estimate the fair value of the collateral While there is inherent imprecision in these valuations the Corporation believes that they are representative of the portfolio in the aggregate

In addition to the allowance for loan and lease losses the Corporation also estimates probable losses related to unfunded lending commitments such as letters of credit and financial guarantees and binding unfunded loan commitments This reserve for unfunded lending commitments excludes commitments accounted for under the fair value option Unfunded lending commitments are subject to individual reviews and are analyzed and segregated by risk according to the Corporation s internal risk rating scale These risk classifications in conjunction with an analysis of historical loss experience utilization assumptions current economic conditions performance trends within the portfolio and any other pertinent information result in the estimation of the reserve for unfunded lending commitments

The allowance for credit losses related to the loan and lease portfolio is reported separately on the Consolidated Balance Sheet whereas the reserve for unfunded lending commitments is reported on the Consolidated Balance Sheet in accrued expenses and other liabilities The provision for credit losses related to the loan and lease portfolio and unfunded lending commitments is reported in the Consolidated Statement of Income

Nonperforming Loans and Leases, Charge-offs and Delinquencies

Nonperforming loans and leases generally include loans and leases that have been placed on nonaccrual status including nonaccruing loans whose contractual terms have been restructured in a manner that grants a concession to a borrower experiencing financial difficulties Loans accounted for under the fair value option PCI loans and LHFS are not reported as nonperforming loans and leases

In accordance with the Corporation s policies credit card loans where the borrower is not deceased or in bankruptcy and unsecured consumer loans are charged off no later than the end of the month in which the account becomes 180 days past due The outstanding balance of real estate-secured loans that is in excess of the estimated property value less estimated costs to sell is charged off no later than the end of the month in which the account becomes 180 days past due unless repayment of the loan is insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) or through individually insured long-term standby agreements with Fannie Mae (FNMA) and Freddie Mac (FHLMC) (the fully-insured portfolio) The estimated property value less estimated costs to sell is determined using the same process as described for impaired loans in the Allowance for Credit Losses section of this Note on page 162 Personal property-secured loans are charged off no later than the end of the month in which the account becomes 120 days past due Unsecured accounts associated with borrowers who become deceased or are in bankruptcy including credit cards are charged off 60 days after receipt of notification For secured products accounts in bankruptcy are written down to the collateral value less costs to sell by the end of the month in which the account becomes 60 days past due Consumer credit card loans consumer loans secured by personal property and unsecured consumer loans are not placed on nonaccrual status prior to charge off and therefore are not reported as nonperforming loans Real estate secured loans are generally placed on nonaccrual status and classified as nonperforming at 90 days past due However consumer loans secured by real estate in the fully-insured portfolio are not placed on nonaccrual status and therefore are not reported as nonperforming loans Accrued interest receivable is reversed when a consumer loan is placed on nonaccrual status Interest collections on nonaccruing consumer loans for which the ultimate collectability of principal is uncertain are applied as principal reductions otherwise such collections are credited to interest income when received These loans may be restored to accrual status when all principal and interest is current and full repayment of the remaining contractual principal and interest is expected or when the loan otherwise becomes well-secured and is in the process of collection

Consumer loans whose contractual terms have been modified in a TDR and are current at the time of restructuring remain on accrual status if there is demonstrated performance prior to the restructuring and payment in full under the restructured terms is expected Otherwise the loans are placed on nonaccrual status and reported as nonperforming until there is sustained repayment performance for a reasonable period generally six months Consumer TDRs that are on accrual status are reported as performing TDRs through the end of the calendar year in which the restructuring occurred or the year in which the loans are returned to accrual status In addition if accruing consumer TDRs bear less than a market rate of interest at the time of modification they are reported as performing TDRs throughout their remaining lives unless and until they cease to perform in accordance with their modified contractual terms at which time they would be placed on nonaccrual status and reported as nonperforming TDRs

Commercial loans and leases excluding business card loans that are past due 90 days or more as to principal or interest or where reasonable doubt exists as to timely collection including loans that are individually identified as being impaired are generally placed on nonaccrual status and classified as nonperforming unless well-secured and in the process of collection Commercial loans and leases whose contractual terms have been modified in a TDR are typically placed on nonaccrual status and reported as nonperforming until the loans have performed for an adequate period of time under the restructured agreement generally six months If the borrower had demonstrated performance under the previous terms and the underwriting process shows the capacity to continue to perform under the modified terms the loans and leases may remain on accrual status Accruing commercial TDRs are reported as performing TDRs through the end of the calendar year in which the loans are returned to accrual status In addition if accruing commercial TDRs bear less than a market rate of interest at the time of modification they are reported as performing TDRs throughout their remaining lives unless and until they cease to perform in accordance with their modified contractual terms at which time they would be placed on nonaccrual status and reported as nonperforming TDRs

Accrued interest receivable is reversed when a commercial loan is placed on nonaccrual status Interest collections on nonaccruing commercial loans and leases for which the ultimate collectability of principal is uncertain are applied as principal reductions otherwise such collections are credited to income when received Commercial loans and leases may be restored to accrual status when all principal and interest is current and full repayment of the remaining contractual principal and interest is expected or when the loan otherwise becomes well-secured and is in the process of collection Business card loans are charged off no later than the end of the month in which the account becomes 180 days past due or 60 days after receipt of notification of death or bankruptcy filing These loans are not placed on nonaccrual status prior to charge-off and therefore are not reported as nonperforming loans Other commercial loans are generally charged off when all or a portion of the principal amount is determined to be uncollectible

The entire balance of a consumer and commercial loan is contractually delinquent if the minimum payment is not received by the specified due date on the customer s billing statement Interest and fees continue to accrue on past due loans until the date the loan goes into nonaccrual status if applicable

PCI loans are recorded at fair value at the acquisition date Although the PCI loans may be contractually delinquent the Corporation does not classify these loans as nonperforming as the loans were written down to fair value at the acquisition date and the accretable yield is recognized in interest income over the remaining life of the loan In addition reported net charge-offs exclude write-downs on PCI loan pools as the fair value already considers the estimated credit losses

Loans Held-for-sale

Loans that are intended to be sold in the foreseeable future including residential mortgages loan syndications and to a lesser degree commercial real estate consumer finance and other loans are reported as LHFS and are carried at the lower of aggregate cost or fair value The Corporation accounts for certain LHFS including first mortgage LHFS under the fair value option Mortgage loan origination costs related to LHFS that the Corporation accounts for under the fair value option are recognized in noninterest expense when incurred Mortgage loan origination costs for LHFS carried at the lower of cost or fair value are capitalized as part of the carrying amount of the loans and recognized as a reduction of mortgage banking income upon the sale of such loans LHFS that are on nonaccrual status and are reported as nonperforming as defined in the policy above are reported separately from nonperforming loans and leases

Premises and Equipment

Premises and equipment are carried at cost less accumulated depreciation and amortization Depreciation and amortization are recognized using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets Estimated lives range up to 40 years for buildings up to 12 years for furniture and equipment and the shorter of lease term or estimated useful life for leasehold improvements

The Corporation capitalizes the costs associated with certain computer hardware software and internally developed software and amortizes the costs over the expected useful life Direct project costs of internally developed software are capitalized when it is probable that the project will be completed and the software will be used for its intended function

The Corporation accounts for consumer-related MSRs at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in mortgage banking income while commercial-related and residential reverse mortgage MSRs are accounted for using the amortization method (lower of amortized cost or fair value) with impairment recognized as a reduction in mortgage banking income To reduce the volatility of earnings related to interest rate and market value fluctuations U S Treasury securities mortgage-backed securities (MBS) and derivatives such as options and interest rate swaps may be used as economic hedges of the MSRs but are not designated as accounting hedges These economic hedges are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recognized in mortgage banking income

The Corporation estimates the fair value of the consumer MSRs using a valuation model that calculates the present value of estimated future net servicing income This is accomplished through an option-adjusted spread (OAS) valuation approach that factors in prepayment risk This approach consists of projecting servicing cash flows under multiple interest rate scenarios and discounting these cash flows using risk-adjusted discount rates The key economic assumptions used in valuations of MSRs include weighted-average lives of the MSRs and the OAS levels The OAS represents the spread that is added to the discount rate so that the sum of the discounted cash flows equals the market price therefore it is a measure of the extra yield over the reference discount factor that the Corporation expects to earn by holding the asset These variables can and generally do change from quarter to quarter as market conditions and projected interest rates change and could have an adverse impact on the value of the MSRs and could result in a corresponding reduction in mortgage banking income

Goodwill is the purchase premium after adjusting for the fair value of net assets acquired Goodwill is not amortized but is reviewed for potential impairment on an annual basis or when events or circumstances indicate a potential impairment at the reporting unit level A reporting unit as defined under applicable accounting guidance is a business segment or one level below a business segment The goodwill impairment analysis is a two-step test During 2011 the Corporation early adopted new accounting guidance that simplifies goodwill impairment testing by permitting entities to make a qualitative assessment of whether it is likely that the fair value of a reporting unit is less than its carrying value For additional information see New Accounting Pronouncements in this Note on page 158 The first step of the goodwill impairment test involves comparing the fair value of each reporting unit with its carrying amount including goodwill If the fair value of the reporting unit exceeds its carrying amount goodwill of the reporting unit is considered not impaired however if the carrying amount of the reporting unit exceeds its fair value the second step must be performed to measure potential impairment

The second step involves calculating an implied fair value of goodwill for each reporting unit for which the first step indicated possible impairment The implied fair value of goodwill is determined in the same manner as the amount of goodwill recognized in a business combination which is the excess of the fair value of the reporting unit as determined in the first step over the aggregate fair values of the assets liabilities and identifiable intangibles as if the reporting unit was being acquired in a business combination Measurement of the fair values of the assets and liabilities of a reporting unit is consistent with the requirements of the fair value measurements accounting guidance which defines fair value as an exit price meaning the price that would be received to sell an asset or paid to transfer a liability in an orderly transaction between market participants at the measurement date The adjustments to measure the assets liabilities and intangibles at fair value are for the purpose of measuring the implied fair value of goodwill and such adjustments are not reflected in the Consolidated Balance Sheet If the implied fair value of goodwill exceeds the goodwill assigned to the reporting unit there is no impairment If the goodwill assigned to a reporting unit exceeds the implied fair value of goodwill an impairment charge is recorded for the excess An impairment loss recognized cannot exceed the amount of goodwill assigned to a reporting unit An impairment loss establishes a new basis in the goodwill and subsequent reversals of goodwill impairment losses are not permitted under applicable accounting guidance

For intangible assets subject to amortization an impairment loss is recognized if the carrying amount of the intangible asset is not recoverable and exceeds fair value The carrying amount of the intangible asset is considered not recoverable if it exceeds the sum of the undiscounted cash flows expected to result from the use of the asset

Variable Interest Entities

A VIE is an entity that lacks equity investors or whose equity investors do not have a controlling financial interest in the entity through their equity investments The entity that has a controlling financial interest in a VIE is referred to as the primary beneficiary and consolidates the VIE The Corporation is deemed to have a controlling financial interest and is the primary beneficiary of a VIE if it has both the power to direct the activities of the VIE that most significantly impact the VIE s economic performance and an obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that could potentially be significant to the VIE On a quarterly basis the Corporation reassesses whether it has a controlling financial interest in and is the primary beneficiary of a VIE The quarterly reassessment process considers whether the Corporation has acquired or divested the power to direct the activities of the VIE through changes in governing documents or other circumstances The reassessment also considers whether the Corporation has acquired or disposed of a financial interest that could be significant to the VIE or whether an interest in the VIE has become significant or is no longer significant The consolidation status of the VIEs with which the Corporation is involved may change as a result of such reassessments Changes in consolidation status are applied prospectively with assets and liabilities of a newly consolidated VIE initially recorded at fair value A gain or loss may be recognized upon deconsolidation of a VIE depending on the carrying amounts of deconsolidated assets and liabilities compared to the fair value of retained interests and ongoing contractual arrangements

The Corporation primarily uses VIEs for its securitization activities in which the Corporation transfers whole loans or debt securities into a trust or other vehicle such that the assets are legally isolated from the creditors of the Corporation Assets held in a trust can only be used to settle obligations of the trust The creditors of these trusts typically have no recourse to the Corporation except in accordance with the Corporation s obligations under standard representations and warranties

When the Corporation is the servicer of whole loans held in a securitization trust including non-agency residential mortgages home equity loans credit cards automobile loans and student loans the Corporation has the power to direct the most significant activities of the trust The Corporation does not have the power to direct the most significant activities of a residential mortgage agency trust unless the Corporation holds substantially all of the issued securities and has the unilateral right to liquidate the trust The power to direct the most significant activities of a commercial mortgage securitization trust is typically held by the special servicer or by the party holding specific subordinate securities which embody certain controlling rights The Corporation consolidates a whole-loan securitization trust if it has the power to direct the most significant activities and also holds securities issued by the trust or has other contractual arrangements other than standard representations and warranties that could potentially be significant to the trust

The Corporation may also transfer trading account securities and AFS securities into municipal bond or resecuritization trusts The Corporation consolidates a municipal bond or resecuritization trust if it has control over the ongoing activities of the trust such as the remarketing of the trust s liabilities or if there are no ongoing activities sole discretion over the design of the trust including the identification of securities to be transferred in and the structure of securities to be issued and also retains securities or has liquidity or other commitments that could potentially be significant to the trust The Corporation does not consolidate a municipal bond or resecuritization trust if one or a limited number of third-party investors share responsibility for the design of the trust or have control over the significant activities of the trust through liquidation or other substantive rights

Other VIEs used by the Corporation include collateralized debt obligations (CDOs) investment vehicles created on behalf of customers and other investment vehicles The Corporation does not routinely serve as collateral manager for CDOs and therefore does not typically have the power to direct the activities that most significantly impact the economic performance of a CDO However following an event of default if the Corporation is a majority holder of senior securities issued by a CDO and acquires the power to manage the assets of the CDO the Corporation consolidates the CDO

The Corporation consolidates a customer or other investment vehicle if it has control over the initial design of the vehicle or manages the assets in the vehicle and also absorbs potentially significant gains or losses through an investment in the vehicle derivative contracts or other arrangements The Corporation does not consolidate an investment vehicle if a single investor controlled the initial design of the vehicle or manages the assets in the vehicles or if the Corporation does not have a variable interest that could potentially be significant to the vehicle

Retained interests in securitized assets are initially recorded at fair value In addition the Corporation may invest in debt securities issued by unconsolidated VIEs Quoted market prices are primarily used to obtain fair values of these debt securities which are AFS debt securities or trading account assets Generally quoted market prices for retained residual interests are not available therefore the Corporation estimates fair values based on the present value of the associated expected future cash flows This may require management to estimate credit losses prepayment speeds forward interest yield curves discount rates and other factors that impact the value of retained interests Retained residual interests in unconsolidated securitization trusts are classified in trading account assets or other assets with changes in fair value recorded in income The Corporation may also enter into derivatives with unconsolidated VIEs which are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in income

Fair Value

The Corporation measures the fair values of its financial instruments in accordance with accounting guidance that requires an entity to base fair value on exit price and maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs to determine the exit price Under applicable accounting guidance the Corporation categorizes its financial instruments based on the priority of inputs to the valuation technique into a three-level hierarchy as described below Trading account assets and liabilities derivative assets and liabilities AFS debt and marketable equity securities MSRs and certain other assets are carried at fair value in accordance with applicable accounting guidance The Corporation has also elected to account for certain assets and liabilities under the fair value option including certain corporate loans and loan commitments LHFS other short-term borrowings securities financing agreements asset-backed secured financings long-term deposits and long-term debt The following describes the three-level hierarchy

Level 1 Unadjusted quoted prices in active markets for identical assets or liabilities Level 1 assets and liabilities include debt and equity securities and derivative contracts that are traded in an active exchange market as well as certain U S Treasury securities that are highly liquid and are actively traded in over-the-counter (OTC) markets

Level 2 Observable inputs other than Level 1 prices such as quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities quoted prices in markets that are not active or other inputs that are observable or can be corroborated by observable market data for substantially the full term of the assets or liabilities Level 2 assets and liabilities include debt securities with quoted prices that are traded less frequently than exchange-traded instruments and derivative contracts where fair value is determined using a pricing model with inputs that are observable in the market or can be derived principally from or corroborated by observable market data This category generally includes U S government and agency mortgage-backed debt securities corporate debt securities derivative contracts residential mortgage loans and certain LHFS

Level 3 Unobservable inputs that are supported by little or no market activity and that are significant to the overall fair value of the assets or liabilities Level 3 assets and liabilities include financial instruments for which the determination of fair value requires significant management judgment or estimation The fair value for such assets and liabilities is generally determined using pricing models market comparables discounted cash flow methodologies or similar techniques that incorporate the assumptions a market participant would use in pricing the asset or liability This category generally includes certain private equity investments and other principal investments retained residual interests in securitizations residential MSRs asset-backed securities (ABS) highly structured complex or long-dated derivative contracts certain LHFS IRLCs and certain

CDOs where independent pricing information cannot be obtained for a significant portion of the underlying assets

Income Taxes

There are two components of income tax expense current and deferred Current income tax expense approximates taxes to be paid or refunded for the current period Deferred income tax expense results from changes in deferred tax assets and liabilities between periods These gross deferred tax assets and liabilities represent decreases or increases in taxes expected to be paid in the future because of future reversals of temporary differences in the bases of assets and liabilities as measured by tax laws and their bases as reported in the financial statements Deferred tax assets are also recognized for tax attributes such as net operating loss carryforwards and tax credit carryforwards Valuation allowances are recorded to reduce deferred tax assets to the amounts management concludes are more-likely-than not to be realized

Income tax benefits are recognized and measured based upon a two-step model 1) a tax position must be more likely-than not to be sustained based solely on its technical merits in order to be recognized and 2) the benefit is measured as the largest dollar amount of that position that is more-likely-than-not to be sustained upon settlement The difference between the benefit recognized and the tax benefit claimed on a tax return is referred to as an unrecognized tax benefit (UTB) The Corporation records income tax related interest and penalties if applicable within income tax expense

Retirement Benefits

The Corporation has established retirement plans covering substantially all full-time and certain part-time employees Pension expense under these plans is charged to current operations and consists of several components of net pension cost based on various actuarial assumptions regarding future experience under the plans

In addition the Corporation has established unfunded supplemental benefit plans and supplemental executive retirement plans (SERPs) for selected officers of the Corporation and its subsidiaries that provide benefits that cannot be paid from a qualified retirement plan due to Internal Revenue Code restrictions The Corporation s current executive officers do not earn additional retirement income under SERPs These plans are nonqualified under the Internal Revenue Code and assets used to fund benefit payments are not segregated from other assets of the Corporation therefore in general a participant s or beneficiary s claim to benefits under these plans is as a general creditor In addition the Corporation has established several postretirement healthcare and life insurance benefit plans

Accumulated Other Comprehensive Income

The Corporation records unrealized gains and losses on AFS debt and marketable equity securities gains and losses on cash flow accounting hedges unrecognized actuarial gains and losses transition obligation and prior service costs on pension and postretirement plans foreign currency translation adjustments and related hedges of net investments in foreign operations in accumulated OCI net-of-tax Unrealized gains and losses on AFS debt and marketable equity securities are reclassified to earnings as the gains or losses are realized upon sale of the securities Unrealized losses on AFS securities deemed to represent OTTI are reclassified to earnings at the time of the impairment charge For AFS debt securities that the Corporation does not intend to sell or it is not more-likely-than-not that it will be required to sell only the credit component of an unrealized loss is reclassified to earnings Gains or losses on derivatives accounted for as cash flow hedges are reclassified to earnings when the hedged transaction affects earnings Translation gains or losses on foreign currency translation adjustments are reclassified to earnings upon the substantial sale or liquidation of investments in foreign operations

Revenue Recognition

The following summarizes the Corporation s revenue recognition policies as they relate to certain noninterest income line items in the Consolidated Statement of Income

Card income is derived from fees such as interchange cash advance annual late over limit and other miscellaneous fees which are recorded as revenue when earned primarily on an accrual basis Uncollected fees are included in the customer card receivables balances with an amount recorded in the allowance for loan and lease losses for estimated uncollectible card receivables Uncollected fees are written off when a card receivable reaches 180 days past due

Service charges include fees for insufficient funds overdrafts and other banking services and are recorded as revenue when earned Uncollected fees are included in outstanding loan balances with an amount recorded for estimated uncollectible service fees receivable Uncollected fees are written off when a fee receivable reaches 60 days past due

Investment and brokerage services revenue consists primarily of asset management fees and brokerage income that is recognized over the period the services are provided or when commissions are earned Asset management fees consist primarily of fees for investment management and trust services and are generally based on the dollar amount of the assets being managed Brokerage income is generally derived from commissions and fees earned on the sale of various financial products

Investment banking income consists primarily of advisory and underwriting fees that are recognized in income as the services are provided and no contingencies exist Revenues are generally recognized net of any direct expenses Non-reimbursed expenses are recorded as noninterest expense

Earnings Per Common Share

Earnings per common share (EPS) is computed by dividing net income (loss) allocated to common shareholders by the weighted-average common shares outstanding except that it does not include unvested common shares subject to repurchase or cancellation Net income (loss) allocated to common shareholders represents net income (loss) applicable to common shareholders which is net income (loss) adjusted for preferred stock dividends including dividends declared accretion of discounts on preferred stock including accelerated accretion when preferred stock is repaid early and cumulative dividends related to the current dividend period that have not been declared as of period end less income allocated to participating securities (see below for additional information) Diluted EPS is computed by dividing income (loss) allocated to common shareholders plus dividends on dilutive convertible preferred stock and preferred stock that can be tendered to exercise warrants by the weighted-average

common shares outstanding plus amounts representing the dilutive effect of stock options outstanding restricted stock restricted stock units (RSUs) outstanding warrants and the dilution resulting from the conversion of convertible preferred stock if applicable Certain warrants may be exercised at the option of the holder through tendering of the Corporation s 6% Cumulative Perpetual Preferred Stock Series T (the Series T Preferred Stock) or cash Because it is currently more economical for the warrant holder to tender the Series T preferred stock the common shares underlying these warrants are considered outstanding and the dividends on the preferred stock are added back to income (loss) allocable to common shareholders in computing diluted EPS unless the effect is antidilutive

Unvested share-based payment awards that contain nonforfeitable rights to dividends are participating securities that are included in computing EPS using the two-class method The two class method is an earnings allocation formula under which EPS is calculated for common stock and participating securities according to dividends declared and participating rights in undistributed earnings Under this method all earnings distributed and undistributed are allocated to participating securities and common shares based on their respective rights to receive dividends

In an exchange of non convertible preferred stock income allocated to common shareholders is adjusted for the difference between the carrying value of the preferred stock and the fair value of the consideration exchanged In an induced conversion of convertible preferred stock income allocated to common shareholders is reduced by the excess of the fair value of the consideration exchanged over the fair value of the common stock that would have been issued under the original conversion terms

Foreign Currency Translation

Assets liabilities and operations of foreign branches and subsidiaries are recorded based on the functional currency of each entity For certain of the foreign operations the functional currency is the local currency in which case the assets liabilities and operations are translated for consolidation purposes from the local currency to the U S dollar reporting currency at period-end rates for assets and liabilities and generally at average rates for results of operations The resulting unrealized gains or losses as well as gains and losses from certain hedges are reported as a component of accumulated OCI on an after-tax basis When the foreign entity s functional currency is determined to be the U S dollar the resulting remeasurement currency gains or losses on foreign currency-denominated assets or liabilities are included in earnings

Credit Card and Deposit Arrangements

Endorsing Organization Agreements

The Corporation contracts with other organizations to obtain their endorsement of the Corporation s loan and deposit products This endorsement may provide to the Corporation exclusive rights to market to the organization s members or to customers on behalf of the Corporation These organizations endorse the Corporation s loan and deposit products and provide the Corporation with their mailing lists and marketing activities These agreements generally have terms that range from two to five years The Corporation typically pays royalties in exchange for the endorsement Compensation costs related to the credit card agreements are recorded as contra-revenue in card income

Cardholder Reward Agreements

The Corporation offers reward programs that allow its cardholders to earn points that can be redeemed for a broad range of rewards including cash travel and discounted products The Corporation establishes a rewards liability based upon the points earned that are expected to be redeemed and the average cost per point redeemed The points to be redeemed are estimated based on past redemption behavior card product type account transaction activity and other historical card performance The liability is reduced as the points are redeemed The estimated cost of the rewards programs is recorded as contra-revenue in card income

Insurance Income and Insurance Expense

Property and casualty and credit life and disability premiums are generally recognized over the term of the polices on a pro-rata basis for all policies except for certain of the lender-placed auto insurance and the guaranteed auto protection (GAP) policies For lender-placed auto insurance premiums are recognized when collections become probable due to high cancellation rates experienced early in the life of the policy For GAP insurance revenue recognition is correlated to the exposure and accelerated over the life of the contract Mortgage reinsurance premiums are recognized as earned Insurance expense includes insurance claims commissions and premium taxes all of which are recorded in other general operating expense

NOTE 2 Merger and Restructuring Activity

Merger and restructuring charges are recorded in the Consolidated Statement of Income and include incremental costs to integrate the operations of the Corporation and its most recent acquisitions These charges represent costs associated with these activities and do not represent ongoing costs of the fully integrated combined organization The merger and restructuring charges table presents the components of merger and restructuring charges

Merger and Restructuring Charges

Severance and employee-related charges	$ 230	$ 455	$ 1 351
Systems integrations and related charges	265	1 137	1 155
Total merger and restructuring charges	$ 622	$ 1 820	$ 2 721

For 2011 all merger related charges related to the Merrill Lynch & Co Inc (Merrill Lynch) acquisition included for 2010 and 2009 are merger-related charges of $1 6 billion and $1 8 billion related to the Merrill Lynch acquisition and $202 million and $940 million related to earlier acquisitions

The restructuring reserves table presents the changes in restructuring reserves for 2011 and 2010 Restructuring reserves are established by a charge to merger and restructuring charges and the restructuring charges are included in the merger and restructuring charges table Substantially all of the amounts in the restructuring reserves table relate to the Merrill Lynch acquisition

Restructuring Reserves

Balance, January 1	$ 336	$ 403
Exit costs and restructuring charges
Merrill Lynch	217	375
Other	–	54
Cash payments and other	(319)	(496)
Balance, December 31	$ 234	$ 336

Amounts added to the restructuring reserves in 2011 and 2010 related to severance and other employee-related costs Payments associated with the Merrill Lynch acquisition are anticipated to continue into 2012

NOTE 3 Trading Account Assets and Liabilities

The table below presents the components of trading account assets and liabilities at December 31 2011 and 2010

	December 31

Equity securities	39,674	32 129
Non-U S sovereign debt	43,948	33 523
Mortgage trading loans and asset-backed securities	15,511	18 856
Total trading account assets	$ 188,319	$ 194 671
Trading account liabilities
U S government and agency securities	$ 38,710	$ 29 340
Equity securities	14,894	15 482
Non-U S sovereign debt	17,440	15 813
Corporate securities and other	7,764	11 350
Total trading account liabilities	$ 80,808	$ 71 985

(1) Includes $27 3 billion and $29 7 billion of government-sponsored enterprise obligations at December 31, 2011 and 2010

NOTE 4 Derivatives

Derivative Balances

Derivatives are entered into on behalf of customers for trading, as economic hedges or as qualifying accounting hedges For additional information on the Corporation s derivatives and hedging activities see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles The following tables identify derivative instruments included on the Corporation s Consolidated Balance Sheet in derivative assets and liabilities at December 31 2011 and 2010 Balances are presented on a gross basis prior to the application of counterparty and collateral netting Total derivative assets and liabilities are adjusted on an aggregate basis to take into consideration the effects of legally enforceable master netting agreements and have been reduced by the cash collateral applied

ALM and Risk Management Derivatives

The Corporation's ALM and risk management activities include the use of derivatives to mitigate risk to the Corporation including derivatives designated as qualifying accounting hedges and economic hedges Interest rate commodity credit and foreign exchange contracts are utilized in the Corporation's ALM and risk management activities

The Corporation maintains an overall interest rate risk management strategy that incorporates the use of interest rate contracts which are generally non-leveraged generic interest rate and basis swaps options futures and forwards to minimize significant fluctuations in earnings that are caused by interest rate volatility The Corporation's goal is to manage interest rate sensitivity and volatility so that movements in interest rates do not significantly adversely affect earnings or capital As a result of interest rate fluctuations hedged fixed-rate assets and liabilities appreciate or depreciate in fair value Gains or losses on the derivative instruments that are linked to the hedged fixed-rate assets and liabilities are expected to substantially offset this unrealized appreciation or depreciation

Interest rate and market risk can be substantial in the mortgage business Market risk is the risk that values of mortgage assets or revenues will be adversely affected by changes in market conditions such as interest rate movements To hedge interest rate risk in mortgage banking production income the Corporation utilizes forward loan sale commitments and other derivative instruments including purchased options and certain debt securities The Corporation also utilizes derivatives such as interest rate options interest rate swaps forward settlement contracts and Eurodollar futures as economic hedges of the fair value of MSRs For additional information on MSRs see Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights

The Corporation uses foreign currency contracts to manage the foreign exchange risk associated with certain foreign currency-denominated assets and liabilities as well as the Corporation's investments in non-U S subsidiaries Foreign exchange contracts which include spot and forward contracts represent agreements to exchange the currency of one country for the currency of another country at an agreed upon price on an agreed upon settlement date Exposure to loss on these contracts will increase or decrease over their respective lives as currency exchange and interest rates fluctuate

The Corporation enters into derivative commodity contracts such as futures swaps options and forwards as well as non-derivative commodity contracts to provide price risk management services to customers or to manage price risk associated with its physical and financial commodity positions The non-derivative commodity contracts and physical inventories of commodities expose the Corporation to earnings volatility Cash flow and fair value accounting hedges provide a method to mitigate a portion of this earnings volatility

The Corporation purchases credit derivatives to manage credit risk related to certain funded and unfunded credit exposures Credit derivatives include credit default swaps (CDS) total return swaps and swaptions These derivatives are accounted for as economic hedges and changes in fair value are recorded in other income (loss)

Derivatives Designated as Accounting Hedges

The Corporation uses various types of interest rate commodity and foreign exchange derivative contracts to protect against changes in the fair value of its assets and liabilities due to fluctuations in interest rates exchange rates and commodity prices (fair value hedges) The Corporation also uses these types of contracts and equity derivatives to protect against changes in the cash flows of its assets and liabilities and other forecasted transactions (cash flow hedges) The Corporation hedges its net investment in consolidated non-U S operations determined to have functional currencies other than the U S dollar using forward exchange contracts cross-currency basis swaps and by issuing foreign currency-denominated debt (net investment hedges)

Fair Value Hedges

The table below summarizes certain information related to the Corporation's derivatives designated as fair value hedges for 2011 2010 and 2009

Cash Flow Hedges

The table below summarizes certain information related to the Corporation s derivatives designated as cash flow hedges and net investment hedges for 2011 2010 and 2009 During the next 12 months net losses in accumulated OCI of approximately $1 5 billion ($1 0 billion after tax) on derivative instruments that qualify as cash flow hedges are expected to be reclassified into earnings These net losses reclassified into earnings are expected to primarily reduce net interest income related to the respective hedged items Amounts related to commodity price risk reclassified from accumulated OCI are recorded in trading account profits with the underlying hedged item Amounts related to price risk on restricted stock awards reclassified from accumulated OCI are recorded in personnel expense Amounts related to price risk on equity investments included in AFS securities reclassified from accumulated OCI are recorded in equity investment income with the underlying hedged item

Amounts related to foreign exchange risk recognized in accumulated OCI on derivatives exclude gains (losses) of $82 million $192 million and $(387) million related to long-term debt designated as a net investment hedge for 2011 2010 and 2009

(1) Amounts related to derivatives designated as cash flow hedges represent hedge ineffectiveness and amounts related to net investment hedges represent amounts excluded from effectiveness testing
(2) Losses reclassified from accumulated OCI to the Consolidated Statement of Income include $36 million $0 and $44 million in 2011 2010 and 2009 related to the discontinuance of certain cash flow hedges because it was no longer probable that the original forecasted transaction would occur

The Corporation entered into equity total return swaps to hedge a portion of RSUs granted to certain employees as part of their compensation in prior periods Certain awards contain clawback provisions which permit the Corporation to cancel all or a portion of the award under specified circumstances and certain awards may be settled in cash These RSUs are accrued as liabilities over the vesting period and adjusted to fair value based on changes in the share price of the Corporation s common stock From time to time the Corporation may enter into equity derivatives to minimize the change in the expense to the Corporation driven by fluctuations in the share price of the Corporation s common stock during the vesting period of any RSUs that may be granted if any subject to similar or other terms and conditions Certain of these derivatives are designated as cash flow hedges of unrecognized unvested awards with the changes in fair value of the hedge recorded in accumulated OCI and reclassified into earnings in the same period as the RSUs affect earnings The remaining derivatives are accounted for as economic hedges and changes in fair value are recorded in personnel expense For more information on RSUs and related hedges see Note 20 – Stock-based Compensation Plans

Derivatives Accounted for as Economic Hedges

Derivatives accounted for as economic hedges because either they did not qualify for or were not designated as accounting hedges are used by the Corporation to reduce certain risk exposures The table below presents gains (losses) on these derivatives for 2011 2010 and 2009 These gains (losses) are largely offset by the income or expense that is recorded on the economically hedged item

Economic Hedges

Other (5)	(539)	(109)	16
Total	$ 6,117	$ 10 677	$ 5 707

(1) Gains (losses) on these derivatives are recorded in mortgage banking income
(2) Includes gains on interest rate lock commitments related to the origination of mortgage loans that are held-for-sale which are considered derivative instruments of $3 6 billion $8 7 billion and $6 4 billion for 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively
(3) Gains (losses) on these derivatives are recorded in other income (loss)
(4) The majority of the balance is related to the revaluation of economic hedges on foreign currency-denominated debt which is recorded in other income (loss)
(5) Gains (losses) on these derivatives are recorded in other income (loss) and personnel expense for hedges of certain RSUs for 2011 and 2010

Sales and Trading Revenue

The Corporation enters into trading derivatives to facilitate client transactions for principal trading purposes and to manage risk exposures arising from trading account assets and liabilities It is the Corporation s policy to include these derivative instruments in its trading activities which include derivatives and non-derivative cash instruments The resulting risk from these derivatives is managed on a portfolio basis as part of the Corporation s Global Banking & Markets (GBAM) business segment The related sales and trading revenue generated within GBAM is recorded in various income statement line items including trading account profits and net interest income as well as other revenue categories However the majority of income related to derivative instruments is recorded in trading account profits

Sales and trading revenue includes changes in the fair value and realized gains and losses on the sales of trading and other assets net interest income and fees primarily from commissions on equity securities Revenue is generated by the difference in the client price for an instrument and the price at which the trading desk can execute the trade in the dealer market For equity securities commissions related to purchases and sales are recorded in other income (loss) on the Consolidated Statement of Income Changes in the fair value of these securities are included in trading account profits For debt securities revenue with the exception of interest associated with the debt securities is typically included in trading account profits Unlike commissions for equity securities the initial revenue related to broker/dealer services for debt securities is typically included in the pricing of the instrument rather than being charged through separate fee arrangements Therefore this revenue is recorded in trading account profits as part of the initial mark to fair value For derivatives all revenue is included in trading account profits In transactions where the Corporation acts as agent which includes exchange traded futures and options fees are recorded in other income (loss)

Gains (losses) on certain instruments primarily loans held in the GBAM business segment that are not considered trading instruments are excluded from sales and trading revenue in their entirety

The table below, which includes both derivatives and non-derivative cash instruments, identifies the amounts in the respective income statement line items attributable to the Corporation's sales and trading revenue in GBAM, categorized by primary risk for 2011, 2010 and 2009. The difference between total trading account profits in the table below and in the Consolidated Statement of Income relates to trading activities in business segments other than GBAM.

(2) Other income (loss) includes commissions and brokerage fee revenue of $2.3 billion and $2.4 billion for 2011 and 2010 recorded in equity risk.

Credit Derivatives

The Corporation enters into credit derivatives primarily to facilitate client transactions and to manage credit risk exposures. Credit derivatives derive value based on an underlying third-party referenced obligation or a portfolio of referenced obligations and generally require the Corporation, as the seller of credit protection, to make payments to a buyer upon the occurrence of a pre-defined credit event. Such credit events generally include bankruptcy of the referenced credit entity and failure to pay under the obligation, as well as acceleration of indebtedness and payment repudiation or moratorium. For credit derivatives based on a portfolio of referenced credits or credit indices, the Corporation may not be required to make payment until a specified amount of loss has occurred and/or may only be required to make payment up to a specified amount.

Credit derivative instruments where the Corporation is the seller of credit protection and their expiration at December 31, 2011 and 2010 are summarized in the table below. These instruments are classified as investment and non-investment grade based on the credit quality of the underlying reference obligation. The Corporation considers ratings of BBB- or higher as investment grade. Non-investment grade includes non-rated credit derivative instruments.

(1) Per credit-related notes, maximum payout/notional is the same as carrying value.
(2) Per December 31, 2010 total credit-related note amounts have been revised from $3.8 billion (as previously reported) to $6.3 billion to reflect unfunded debt obligations and unfunded non-obligations held by certain consolidated VIEs.

The notional amount represents the maximum amount payable by the Corporation for most credit derivatives However the Corporation does not solely monitor its exposure to credit derivatives based on notional amount because this measure does not take into consideration the probability of occurrence As such the notional amount is not a reliable indicator of the Corporation s exposure to these contracts Instead a risk framework is used to define risk tolerances and establish limits to help ensure that certain credit risk related losses occur within acceptable pre-defined limits

The Corporation economically hedges its market risk exposure to credit derivatives by entering into a variety of offsetting derivative contracts and security positions For example in certain instances the Corporation may purchase credit protection with identical underlying referenced names to offset its exposure The carrying value and notional amount of written credit derivatives for which the Corporation held purchased credit derivatives with identical underlying referenced names and terms at December 31 2011 was $48 0 billion and $1 0 trillion compared to $43 7 billion and $1 4 trillion at December 31 2010

Credit-related notes in the table on page 176 include investments in securities issued by CDO collateralized loan obligation (CLO) and credit-linked note vehicles These instruments are primarily classified as trading securities The carrying value of these instruments equals the Corporation s maximum exposure to loss The Corporation is not obligated to make any payments to the entities under the terms of the securities owned The Corporation discloses internal categorizations of investment grade and non-investment grade consistent with how risk is managed for these instruments

Credit-related Contingent Features and Collateral

The Corporation executes the majority of its derivative contracts in the OTC market with large international financial institutions including broker/dealers and to a lesser degree with a variety of non-financial companies Substantially all of the derivative transactions are executed on a daily margin basis Therefore events such as a credit rating downgrade (depending on the ultimate rating level) or a breach of credit covenants would typically require an increase in the amount of collateral required of the counterparty where applicable and/or allow the Corporation to take additional protective measures such as early termination of all trades Further as previously discussed on page 170 the Corporation enters into legally enforceable master netting agreements which reduce risk by permitting the closeout and netting of transactions with the same counterparty upon the occurrence of certain events

A majority of the Corporation s derivative contracts contain credit risk related contingent features primarily in the form of International Swaps and Derivatives Association Inc (ISDA) master netting agreements and credit support documentation that enhance the creditworthiness of these instruments compared to other obligations of the respective counterparty with whom the Corporation has transacted These contingent features may be for the benefit of the Corporation as well as its counterparties with respect to changes in the Corporation s creditworthiness and the mark-to-market exposure under the derivative transactions At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation held cash and securities collateral of $87 7 billion and $86 1 billion and posted cash and securities collateral of $86 5 billion and $66 9 billion in the normal course of business under derivative agreements

In connection with certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements the Corporation can be required to provide additional collateral or to terminate transactions with certain counterparties in the event of a downgrade of the senior debt ratings of the Corporation or certain subsidiaries The amount of additional collateral required depends on the contract and is usually a fixed incremental amount and/or the market value of the exposure

At December 31 2011 the amount of collateral calculated based on the terms of the contracts that the Corporation and certain subsidiaries could be required to post to counterparties but had not yet posted to counterparties was approximately $5 0 billion That amount includes collateral that could be required to be posted as a result of the downgrades by the rating agencies in 2011

Some counterparties are able to unilaterally terminate certain contracts or the Corporation or certain subsidiaries may be required to take other action such as find a suitable replacement or obtain a guarantee At December 31 2011 the current liability recorded for these derivative contracts was $947 million against which the Corporation and certain subsidiaries had posted $1 0 billion of collateral

In addition under the terms of certain OTC derivative contracts and other trading agreements in the event of a further downgrade of the Corporation s or certain subsidiaries credit ratings counterparties to those agreements may require the Corporation or certain subsidiaries to provide additional collateral terminate these contracts or agreements or provide other remedies At December 31 2011 if the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for the Corporation or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch the amount of additional collateral contractually required by derivative contracts and other trading agreements would have been approximately $1 6 billion comprised of $1 2 billion for BANA and approximately $375 million for Merrill Lynch and certain of its subsidiaries If the agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for these entities by a second incremental notch approximately $1 1 billion in additional collateral comprised of $871 million for BANA and $269 million for Merrill Lynch and certain subsidiaries would have been required

Also if the rating agencies had downgraded their long term senior debt ratings for the Corporation or certain subsidiaries by one incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was $2 9 billion against which $2 7 billion of collateral has been posted If the rating agencies had downgraded their long-term senior debt ratings for the Corporation and certain subsidiaries by a second incremental notch the derivative liability that would be subject to unilateral termination by counterparties as of December 31 2011 was an incremental $5 6 billion against which $5 4 billion of collateral has been posted

Derivative Valuation Adjustments

The Corporation records counterparty credit risk valuation adjustments on derivative assets in order to properly reflect the credit quality of the counterparties These adjustments are necessary as the market quotes on derivatives do not fully reflect the credit risk of the counterparties to the derivative assets The Corporation considers collateral and legally enforceable master netting agreements that mitigate its credit exposure to each counterparty in determining the counterparty credit risk valuation adjustment All or a portion of these counterparty credit valuation adjustments are subsequently adjusted due to changes in the value of the derivative contract collateral and creditworthiness of the counterparties During 2011 and 2010 credit valuation gains (losses) of $(1 9) billion and $731 million ($(606) million and $(8) million net of hedges) for counterparty credit risk related to derivative assets were recognized in trading account profits These credit valuation adjustments were primarily related to the Corporation s monoline exposure At December 31 2011 and 2010 the cumulative counterparty credit risk valuation adjustment reduced the derivative assets balance by $2 8 billion and $6 8 billion

In addition the fair value of the Corporation s or its subsidiaries derivative liabilities is adjusted to reflect the impact of the Corporation s credit quality During 2011 and 2010 the Corporation recorded DVA gains of $1 4 billion and $331 million ($1 0 billion and $262 million net of interest rate and foreign exchange hedges) in trading account profits for changes in the Corporation s or its subsidiaries credit risk At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation s cumulative DVA reduced the derivative liabilities balance by $2 4 billion and $1 1 billion

At December 31 2011 the accumulated net unrealized gains on AFS debt securities included in accumulated OCI were $3 1 billion net of the related income tax expense of $1 9 billion At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had nonperforming AFS debt securities of $140 million and $44 million

The Corporation recorded OTTI losses on AFS debt securities for 2011 and 2010 as presented in the table below A debt security is impaired when its fair value is less than its amortized cost If the Corporation intends or will more-likely-than-not be required to sell the debt securities prior to recovery the entire impairment is recorded in the Consolidated Statement of Income For debt securities the Corporation does not intend or will not more likely-than-not be required to sell an analysis is performed to determine if any of the impairment is due to credit or whether it is due to other factors (e g interest rate) Credit losses are considered unrecoverable and are recorded in the Consolidated Statement of Income with the remaining unrealized losses recorded in accumulated OCI In certain instances the credit loss on a debt security may exceed the total impairment in which case the portion of the credit loss that exceeds the total impairment is recorded as an unrealized gain in accumulated OCI Balances in the table below exclude $9 million and $51 million of unrealized gains recorded in accumulated OCI related to these securities for 2011 and 2010

The Corporation estimates the portion of loss attributable to credit using a discounted cash flow model and estimates the expected cash flows of the underlying collateral using internal credit interest rate and prepayment risk models that incorporate management s best estimate of current key assumptions such as default rates loss severity and prepayment rates Assumptions used can vary widely from loan to loan and are influenced by such factors as loan interest rate geographical location of the borrower borrower characteristics and collateral type The Corporation then determines how the underlying collateral cash flows will be distributed to each security issued from the structure Expected principal and interest cash flows on an impaired AFS debt security are discounted using the effective yield of each individual impaired AFS debt security

Significant assumptions used in the valuation of non-agency residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS) were as follows at December 31 2011

Significant Valuation Assumptions

	Weighted-average	Range (1) 10th Percentile (2)	Range (1) 90th Percentile (2)
Prepayment speed	10%	9%	22%
Loss severity	46	15	93
Life default rate	59	3	100

(1) Represents the range of inputs/assumptions based upon the underlying collateral
(2) The value of a variable below which the indicated percentile of observations will fall

Additionally annual constant prepayment speed and loss severity rates are projected considering collateral characteristics such as LTV creditworthiness of borrowers as measured using FICO scores and geographic concentrations The weighted-average severity by collateral type was 43 percent for prime bonds 50 percent for Alt-A bonds and 60 percent for subprime bonds at December 31 2011 Additionally default rates are projected by considering collateral characteristics including but not limited to LTV FICO and geographic concentration Weighted-average life default rates by collateral type were 36 percent for prime bonds 62 percent for Alt A bonds and 72 percent for subprime bonds at December 31 2011

The Corporation mitigates a portion of its credit risk on the residential mortgage portfolio through the use of synthetic securitization vehicles These vehicles issue long-term notes to investors the proceeds of which are held as cash collateral The Corporation pays a premium to the vehicles to purchase mezzanine loss protection on a portfolio of residential mortgages owned by the Corporation Cash held in the vehicles is used to reimburse the Corporation in the event that losses on the mortgage portfolio exceed 10 basis points (bps) of the original pool balance up to the remaining amount of purchased loss protection of $783 million and $1.1 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 The vehicles from which the Corporation purchases credit protection are VIEs The Corporation does not have a variable interest in these vehicles Accordingly these vehicles are not consolidated by the Corporation Amounts due from the vehicles are recorded in other income (loss) when the Corporation recognizes a reimbursable loss as described above Amounts are collected when reimbursable losses are realized through the sale of the underlying collateral At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had a receivable of $359 million and $722 million from these vehicles for reimbursement of losses and principal of $23.9 billion and $53.9 billion of residential mortgage loans was referenced under these agreements The Corporation records an allowance for credit losses on these loans without regard to the existence of the purchased loss protection as the protection does not represent a guarantee of individual loans

In addition the Corporation has entered into long-term credit protection agreements with FNMA and FHLMC on principal totaling $23.8 billion and $12.9 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 providing full protection on residential mortgage loans that become severely delinquent All of these loans are individually insured and therefore the Corporation does not record an allowance for credit losses related to these loans

Nonperforming Loans and Leases

The Credit Quality table presents the Corporation's nonperforming loans and leases including nonperforming TDRs and loans accruing past due 90 days or more at December 31 2011 and 2010 Nonperforming loans and leases exclude performing TDRs and loans accounted for under the fair value option Nonperforming LHFS are excluded from nonperforming loans and leases as they are recorded at either fair value or the lower of cost or fair value

In addition PCI loans consumer credit card loans business card loans and in general consumer loans not secured by real estate including renegotiated loans are not considered nonperforming and are therefore excluded from nonperforming loans and leases in the table below Real estate secured past due consumer fully insured loans are reported as performing since the principal repayment is insured See Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles for further information on the criteria for classification as nonperforming

Impaired Loans and Troubled Debt Restructurings

A loan is considered impaired when, based on current information, it is probable that the Corporation will be unable to collect all amounts due from the borrower in accordance with the contractual terms of the loan. Impaired loans include nonperforming commercial loans, all TDRs, and the renegotiated credit card and other consumer TDR portfolio (the renegotiated credit card and other consumer TDR portfolio, collectively, the renegotiated TDR portfolio). Impaired loans exclude nonperforming consumer loans and nonperforming commercial leases, unless they are classified as TDRs. Loans accounted for under the fair value option are also excluded. PCI loans are excluded and reported separately on page 194.

Home Loans

Impaired home loans within the home loans portfolio segment consist entirely of TDRs. Excluding PCI loans, substantially all modifications of home loans meet the definition of TDRs. Modifications of home loans are done in accordance with the government's Making Home Affordable Program (modifications under government programs) or the Corporation's proprietary programs (modifications under proprietary programs). These modifications are considered to be TDRs if concessions have been granted to borrowers experiencing financial difficulties. Concessions may include reductions in interest rates, capitalization of past due amounts, principal and/or interest forbearance, payment extensions, principal and/or interest forgiveness or combinations thereof.

Prior to permanently modifying a loan, the Corporation may enter into trial modifications with certain borrowers under both government and proprietary programs. Trial modifications generally represent a three- to four-month period during which the borrower makes monthly payments under the anticipated modified payment terms. Upon successful completion of the trial period, the Corporation and the borrower enter into a permanent modification. In accordance with new accounting guidance effective in 2011, a loan is classified as a TDR when a binding offer is extended to borrowers to enter into a trial modification. At December 31, 2011, the Corporation classified as TDRs $2.6 billion of home loans that were participating in or had been offered a binding trial modification. These home loans TDRs had an aggregate allowance of $154 million at December 31, 2011. Approximately 55 percent of all loans that entered into a trial modification during 2011 became permanent modifications as of December 31, 2011.

In accordance with applicable accounting guidance, home loans are not classified as impaired loans unless they have been designated as a TDR. Once such a loan has been designated as a TDR, it is then individually assessed for impairment. Home loan TDRs are measured primarily based on the net present value of the estimated cash flows discounted at the loan's original effective interest rate. If the carrying value of a TDR exceeds this amount, a specific allowance is recorded as a component of the allowance for loan and lease losses. Alternatively, home loan TDRs that are considered to be dependent solely on the collateral for repayment (e.g., due to the lack of income verification) are measured based on the estimated fair value of the collateral and a charge-off is recorded if the carrying value exceeds the fair value of the collateral. Home loans that reached 180 days past due prior to modification would have been charged-off to their net realizable value before they were modified as TDRs in accordance with established policy. Therefore, the modification of home loans that are 180 or more days past due as TDRs does not have an impact on the allowance for credit losses nor are additional charge-offs required at the time of modification. Subsequent declines in the fair value of the collateral after a loan has reached 180 days past due are recorded as charge-offs. Fully-insured loans are protected against principal loss, and therefore, the Corporation does not record an allowance for credit losses on the outstanding principal balance, even after they have been modified in a TDR.

The net present value of the estimated cash flows is based on model-driven estimates of projected payments, prepayments, defaults and loss-given-default (LGD). Using statistical modeling methodologies, the Corporation estimates the probability that a loan will default prior to maturity based on the attributes of each loan. The factors that are most relevant to the probability of default are the refreshed LTV or, in the case of a subordinated lien, refreshed CLTV, borrower credit score, months since origination (i.e., vintage), and geography. Each of these factors is further broken down by present collection status (whether the loan is current, delinquent, in default or in bankruptcy). Severity (or LGD) is estimated based on the refreshed LTV for the first mortgages or CLTV for subordinated liens. The estimates are based on the Corporation's historical experience, but are adjusted to reflect an assessment of environmental factors that may not be reflected in the historical data, such as changes in real estate values, local and national economies, underwriting standards and the regulatory environment. The probability of default models also incorporate recent experience with modification programs, a loan's default history prior to modification, and the change in borrower payments post-modification.

At December 31, 2011 and 2010, remaining commitments to lend additional funds to debtors whose terms have been modified in a home loan TDR were immaterial. Home loan foreclosed properties totaled $2.0 billion and $1.2 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010.

The table below presents impaired loans in the Corporation's home loans portfolio segment at December 31 2011 and 2010 The impaired home loans table below includes primarily loans managed by Legacy Asset Servicing Certain impaired home loans do not have a related allowance as the current valuation of these impaired loans exceeded the carrying value

Credit Card and Other Consumer

The credit card and other consumer portfolio segment includes impaired loans that have been modified as a TDR The Corporation seeks to assist customers that are experiencing financial difficulty by modifying loans while ensuring compliance with federal laws and guidelines Substantially all of the Corporation's credit card and other consumer loan modifications involve reducing the interest rate on the account and placing the customer on a fixed payment plan not exceeding 60 months all of which are considered TDRs In all cases the customer's available line of credit is canceled The Corporation makes loan modifications directly with borrowers for debt held only by the Corporation (internal programs) Additionally the Corporation makes loan modifications for borrowers working with third-party renegotiation agencies which provide solutions to customers entire unsecured debt structures (external programs)

All credit card and other consumer loans not secured by real estate including modified loans remain on accrual status until the loan is either charged-off or paid in full The allowance for impaired credit card loans is based on the present value of projected cash flows discounted using the portfolio's average contractual interest rate excluding promotionally priced loans in effect prior to restructuring Prior to modification credit card and other consumer loans are included in homogeneous pools which are collectively evaluated for impairment For these portfolios loss forecast models are utilized that consider a variety of factors including but not limited to historical loss experience, delinquencies economic trends and credit scores

The table below provides information on the Corporation s renegotiated TDR portfolio At December 31 2011 and 2010 the renegotiated TDR portfolio was considered impaired and had a related allowance as shown in the table below

Commercial Loans

Impaired commercial loans which include nonperforming loans and TDRs (both performing and nonperforming) are primarily measured based on the present value of payments expected to be received discounted at the loan s original effective interest rate Commercial impaired loans may also be measured based on observable market prices or for loans that are solely dependent on the collateral for repayment, the estimated fair value of collateral less estimated costs to sell If the carrying value of a loan exceeds this amount, a specific allowance is recorded as a component of the allowance for loan and lease losses

Modifications of loans to commercial borrowers that are experiencing financial difficulty are designed to reduce the Corporation s loss exposure while providing the borrower with an opportunity to work through financial difficulties often to avoid foreclosure or bankruptcy Each modification is unique and reflects the individual circumstances of the borrower Modifications that result in a TDR may include extensions of maturity at a concessionary (below market) rate of interest, payment forbearances or other actions designed to benefit the customer while mitigating the Corporation s risk exposure Reductions in interest rates are rare Instead the interest rates are typically increased although the increased rate may not represent a market rate of interest Infrequently concessions may also include principal forgiveness in connection with foreclosure short sale or other settlement agreements leading to termination or sale of the loan

At the time of restructuring, the loans are remeasured to reflect the impact if any on projected cash flows observable market prices or collateral value resulting from the modified terms If there was no forgiveness of principal and the interest rate was not decreased, the modification may have little or no impact on the allowance established for the loan If a portion of the loan is deemed to be uncollectible a charge-off may be recorded at the time of restructuring Alternatively a charge-off may have already been recorded in a previous period such that no charge-off is required at the time of modification

At December 31 2011 and 2010 remaining commitments to lend additional funds to debtors whose terms have been modified in a commercial loan TDR were immaterial Commercial foreclosed properties totaled $612 million and $725 million at December 31 2011 and 2010

The table below presents impaired loans in the Corporation's commercial loan portfolio at December 31 2011 and 2010 Certain impaired commercial loans do not have a related allowance as the valuation of these impaired loans exceeded the carrying value which is net of previously recorded charge-offs

PCI loans are acquired loans with evidence of credit quality deterioration since origination for which it is probable at purchase date that the Corporation will be unable to collect all contractually required payments PCI loans are pooled based on similar characteristics and evaluated for impairment on a pool basis The Corporation estimates impairment on its PCI loan portfolio in accordance with applicable accounting guidance on contingencies which involves estimating the expected cash flows of each pool using internal credit risk interest rate and prepayment risk models The key assumptions used in the models include the Corporation's estimate of default rates, loss severity and prepayment speeds The carrying value and valuation allowance for Countrywide consumer PCI loans are presented together with the allowance for loan and lease losses See Note 7 – Allowance for Credit Losses for additional information

The table below shows activity for the accretable yield on Countrywide consumer PCI loans The $912 million reclassification from nonaccretable difference during 2011 is primarily due to an increase in the expected life of the PCI loans The reclassification did not increase the annual yield but, as a result of estimated slower prepayment speeds added additional interest periods to the expected cash flows

(1) The 2010 balances include $10 8 billion of allowance for loan and lease losses related to the adoption of new consolidation guidance This includes $8 7 billion for the home loans portfolio segment and $10 2 billion for the credit card and other consumer portfolio segment

In 2011 for the PCI loan portfolio the Corporation recorded $2 2 billion in provision for credit losses with a corresponding increase in the valuation allowance included as part of the allowance for loan and lease losses This compared to $2 2 billion in 2010 and $3 5 billion in 2009 PCI loans that were acquired as part of the Merrill Lynch acquisition were excluded from current period PCI disclosures as the valuation allowance associated with these loans is no longer significant The valuation allowance associated with the PCI loan portfolio was $8 5 billion $6 4 billion and $3 9 billion at December 31 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively

The "other" amount under allowance for loan and lease losses for 2011 includes a $449 million reduction in the allowance for loan and lease losses related to Canadian consumer card loans that were transferred to LHFS The 2009 "other" amount includes a $750 million reduction in the allowance for loan and lease losses related to $8 5 billion of credit card loans that were exchanged for a $7 8 billion HTM debt security partially offset by a $340 million increase associated with the reclassification to other assets of the amount reimbursable under residential mortgage cash collateralized synthetic securitizations

The "other" amount under the reserve for unfunded lending commitments for 2011 and 2010 primarily represents accretion of the Merrill Lynch purchase accounting adjustment and the impact of funding previously unfunded positions The 2009 amount includes the remaining balance of the acquired Merrill Lynch reserve excluding those commitments accounted for under the fair value option net of accretion and the impact of funding previously unfunded positions

NOTE 8 Securitizations and Other Variable Interest Entities

The Corporation utilizes VIEs in the ordinary course of business to support its own and its customers' financing and investing needs. The Corporation routinely securitizes loans and debt securities using VIEs as a source of funding for the Corporation and as a means of transferring the economic risk of the loans or debt securities to third parties. The Corporation also administers, structures or invests in other VIEs including CDOs, investment vehicles and other entities.

The following tables present the assets and liabilities of consolidated and unconsolidated VIEs at December 31, 2011 and 2010 in situations where the Corporation has continuing involvement with transferred assets or if the Corporation otherwise has a variable interest in the VIE. The tables also present the Corporation's maximum exposure to loss at December 31, 2011 and 2010 resulting from its involvement with consolidated VIEs and unconsolidated VIEs in which the Corporation holds a variable interest. The Corporation's maximum exposure to loss is based on the unlikely event that all of the assets in the VIEs become worthless and incorporates not only potential losses associated with assets recorded on the Corporation's Consolidated Balance Sheet but also potential losses associated with off-balance sheet commitments such as unfunded liquidity commitments and other contractual arrangements. The Corporation's maximum exposure to loss does not include losses previously recognized through write-downs of assets.

The Corporation invests in ABS issued by third-party VIEs with which it has no other form of involvement. These securities are included in Note 3 – Trading Account Assets and Liabilities and Note 5 – Securities. In addition, the Corporation uses VIEs such as trust preferred securities trusts in connection with its funding activities as described in Note 13 – Long-term Debt. The Corporation also uses VIEs in the form of synthetic securitization vehicles to mitigate a portion of the credit risk on its residential mortgage loan portfolio as described in Note 6 – Outstanding Loans and Leases. The Corporation uses VIEs such as cash funds managed within Global Wealth & Investment Management (GWIM) to provide investment opportunities for clients. These VIEs which are not consolidated by the Corporation are not included in the tables within this Note.

Except as described below, the Corporation did not provide financial support to consolidated or unconsolidated VIEs during 2011 or 2010 that it was not previously contractually required to provide, nor does it intend to do so.

Mortgage-related Securitizations

First-lien Mortgages

As part of its mortgage banking activities, the Corporation securitizes a portion of the first-lien residential mortgage loans it originates or purchases from third parties, generally in the form of MBS guaranteed by government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) FNMA and FHLMC (collectively, the GSEs) or GNMA in the case of FHA-insured and U.S. Department of Veteran Affairs (VA)-guaranteed mortgage loans. Securitization usually occurs in conjunction with, or shortly after, loan closing or purchase. In addition, the Corporation may, from time to time, securitize commercial mortgages it originates or purchases from other entities. The Corporation typically services the loans it securitizes. Further, the Corporation may retain beneficial interests in the securitization trusts, including senior and subordinate securities and equity tranches issued by the trusts. Except as described below and in Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees, the Corporation does not provide guarantees or recourse to the securitization trusts other than standard representations and warranties.

The table below summarizes select information related to first-lien mortgage securitizations for 2011 and 2010.

(1) The Corporation sells residential mortgage loans to GSEs in the normal course of business and receives MBS in exchange which may then be sold into the market to third-party investors for cash proceeds.
(2) Substantially all of the first-lien residential mortgage loans securitized are initially classified as LHFS and accounted for under the fair value option. As such, gains are recognized on these LHFS prior to securitization. During 2011 and 2010, the Corporation recognized $2.9 billion and $6.1 billion of gains on these LHFS, net of hedges.

In addition to cash proceeds as reported in the table above, the Corporation received securities with an initial fair value of $545 million and $23.7 billion in connection with first-lien mortgage securitizations principally residential agency securitizations in 2011 and 2010. All of these securities were initially classified as Level 2 assets within the fair value hierarchy. During 2011 and 2010, there were no changes to the initial classification.

The Corporation recognizes consumer MSRs from the sale or securitization of first-lien mortgage loans. Servicing fee and ancillary fee income on consumer mortgage loans serviced, including securitizations where the Corporation has continuing involvement, were $5.8 billion and $6.4 billion in 2011 and 2010. Servicing advances on consumer mortgage loans, including securitizations where the Corporation has continuing involvement, were $26.0 billion and $24.3 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010. The Corporation may have the option to repurchase delinquent loans out of securitization trusts, which reduces the amount of servicing advances it is required to make. During 2011 and 2010, $9.0 billion and $14.5 billion of loans were repurchased from first-lien securitization trusts as a result of loan delinquencies or in order to perform modifications. The majority of these loans repurchased were FHA-insured mortgages collateralizing GNMA securities. In addition, the Corporation has retained commercial MSRs from the sale or securitization of commercial mortgage loans. Servicing fee and ancillary fee income on commercial mortgage loans serviced, including securitizations where the Corporation has continuing involvement, were $152 million and $156 million at December 31, 2011 and 2010. For additional information on MSRs, see Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights.

The table below summarizes select information related to first-lien mortgage securitization trusts in which the Corporation held a variable interest at December 31, 2011 and 2010.

(1) Maximum loss exposure includes the liability for representations and warranties obligations and corporate guarantees and also includes servicing advances and MSRs. For more information, see Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees and Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights.
(2) As a holder of these securities, the Corporation receives scheduled principal and interest payments. During 2011 and 2010, there were no OTTI losses recorded on these securities classified as AFS debt securities.
(3) Principal balance outstanding includes loans the Corporation transferred with which the Corporation has continuing involvement, which may include servicing the loans.

As a result of a settlement agreement with Assured Guaranty Ltd. and its subsidiaries (Assured Guaranty) in 2011, the Corporation entered into a loss-sharing reinsurance arrangement involving 21 first-lien RMBS trusts. This obligation is a variable interest that could potentially be significant to the trusts. To the extent that the Corporation services all or a majority of the loans in any of the 21 trusts, the Corporation is the primary beneficiary. At December 31, 2011, 12 of these trusts were consolidated. Assets and liabilities of the consolidated trusts and the Corporation's maximum loss exposure to consolidated and unconsolidated trusts are included in the table above as non-agency prime and subprime trusts. For additional information, see Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees.

Home Equity Loans

The Corporation retains interests in home equity securitization trusts to which it transferred home equity loans. These retained interests include senior and subordinate securities and residual interests. In addition, the Corporation may be obligated to provide subordinate funding to the trusts during a rapid amortization event. The Corporation also services the loans in the trusts. Except as described below and in Note 9 – Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees, the Corporation does not provide guarantees or recourse to the securitization trusts other than standard representations and warranties. There were no securitizations of home equity loans during 2011 and 2010. All of the home equity trusts have entered the amortization phase and accordingly there were no collections reinvested in revolving period securitizations in 2011. Collections reinvested in revolving period securitizations were $21 million in 2010.

The table below summarizes select information related to home equity loan securitization trusts in which the Corporation held a variable interest at December 31 2011 and 2010

(1) For unconsolidated VIEs the maximum loss is generally limited to outstanding trust certificates issued by trusts in rapid amortization net of recorded reserves and excludes the liability for representations and warranties obligations and repurchase guarantees
(2) At December 31 2011 and 2010 $3 million and $204 million of the debt securities classified as trading account assets were senior securities and $2 million and $5 million were subordinate securities
(3) As a holder of these securities the Corporation received scheduled principal and interest payments During 2011 and 2010 there were no OTTI losses recorded on these securities classified as AFS debt securities
(4) At December 31 2011 and 2010 $13 million and $30 million were collateralized debt securities

Included in the table above are consolidated and unconsolidated home equity loan securitizations that have entered a rapid amortization period and for which the Corporation is obligated to provide subordinated funding During this period cash payments from borrowers are accumulated to repay outstanding debt securities and the Corporation continues to make advances to borrowers when they draw on their lines of credit The Corporation then transfers the newly generated receivables into the securitization vehicles and is reimbursed only after other parties in the securitization have received all of the cash flows to which they are entitled If loan losses requiring draws on monoline insurers policies which protect the bondholders in the securitization exceed a certain level the Corporation may not receive reimbursement for all of the funds advanced to borrowers as the senior bondholders and the monoline insurers have priority for repayment The Corporation evaluates each of these securitizations for potential losses due to non-recoverable advances by estimating the amount and timing of future losses on the underlying loans the excess spread available to cover such losses and potential cash flow shortfalls during rapid amortization This evaluation which includes the number of loans still in revolving status the amount of available credit and when those loans will lose revolving status is also used to determine whether the Corporation has a variable interest that is more than insignificant and must consolidate the trust A maximum funding obligation attributable to rapid amortization cannot be calculated as a home equity borrower has the ability to pay down and re-draw balances At December 31 2011 and 2010 home equity loan securitization transactions in rapid amortization for which the Corporation has a subordinate funding obligation including both consolidated and unconsolidated trusts had $10.7 billion and $12.5 billion of trust certificates outstanding This amount is significantly greater than the amount the Corporation expects to fund The charges that will ultimately be recorded as a result of the rapid amortization events depend on the undrawn available credit on the home equity lines which totaled $460 million and $639 million at December 31 2011 and 2010 as well as performance of the loans the amount of subsequent draws and the timing of related cash flows At December 31 2011 and 2010 the reserve for losses on expected future draw obligations on the home equity loan securitizations in rapid amortization for which the Corporation has a subordinated funding obligation was $69 million and $131 million

The Corporation has consumer MSRs from the sale or securitization of home equity loans The Corporation recorded $62 million and $79 million of servicing fee income related to home equity securitizations during 2011 and 2010

Credit Card Securitizations

The Corporation securitizes originated and purchased credit card loans The Corporation's continuing involvement with the securitization trusts includes servicing the receivables retaining an undivided interest (seller's interest) in the receivables and holding certain retained interests including senior and subordinate securities discount receivables subordinate interests in accrued interest and fees on the securitized receivables and cash reserve accounts The seller's interest in the trusts which is pari passu to the investors' interest and the discount receivables are classified in loans and leases

The table below summarizes select information related to credit card securitization trusts in which the Corporation held a variable interest at December 31 2011 and 2010

(2) At December 31 2011 and 2010 all other assets included restricted cash accounts and available-accrued interest and fees

During 2010 $2.9 billion of new senior debt securities were issued to third-party investors from the credit card securitization trusts and none were issued in 2011

During 2010 subordinate securities with a notional principal amount of $11.5 billion and a stated interest rate of zero percent were issued by certain credit card securitization trusts to the Corporation In addition the Corporation elected to designate a specified percentage of new receivables transferred to the trusts as "discount receivables" such that principal collections thereon are added to finance charges which increases the yield in the trust Through the designation of newly transferred receivables as discount receivables the Corporation has subordinated a portion of its seller's interest to the investors' interest These actions which were specifically permitted by the terms of the trust documents were taken in an effort to address the decline in the excess spread of the U.S. and U.K. credit card securitization trusts The U.S. election expired June 30 2011 The issuance of subordinate securities and the discount receivables election had no impact on the Corporation's results of operations in 2011 and 2010

(1) As a holder of these securities, the Corporation receives scheduled principal and interest payments. During 2011 and 2010, there were no OTTI losses recorded on these securities classified as AFS debt securities.
(2) The retained senior and subordinate securities were valued using quoted market prices or observable market inputs (Level 2 of the fair value hierarchy).
(3) The retained residual interests are carried at fair value which was derived using model valuations (Level 3 of the fair value hierarchy).

Resecuritization Trusts

The Corporation transfers existing securities, typically MBS, into resecuritization vehicles at the request of customers seeking securities with specific characteristics. The Corporation may also enter into resecuritizations of securities within its investment portfolio for purposes of improving liquidity and capital and managing credit or interest rate risk. Generally, there are no significant ongoing activities performed in a resecuritization trust and no single investor has the unilateral ability to liquidate the trust.

The Corporation resecuritized $33.6 billion of securities in 2011 compared to $97.7 billion in 2010. Net gains on sales totaled $909 million in 2011 compared to net losses of $144 million in 2010. The Corporation consolidates a resecuritization trust if it has sole discretion over the design of the trust, including the identification of securities to be transferred in and the structure of securities to be issued, and also retains a variable interest that could potentially be significant to the trust. If one or a limited number of third-party investors share responsibility for the design of the trust and purchase a significant portion of securities, including subordinate securities issued by non-agency trusts, the Corporation does not consolidate the trust.

Municipal Bond Trusts

The Corporation administers municipal bond trusts that hold highly-rated, long-term fixed-rate municipal bonds. A majority of the bonds are rated AAA or AA and some benefit from insurance provided by third parties. The trusts obtain financing by issuing floating-rate trust certificates that reprice on a weekly or other basis to third-party investors. The Corporation may serve as remarketing agent and/or liquidity provider for the trusts. The floating-rate investors have the right to tender the certificates at specified dates, often with as little as seven days' notice. Should the Corporation be unable to remarket the tendered certificates, it is generally obligated to purchase them at par, under standby liquidity facilities unless the bond's credit rating has declined below investment grade or there has been an event of default or bankruptcy of the issuer and insurer.

The Corporation also provides credit enhancement to investors in certain municipal bond trusts whereby the Corporation guarantees the payment of interest and principal on floating-rate certificates issued by these trusts in the event of default by the issuer of the underlying municipal bond. If a customer holds the residual interest in a trust, that customer typically has the unilateral ability to liquidate the trust at any time, while the Corporation typically has the ability to trigger the liquidation of that trust if the market value of the bonds held in the trust declines below a specified threshold. This arrangement is designed to limit market losses to an amount that is less than the customer's residual interest, effectively preventing the Corporation from absorbing losses incurred on assets held within that trust.

During 2011 and 2010, the Corporation was the transferor of assets into unconsolidated municipal bond trusts and received cash proceeds from new securitizations of $733 million and $1.2 billion. At December 31, 2011 and 2010, the principal balance outstanding for unconsolidated municipal bond securitization trusts for which the Corporation was transferor was $2.5 billion and $2.2 billion.

The Corporation's liquidity commitments to unconsolidated municipal bond trusts, including those for which the Corporation was transferor, totaled $3.5 billion and $4.0 billion at December 31, 2011 and 2010. The weighted-average remaining life of bonds held in the trusts at December 31, 2011 was 10.0 years. There were no material write-downs or downgrades of assets or issuers during 2011.

Automobile and Other Securitization Trusts

The Corporation transfers automobile and other loans into securitization trusts typically to improve liquidity or manage credit risk. At December 31, 2011, the Corporation serviced assets or otherwise had continuing involvement with automobile and other securitization trusts with outstanding balances of $5.8 billion, including trusts collateralized by automobile loans of $3.9 billion, student loans of $1.2 billion and other loans and receivables of $668 million. At December 31, 2010, the Corporation serviced assets or otherwise had continuing involvement with automobile and other securitization trusts with outstanding balances of $10.5 billion, including trusts collateralized by automobile loans of $8.4 billion, student loans of $1.3 billion and other loans and receivables of $774 million.

Collateralized Debt Obligation Vehicles

CDO vehicles hold diversified pools of fixed-income securities, typically corporate debt or ABS, which they fund by issuing multiple tranches of debt and equity securities. Synthetic CDOs enter into a portfolio of CDS to synthetically create exposure to fixed-income securities. CLOs are a subset of CDOs which hold pools of loans, typically corporate loans or commercial mortgages. CDOs are typically managed by third-party portfolio managers. The Corporation transfers assets to these CDOs, holds securities issued by the CDOs and may be a derivative counterparty to the CDOs, including a CDS counterparty for synthetic CDOs. The Corporation has also entered into total return swaps with certain CDOs whereby the Corporation absorbs the economic returns generated by specified assets held by the CDO. The Corporation receives fees for structuring CDOs and providing liquidity support for super senior tranches of securities issued by certain CDOs. No third parties provide a significant amount of similar commitments to these CDOs.

The table below summarizes select information related to CDO vehicles in which the Corporation held a variable interest at December 31, 2011 and 2010.

The Corporation's maximum loss exposure of $4.0 billion at December 31, 2011 included $336 million of super senior CDO exposure, $1.7 billion of exposure to CDO financing facilities and $2.0 billion of other non-super senior exposure. This exposure is calculated on a gross basis and does not reflect any benefit from insurance purchased from third parties. Net of this insurance but including securities retained from liquidations of CDOs, the Corporation's net exposure to super senior CDO-related positions was $152 million at December 31, 2011. The CDO financing facilities which are consolidated obtain funding from third parties for CDO positions which are principally classified in trading account assets on the Corporation's Consolidated Balance Sheet. The CDO financing facilities long-term debt at December 31, 2011 totaled $2.6 billion, all of which has recourse to the general credit of the Corporation. The Corporation's maximum exposure to loss is significantly less than the total assets of the CDO vehicles in the table above because the Corporation typically has exposure to only a portion of the total assets.

At December 31, 2011, the Corporation had $2.4 billion of aggregate liquidity exposure to CDOs. This amount included $588 million of commitments to CDOs to provide funding for super senior exposures and $1.8 billion notional amount of derivative contracts with unconsolidated VIEs, principally CDO vehicles, which hold non-super senior CDO debt securities or other debt securities on the Corporation's behalf. See Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies for additional information. The Corporation's liquidity exposure to CDOs at December 31, 2011 is included in the table above to the extent that the Corporation sponsored the

CDO vehicle or the liquidity exposure is more than insignificant compared to total assets of the CDO vehicle Liquidity exposure included in the table is reported net of previously recorded losses

Credit-linked and equity-linked note vehicles issue notes which pay a return that is linked to the credit or equity risk of a specified company or debt instrument The vehicles purchase high-grade assets as collateral and enter into CDSs or equity derivatives to synthetically create the credit or equity risk to pay the specified return on the notes The Corporation is typically the counterparty for some or all of the credit and equity derivatives and to a lesser extent it may invest in securities issued by the vehicles The Corporation may also enter into interest rate or foreign currency derivatives with the vehicles The Corporation also had approximately $824 million of other liquidity commitments including written put options and collateral value guarantees with unconsolidated credit-linked and equity-linked note vehicles at December 31 2011

Repackaging vehicles issue notes that are designed to incorporate risk characteristics desired by customers The vehicles hold debt instruments such as corporate bonds convertible bonds or ABS with the desired credit risk profile The Corporation enters into derivatives with the vehicles to change the interest rate or foreign currency profile of the debt instruments If a vehicle holds convertible bonds and the Corporation retains the conversion option the Corporation is deemed to have a controlling financial interest and consolidates the vehicle

Asset acquisition vehicles acquire financial instruments typically loans at the direction of a single customer and obtain funding through the issuance of structured liabilities to the Corporation At the time the vehicle acquires an asset the Corporation enters into total return swaps with the customer such that the economic returns of the asset are passed through to the customer The Corporation is exposed to counterparty credit risk if the asset declines in value and the customer defaults on its obligation to the Corporation under the total return swaps The Corporation's risk may be mitigated by collateral or other arrangements The Corporation consolidates these vehicles because it has the power to manage the assets in the vehicles and owns all of the structured liabilities issued by the vehicles

The Corporation's maximum exposure to loss from customer vehicles includes the notional amount of the credit or equity derivatives to which the Corporation is a counterparty net of losses previously recorded and the Corporation's investment, if any in securities issued by the vehicles It has not been reduced to reflect the benefit of offsetting swaps with the customers or collateral arrangements

Other Variable Interest Entities

Other consolidated VIEs primarily include investment vehicles leveraged lease trusts and at December 31 2010 a collective investment fund and asset acquisition conduits Other unconsolidated VIEs primarily include investment vehicles and real estate vehicles which are typically created on behalf of customers who wish to obtain market or credit exposure to a specific company or financial instrument

Investment Vehicles

The Corporation sponsors invests in or provides financing to a variety of investment vehicles that hold loans real estate debt securities or other financial instruments and are designed to provide the desired investment profile to investors At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation's consolidated investment vehicles had total assets of $2 6 billion and $5 6 billion The Corporation also held investments in unconsolidated vehicles with total assets of $5 5 billion and $7 9 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 The Corporation's maximum exposure to loss associated with both consolidated and unconsolidated investment vehicles totaled $4 4 billion and $8 7 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 comprised primarily of on-balance sheet assets less non-recourse liabilities

Collective Investment Funds

The Corporation is trustee for certain common and collective investment funds that provide investment opportunities for eligible clients of GWIM These funds which had total assets of $11 1 billion and $21 2 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 hold a variety of cash debt and equity investments At December 31 2011 the Corporation did not have a variable interest in these funds The Corporation consolidated a stable value collective investment fund with total assets of $8 1 billion at December 31 2010 for which the Corporation had the unilateral ability to replace the fund's asset manager The fund was liquidated during 2011

Leveraged Lease Trusts

The Corporation's net investment in consolidated leveraged lease trusts totaled $4 8 billion and $5 2 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 The trusts hold long-lived equipment such as rail cars power generation and distribution equipment and commercial aircraft The Corporation structures the trusts and holds a significant residual interest The net investment represents the Corporation's maximum loss exposure to the trusts in the unlikely event that the leveraged lease investments become worthless Debt issued by the leveraged lease trusts is non-recourse to the Corporation The Corporation has no liquidity exposure to these leveraged lease trusts

Asset Acquisition Conduits

The Corporation administered two asset acquisition conduits which acquired assets on behalf of the Corporation or its customers These conduits had total assets of $640 million at December 31 2010 The conduits were liquidated during 2011 Liquidation of the conduits did not impact the Corporation's results of operations

Real Estate Vehicles

The Corporation held investments in unconsolidated real estate vehicles of $5 4 billion at both December 31 2011 and 2010 which consisted of investments in unconsolidated limited partnerships that finance the construction and rehabilitation of affordable rental housing An unrelated third party is typically the general partner and has control over the significant activities of the partnership The Corporation earns a return primarily through the receipt of tax credits allocated to the affordable housing projects The Corporation's risk of loss is mitigated by policies requiring that the project qualify for the expected tax credits prior to making its investment The Corporation may from time to time be asked to invest additional amounts to support a troubled project Such additional investments have not been and are not expected to be significant

Other Asset-backed Financing Arrangements

The Corporation transferred pools of securities to certain independent third parties and provided financing for approximately 75 percent of the purchase price under asset backed financing arrangements At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation s maximum loss exposure under these financing arrangements was $4 7 billion and $6 5 billion substantially all of which was classified as loans on the Corporation s Consolidated Balance Sheet All principal and interest payments have been received when due in accordance with the contractual terms These arrangements are not included in the Other VIEs table because the purchasers are not VIEs

NOTE 9 Representations and Warranties Obligations and Corporate Guarantees

Background

The Corporation securitizes first-lien residential mortgage loans generally in the form of MBS guaranteed by the GSEs or by GNMA in the case of FHA-insured VA guaranteed and Rural Housing Service-guaranteed mortgage loans In addition in prior years legacy companies and certain subsidiaries sold pools of first-lien residential mortgage loans and home equity loans as private-label securitizations (in certain of these securitizations monolines or financial guarantee providers insured all or some of the securities) or in the form of whole loans In connection with these transactions the Corporation or certain subsidiaries or legacy companies make or have made various representations and warranties These representations and warranties as set forth in the agreements related to among other things the ownership of the loan the validity of the lien securing the loan the absence of delinquent taxes or liens against the property securing the loan the process used to select the loan for inclusion in a transaction the loan s compliance with any applicable loan criteria including underwriting standards and the loan s compliance with applicable federal state and local laws Breaches of these representations and warranties may result in the requirement to repurchase mortgage loans or to otherwise make whole or provide other remedies to the GSEs U S Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) with respect to FHA-insured loans VA whole-loan buyers securitization trusts monoline insurers or other financial guarantors (collectively repurchases) In such cases the Corporation would be exposed to any credit loss on the repurchased mortgage loans after accounting for any mortgage insurance (MI) or mortgage guaranty payments that it may receive

Subject to the requirements and limitations of the applicable sales and securitization agreements these representations and warranties can be enforced by the GSEs HUD VA the whole loan buyer the securitization trustee or others as governed by the applicable agreement or in certain first lien and home equity securitizations where monoline insurers or other financial guarantee providers have insured all or some of the securities issued by the monoline insurer or other financial guarantor In the case of loans sold to parties other than the GSEs or GNMA the contractual liability to repurchase typically arises only if there is a breach of the representations and warranties that materially and adversely affects the interest of the investor or investors in the loan or of the monoline insurer or other financial guarantor (as applicable) Contracts with the GSEs do not contain equivalent language while GNMA generally limits repurchases to loans that are not insured or guaranteed as required The Corporation believes that the longer a loan performs prior to default the less likely it is that an alleged underwriting breach of representations and warranties had a material impact on the loan s performance Historically most demands for repurchase have occurred within the first several years after origination generally after a loan has defaulted However the time horizon in which repurchase claims are typically brought has lengthened primarily due to a significant increase in GSE claims related to loans that had defaulted more than 18 months prior to the claim and to loans where the borrower made at least 25 payments

The Corporation s credit loss would be reduced by any recourse it may have to organizations (e g correspondents) that in turn had sold such loans to the Corporation based upon its agreements with these organizations When a loan is originated by a correspondent or other third party the Corporation typically has the right to seek a recovery of related repurchase losses from that originator Many of the correspondent originators of loans in 2004 through 2008 are no longer in business or are in a weakened condition and the Corporation s ability to recover on valid claims is therefore impacted or eliminated accordingly In the event a loan is originated and underwritten by a correspondent who obtains FHA insurance even if they are no longer in business any breach of FHA guidelines is the direct obligation of the correspondent not the Corporation At December 31 2011 approximately 28 percent of the outstanding repurchase claims relate to loans purchased from correspondents or other parties compared to approximately 25 percent at December 31 2010 During 2011 the Corporation experienced a decline in recoveries from correspondents and other parties however the actual recovery rate may vary from period to period based upon the underlying mix of correspondents and other parties

The Corporation currently structures its operations to limit the risk of repurchase and accompanying credit exposure by seeking to ensure consistent production of mortgages in accordance with its underwriting procedures and by servicing those mortgages consistent with its contractual obligations In addition certain securitizations include guarantees written to protect certain purchasers of the loans from credit losses up to a specified amount The fair value of the obligations to be absorbed under the representations and warranties and guarantees provided is recorded as an accrued liability when the loans are sold This liability for probable losses is updated by accruing a representations and warranties provision in mortgage banking income This is done throughout the life of the loan as necessary when additional relevant information becomes available

The methodology used to estimate the liability for representations and warranties is a function of the representations and warranties given and considers a variety of factors which include depending on the counterparty actual defaults estimated future defaults historical loss experience estimated home prices other economic conditions estimated probability that a repurchase claim will be received including consideration of whether presentation thresholds will be met number of payments made by the borrower prior to default and estimated probability that a loan will be required to be repurchased The Corporation also considers bulk settlements when determining its estimated liability for representations and warranties The estimate of the liability for representations and warranties is based upon currently available information significant judgment and a number of factors including those set forth above that are subject to change Changes to any one of these factors could significantly impact the estimate of the liability and could have a material adverse impact on the Corporation s results of operations for any particular period Given that these factors vary by counterparty the Corporation analyzes representations and warranties obligations based on the specific counterparty or type of counterparty with whom the sale was made Generally the volume of unresolved repurchase claims from the FHA and VA for loans in GNMA-guaranteed securities is not significant because the requests are limited in number and are typically resolved quickly

Settlement Actions

The Corporation has vigorously contested any request for repurchase when it has concluded that a valid basis for repurchase does not exist and will continue to do so in the future However in an effort to resolve these legacy mortgage-related issues the Corporation has reached bulk settlements or agreements for bulk settlements including settlement amounts which have been material with counterparties in lieu of a loan-by-loan review process The Corporation may reach other settlements in the future if opportunities arise on terms it believes to be advantageous to the Corporation The following provides a summary of the larger bulk settlement actions beginning in the fourth quarter of 2010 followed by details of the Corporation s representations and warranties liability including claims status

Settlement with the Bank of New York Mellon, as Trustee

On June 28 2011 the Corporation BAC Home Loans Servicing LP (BAC HLS which was subsequently merged with and into BANA in July 2011) and its legacy Countrywide affiliates entered into a settlement agreement with the Bank of New York Mellon (BNY Mellon) as trustee (the Trustee) to resolve all outstanding and potential claims related to alleged representations and warranties breaches (including repurchase claims) substantially all historical loan servicing claims and certain other historical claims with respect to 525 legacy Countrywide first-lien and five second-lien non-GSE residential mortgage-backed securitization trusts (the Covered Trusts) containing loans principally originated between 2004 and 2008 for which BNY Mellon acts as trustee or indenture trustee (the BNY Mellon Settlement) The Covered Trusts had an original principal balance of approximately $424 billion of which $409 billion was originated between 2004 and 2008 and total outstanding principal and unpaid principal balance of loans that had defaulted (collectively unpaid principal balance) of approximately $220 billion at June 28 2011 of which $217 billion was originated between 2004 and 2008 The BNY Mellon Settlement is supported by a group of 22 institutional investors (the Investor Group) and is subject to final court approval and certain other conditions

The BNY Mellon Settlement provides for a cash payment of $8 5 billion (the Settlement Payment) to the Trustee for distribution to the Covered Trusts after final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement In addition to the Settlement Payment the Corporation is obligated to pay attorneys fees and costs to the Investor Group s counsel as well as all fees and expenses incurred by the Trustee related to obtaining final court approval of the BNY Mellon Settlement and certain tax rulings which are currently estimated at $100 million

The BNY Mellon Settlement does not cover a small number of legacy Countrywide-issued first-lien non-GSE RMBS transactions with loans originated principally between 2004 and 2008 for various reasons including for example six legacy Countrywide-issued first-lien non-GSE RMBS transactions in which BNY Mellon is not the trustee The BNY Mellon Settlement also does not cover legacy Countrywide-issued second-lien securitization transactions in which a monoline insurer or other financial guarantor provides financial guaranty insurance In addition because the settlement is with the Trustee on behalf of the Covered Trusts and releases rights under the governing agreements for the Covered Trusts the settlement does not release investors securities law or fraud claims based upon disclosures made in connection with their decision to purchase sell or hold securities issued by the Covered Trusts To date various investors including certain members of the Investor Group are pursuing securities law or fraud claims related to one or more of the Covered Trusts The Corporation is not able to determine whether any additional securities law or fraud claims will be made by investors in the Covered Trusts For information about mortgage-related securities law or fraud claims see Litigation and Regulatory Matters in Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies For those Covered Trusts where a monoline insurer or other financial guarantor has an independent right to assert repurchase claims directly the BNY Mellon Settlement does not release such insurer s or guarantor s repurchase claims

Under an order entered by the court in connection with the BNY Mellon Settlement, potentially interested persons had the opportunity to give notice of intent to object to the settlement (including on the basis that more information was needed) until August 30 2011 Approximately 44 groups or entities appeared prior to the deadline two of those groups or entities have subsequently withdrawn from the proceeding and one motion to intervene was denied Certain of these groups or entities filed notices of intent to object made motions to intervene or both filed notices of intent to object and made motions to intervene The parties filing motions to intervene include the Attorneys General of the states of New York and Delaware whose motions to intervene were granted Parties who filed notices stating that they wished to obtain more information about the settlement include the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) Bank of America is not a party to the proceeding

Certain of the motions to intervene and/or notices of intent to object allege various purported bases for opposition to the settlement including challenges to the nature of the court proceeding and the lack of an opt-out mechanism alleged conflicts of interest on the part of the Investor Group and/or the Trustee the inadequacy of the settlement amount and the method of allocating the settlement amount among the Covered Trusts while other motions do not make substantive objections but state that they need more information about the settlement An investor opposed to the settlement removed the proceeding to federal court On October 19 2011 the federal court denied BNY Mellon s motion to remand the proceeding to state court BNY Mellon as well as the investors that have intervened in support of the BNY Mellon Settlement, petitioned to appeal the denial of this motion On November 4 2011 the district court entered a written order setting a discovery schedule and discovery is ongoing On December 27 2011 the U S Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit accepted the appeal and stated in an amended scheduling order that, pursuant to statute it would rule on the appeal by February 27 2012

It is not currently possible to predict how many of the parties who have appeared in the court proceeding will ultimately object to the BNY Mellon Settlement whether the objections will prevent receipt of final court approval or the ultimate outcome of the court

approval process which can include appeals and could take a substantial period of time In particular conduct of discovery and the resolution of the objections to the settlement and any appeals could take a substantial period of time and these factors could materially delay the timing of final court approval Accordingly it is not possible to predict when the court approval process will be completed

If final court approval is not obtained by December 31 2015 the Corporation and legacy Countrywide may withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement if the Trustee consents The BNY Mellon Settlement also provides that if Covered Trusts representing unpaid principal balance exceeding a specified amount are excluded from the final BNY Mellon Settlement based on investor objections or otherwise the Corporation and legacy Countrywide have the option to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement pursuant to the terms of the BNY Mellon Settlement agreement

There can be no assurance that final court approval of the settlement will be obtained that all conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement will be satisfied or if certain conditions to the BNY Mellon Settlement permitting withdrawal are met that the Corporation and legacy Countrywide will not determine to withdraw from the settlement If final court approval is not obtained or if the Corporation and legacy Countrywide determine to withdraw from the BNY Mellon Settlement in accordance with its terms the Corporation s future representations and warranties losses could be substantially different than existing accruals and the estimated range of possible loss over existing accruals described under Whole Loan Sales and Private-label Securitizations Experience on page 212

Settlement with Assured Guaranty

On April 14 2011 the Corporation including its legacy Countrywide affiliates entered into an agreement with Assured Guaranty to resolve all of the monoline insurer s outstanding and potential repurchase claims related to alleged representations and warranties breaches involving 29 first and second lien RMBS trusts where Assured Guaranty provided financial guarantee insurance (the Assured Guaranty Settlement) The agreement also resolves historical loan servicing issues and other potential liabilities with respect to these trusts The agreement covers 21 first-lien RMBS trusts and eight second-lien RMBS trusts which had an original principal balance of approximately $35 8 billion and total unpaid principal balance of approximately $20 2 billion as of April 14 2011 The agreement included cash payments totaling approximately $1 1 billion to Assured Guaranty as well as a loss-sharing reinsurance arrangement that had an expected value of approximately $470 million at the time of the settlement and other terms including termination of certain derivative contracts During 2011 the Corporation made cash payments of $1 0 billion with the remaining $57 million payable on March 31 2012 The total cost recognized for the Assured Guaranty Settlement as of December 31 2011 was approximately $1 6 billion As a result of this agreement the Corporation recorded $2 2 billion in consumer loans and the related trust debt on its Consolidated Balance Sheet at December 31 2011 due to the establishment of reinsurance contracts at the time of the Assured Guaranty Settlement

Government-sponsored Enterprise Agreements

On December 31 2010 the Corporation reached agreements with the GSEs under which the Corporation paid $2 8 billion to resolve repurchase claims involving first-lien residential mortgage loans sold directly to the GSEs by entities related to legacy Countrywide (the GSE Agreements) The agreement with FHLMC extinguished all outstanding and potential mortgage repurchase and make-whole claims arising out of any alleged breaches of selling representations and warranties related to loans sold directly by legacy Countrywide to FHLMC through 2008 subject to certain exceptions The agreement with FNMA substantially resolved the existing pipeline of repurchase claims outstanding as of September 20 2010 arising out of alleged breaches of selling representations and warranties related to loans sold directly by legacy Countrywide to FNMA The GSE Agreements did not cover outstanding and potential mortgage repurchase claims arising out of any alleged breaches of selling representations and warranties related to legacy Bank of America first-lien residential mortgage loans sold directly to the GSEs or other loans sold directly to the GSEs other than described above loan servicing obligations other contractual obligations or loans contained in private label securitizations

Outstanding Claims

The Outstanding Claims by Counterparty and Product table presents outstanding representations and warranties claims by counterparty and product type at December 31 2011 and 2010 For additional information see Whole Loan Sales and Private-label Securitizations Experience on page 212 of this Note and Note 14 – Commitments and Contingencies These repurchase claims include $1 7 billion in demands from investors in the Covered Trusts received in 2010 but otherwise do not include any repurchase claims related to the Covered Trusts During 2011 the Corporation received $17 5 billion in new repurchase claims including $14 3 billion in new repurchase claims submitted by the GSEs for both legacy Countrywide originations not covered by the GSE Agreements and legacy Bank of America originations and $3 2 billion in repurchase claims related to non-GSE transactions During 2011 $14 1 billion in claims were resolved primarily with the GSEs and through the Assured Guaranty Settlement Of the claims resolved $7 5 billion were resolved through rescissions and $6 6 billion were resolved through mortgage repurchase and make-whole payments Claims outstanding from the monolines declined as a result of the Assured Guaranty Settlement and new claims from other monolines declined significantly during 2011 which the Corporation believes was due in part to the monolines focusing recent efforts towards litigation Outstanding claims from whole loan private-label securitization and other investors increased during 2011 primarily as a result of the increase in repurchase claims received from trustees in non-GSE transactions

Included in the above table are certain structured notes that contain provisions whereby the borrowings are redeemable at the option of the holder (put options) at specified dates prior to maturity Other structured notes have coupon or repayment terms linked to the performance of debt or equity securities indices currencies or commodities and the maturity may be accelerated based on the value of a referenced index or security In both cases the Corporation or a subsidiary may be required to settle the obligation for cash or other securities prior to the contractual maturity date These borrowings are reflected in the above table as maturing at their earliest put or redemption date

Trust Preferred and Hybrid Securities

Trust preferred securities (Trust Securities) are primarily issued by trust companies (the Trusts) that are not consolidated These Trust Securities are mandatorily redeemable preferred security obligations of the Trusts The sole assets of the Trusts generally are junior subordinated deferrable interest notes of the Corporation or its subsidiaries (the Notes) The Trusts generally are 100 percent-owned finance subsidiaries of the Corporation Obligations associated with the Notes are included in the long-term debt table on page 216

Certain of the Trust Securities were issued at a discount and may be redeemed prior to maturity at the option of the Corporation The Trusts generally have invested the proceeds of such Trust Securities in the Notes Each issue of the Notes has an interest rate equal to the corresponding Trust Securities distribution rate

The Corporation has the right to defer payment of interest on the Notes at any time or from time to time for a period not exceeding five years provided that no extension period may extend beyond the stated maturity of the relevant Notes During any such extension period distributions on the Trust Securities will also be deferred and the Corporation s ability to pay dividends on its common and preferred stock will be restricted

The Trust Securities generally are subject to mandatory redemption upon repayment of the related Notes at their stated maturity dates or their earlier redemption at a redemption price equal to their liquidation amount plus accrued distributions to the date fixed for redemption and the premium if any paid by the Corporation upon concurrent repayment of the related Notes

Periodic cash payments and payments upon liquidation or redemption with respect to Trust Securities are guaranteed by the Corporation or its subsidiaries to the extent of funds held by the Trusts (the Preferred Securities Guarantee) The Preferred Securities Guarantee when taken together with the Corporation s other obligations including its obligations under the Notes generally will constitute a full and unconditional guarantee on a subordinated basis by the Corporation of payments due on the Trust Securities

Hybrid Income Term Securities (HITS) totaling $1 6 billion were issued by the Trusts to institutional investors during 2007 The BAC Capital Trust XIII Floating-Rate Preferred HITS had a distribution rate of three month LIBOR plus 40 bps and the BAC Capital Trust XIV Fixed-to-Floating Rate Preferred HITS had an initial distribution rate of 5 63 percent Both series of HITS represent beneficial interests in the assets of the respective capital trust which consist of a series of the Corporation s junior subordinated notes and a stock purchase contract for a specified series of the Corporation s preferred stock The Corporation will remarket the junior subordinated notes underlying each series of HITS on or about the five-year anniversary of the issuance to obtain sufficient funds for the capital trusts to buy the Corporation s preferred stock under the stock purchase contracts Following the successful remarketing of the notes and the subsequent purchase of the Corporation s preferred stock under the stock purchase contracts the preferred stock will constitute the sole asset of the applicable trust

In connection with the HITS the Corporation entered into two replacement capital covenants for the benefit of investors in certain series of the Corporation s long-term indebtedness (Covered Debt) As of December 31 2011 the Corporation s 6 625% Junior Subordinated Notes due 2036 constitute the Covered Debt under the covenant corresponding to the Floating-Rate Preferred HITS and the Corporation s 5 625% Junior Subordinated Notes due 2035 constitute the Covered Debt under the covenant corresponding to the Fixed-to-Floating Rate Preferred HITS These covenants generally restrict the ability of the Corporation and its subsidiaries to redeem or purchase the HITS and related securities unless the Corporation has obtained the prior approval of the Federal Reserve if required under the Federal Reserve s capital guidelines the redemption or purchase price of the HITS does not exceed the amount received by the Corporation from the sale of certain qualifying securities and such replacement securities qualify as Tier 1 capital and are not "restricted core capital elements" under the Federal Reserve s guidelines

In 2011 as part of the exchange agreements described in Note 15 – Shareholders Equity the Corporation issued 282 million shares of common stock valued at $1 6 billion and senior notes valued at $1 5 billion in exchange for $3 8 billion aggregate liquidation amount of previously issued Trust Securities Upon the exchange the Corporation immediately surrendered the Trust Securities to the unconsolidated Trusts for cancellation resulting in the cancellation of an equal amount of junior subordinated notes that had a carrying value of $4 3 billion resulting in a gain on extinguishment of debt of $1 2 billion In addition the Corporation issued 26 million shares of common stock valued at $138 million and senior notes valued at $505 million in exchange for $917 million aggregate liquidation amount of HITS Upon the exchange the Corporation immediately surrendered the HITS to the unconsolidated Trusts for cancellation resulting in the cancellation of an equal amount of junior subordinated notes that had a carrying value of $915 million and the cancellation of a corresponding amount of the underlying stock purchase contract resulting in a $12 million loss on extinguishment of debt and an increase to additional paid-in capital of $284 million For additional information regarding these exchanges see Note 15 – Shareholders Equity

NOTE 14 Commitments and Contingencies

In the normal course of business the Corporation enters into a number of off-balance sheet commitments These commitments expose the Corporation to varying degrees of credit and market risk and are subject to the same credit and market risk limitation reviews as those instruments recorded on the Corporation s Consolidated Balance Sheet

Credit Extension Commitments

The Corporation enters into commitments to extend credit such as loan commitments SBLC and commercial letters of credit to meet the financing needs of its customers The table below includes the notional amount of unfunded legally binding lending commitments net of amounts distributed (e g syndicated) to other financial institutions of $27 1 billion and $23 3 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 At December 31 2011 the carrying amount of these commitments excluding commitments accounted for under the fair value option was $741 million including deferred revenue of $27 million and a reserve for unfunded lending commitments of $714 million At December 31 2010 the comparable amounts were $1 2 billion $29 million and $1 2 billion respectively The carrying amount of these commitments is classified in accrued expenses and other liabilities on the Consolidated Balance Sheet

The table below also includes the notional amount of commitments of $25 7 billion and $27 3 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 that are accounted for under the fair value option However the table below excludes fair value adjustments of $1 2 billion and $866 million on these commitments which are classified in accrued expenses and other liabilities For information regarding the Corporation s loan commitments accounted for under the fair value option see Note 23 – Fair Value Option

(3) Amount includes $949 million of consumer letters of credit and $3 8 billion of commercial letters of credit at December 31 2010

Legally binding commitments to extend credit generally have specified rates and maturities Certain of these commitments have adverse change clauses that help to protect the Corporation against deterioration in the borrower s ability to pay

Other Commitments

Global Principal Investments and Other Equity Investments

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had unfunded equity investment commitments of $772 million and $1 5 billion In light of proposed Basel regulatory capital changes related to unfunded commitments over the past two years the Corporation has actively reduced these commitments in a series of sale transactions involving its private equity fund investments

Other Commitments

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had commitments to purchase loans (e g residential mortgage and commercial real estate) of $2 5 billion and $2 6 billion which upon settlement will be included in loans or LHFS

At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had commitments to enter into forward-dated resale and securities borrowing agreements of $67 0 billion and $39 4 billion In addition the Corporation had commitments to enter into forward-dated repurchase and securities lending agreements of $42 0 billion and $33 5 billion All of these commitments expire within the next 12 months

The Corporation is a party to operating leases for certain of its premises and equipment Commitments under these leases are approximately $3 0 billion $2 6 billion $2 0 billion $1 6 billion and $1 3 billion for 2012 through 2016 respectively and $6 1 billion in the aggregate for all years thereafter

The Corporation has entered into agreements with providers of market data communications systems consulting and other office-related services At December 31 2011 and 2010 the minimum fee commitments over the remaining terms of these agreements totaled $1 9 billion and $2 1 billion

Other Guarantees

Bank-owned Life Insurance Book Value Protection

The Corporation sells products that offer book value protection to insurance carriers who offer group life insurance policies to corporations primarily banks The book value protection is provided on portfolios of intermediate investment-grade fixed-income securities and is intended to cover any shortfall in the event that policyholders surrender their policies and market value is below book value To manage its exposure the Corporation imposes significant restrictions on surrenders and the manner in which the portfolio is liquidated and the funds are accessed In addition investment parameters of the underlying portfolio are restricted These constraints combined with structural protections including a cap on the amount of risk assumed on each policy are designed to provide adequate buffers and guard against payments even under extreme stress scenarios These guarantees are recorded as derivatives and carried at fair value in the trading portfolio At both December 31 2011 and 2010 the notional amount of these guarantees totaled $15 8 billion and the Corporation s maximum exposure related to these guarantees totaled $5 1 billion and $5 0 billion with estimated maturity dates between 2030 and 2040 As of December 31 2011 the Corporation had not made a payment under these products The possibility of surrender or other payment associated with these guarantees exists The net fair value of the liability associated with these guarantees was $48 million and $78 million at December 31 2011 and 2010 and reflects the probability of surrender as well as the multiple structural protection features in the contracts

Employee Retirement Protection

The Corporation sells products that offer book value protection primarily to plan sponsors of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) governed pension plans such as 401(k) plans and 457 plans The book value protection is provided on portfolios of intermediate/short-term investment-grade fixed-income securities and is intended to cover any shortfall in the event that plan participants continue to withdraw funds after all securities have been liquidated and there is remaining book value The Corporation retains the option to exit the contract at any time If the Corporation exercises its option the purchaser can require the Corporation to purchase high-quality fixed-income securities typically government or government backed agency securities with the proceeds of the liquidated assets to assure the return of principal To manage its exposure the Corporation imposes significant restrictions and constraints on the timing of the withdrawals the manner in which the portfolio is liquidated and the funds are accessed and the investment parameters of the underlying portfolio These constraints combined with structural protections are designed to provide adequate buffers and guard against payments even under extreme stress scenarios These guarantees are recorded as derivatives and carried at fair value in the trading portfolio At December 31 2011 and 2010 the notional amount of these guarantees totaled $28 8 billion and $33 8 billion with estimated maturity dates up to 2015 if the exit option is exercised on all deals As of December 31 2011 the Corporation had not made a payment under these products

Indemnifications

In the ordinary course of business the Corporation enters into various agreements that contain indemnifications such as tax indemnifications whereupon payment may become due if certain external events occur such as a change in tax law The indemnification clauses are often standard contractual terms and were entered into in the normal course of business based on an assessment that the risk of loss would be remote These agreements typically contain an early termination clause that permits the Corporation to exit the agreement upon these events The maximum potential future payment under indemnification agreements is difficult to assess for several reasons including the occurrence of an external event the inability to predict future changes in tax and other laws the difficulty in determining how such laws would apply to parties in contracts the absence of exposure limits contained in standard contract language and the timing of the early termination clause Historically any payments made under these guarantees have been de minimis The Corporation has assessed the probability of making such payments in the future as remote

Merchant Services

During 2009 the Corporation contributed its merchant services business to a joint venture in exchange for a 46 5 percent ownership interest in the joint venture In 2010 the joint venture purchased the interest held by one of the three initial investors bringing the Corporation s ownership interest up to 49 percent For additional information on the joint venture agreement see Note 5 – Securities

In accordance with credit and debit card association rules the Corporation sponsors merchant processing servicers that process credit and debit card transactions on behalf of various merchants In connection with these services a liability may arise in the event of a billing dispute between the merchant and a cardholder that is ultimately resolved in the cardholder s favor If the merchant defaults on its obligation to reimburse the cardholder the cardholder through its issuing bank generally has until six months after the date of the transaction to present a chargeback to the merchant processor which is primarily liable for any losses on covered transactions However if the merchant processor fails to meet its obligation to reimburse the cardholder for disputed transactions then the Corporation as the sponsor could be held liable for the disputed amount In 2011 and 2010 the sponsored entities processed and settled $460 4 billion and $339 4 billion of transactions and recorded losses of $11 million and $17 million At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation held as collateral $238 million and $25 million of merchant escrow deposits which may be used to offset amounts due from the individual merchants

The Corporation believes that the maximum potential exposure is not representative of the actual potential loss exposure The Corporation believes the maximum potential exposure for chargebacks would not exceed the total amount of merchant transactions processed through Visa MasterCard and Discover for the last six months which represents the claim period for the cardholder plus any outstanding delayed-delivery transactions As of December 31 2011 and 2010 the maximum potential exposure for sponsored transactions totaled approximately $236 0 billion and $139 5 billion The Corporation does not expect to make material payments in connection with these guarantees

Other Derivative Contracts

The Corporation funds selected assets including securities issued by CDOs and CLOs through derivative contracts typically total return swaps with third parties and VIEs that are not consolidated on the Corporation s Consolidated Balance Sheet At December 31 2011 and 2010 the total notional amount of these derivative contracts was approximately $3 2 billion and $4 3 billion with commercial banks and $1 8 billion and $1 7 billion with VIEs The underlying securities are senior securities and substantially all of the Corporation s exposures are insured Accordingly the Corporation s exposure to loss consists principally of counterparty risk to the insurers In certain circumstances generally as a result of ratings downgrades the Corporation may be required to purchase the underlying assets which would not result in additional gain or loss to the Corporation as such exposure is already reflected in the fair value of the derivative contracts

Other Guarantees

The Corporation sells products that guarantee the return of principal to investors at a preset future date These guarantees cover a broad range of underlying asset classes and are designed to cover the shortfall between the market value of the underlying portfolio and the principal amount on the preset future date To manage its exposure the Corporation requires that these guarantees be backed by structural and investment constraints and certain pre-defined triggers that would require the underlying assets or portfolio to be liquidated and invested in zero-coupon bonds that mature at the preset future date The Corporation is required to fund any shortfall between the proceeds of the liquidated assets and the purchase price of the zero-coupon bonds at the preset future date These guarantees are recorded as derivatives and carried at fair value in the trading portfolio At December 31 2011 and 2010 the notional amount of these guarantees totaled $300 million and $666 million These guarantees have various maturities ranging from two to five years As of December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had not made a payment under these products and has assessed the probability of payments under these guarantees as remote

The Corporation has entered into additional guarantee agreements and commitments including lease-end obligation agreements partial credit guarantees on certain leases real estate joint venture guarantees sold risk participation swaps divested business commitments and sold put options that require gross settlement The maximum potential future payment under these agreements was approximately $3 7 billion and $3 4 billion at December 31 2011 and 2010 The estimated maturity dates of these obligations extend up to 2033 The Corporation has made no material payments under these guarantees

In the normal course of business the Corporation periodically guarantees the obligations of its affiliates in a variety of transactions including ISDA-related transactions and non ISDA-related transactions such as commodities trading repurchase agreements prime brokerage agreements and other transactions

Payment Protection Insurance Claims Matter

In the U K the Corporation sells payment protection insurance (PPI) through its international card services business to credit card customers and has previously sold this insurance to consumer loan customers PPI covers a consumer s loan for debt repayment if certain events occur such as loss of job or illness In response to an elevated level of customer complaints of misleading sales tactics across the industry heightened media coverage and pressure from consumer advocacy groups the U K Financial Services Authority (FSA) investigated and raised concerns about the way some companies have handled complaints relating to the sale of these insurance policies In August 2010 the FSA issued a policy statement (the FSA Policy Statement) on the assessment and remediation of PPI claims that is applicable to the Corporation s U K consumer businesses and is intended to address concerns among consumers and regulators regarding the handling of PPI complaints across the industry The FSA Policy Statement sets standards for the sale of PPI that apply to current and prior sales and in the event a company does not or did not comply with the standards it is alleged that the insurance was incorrectly sold giving the customer rights to remedies The FSA Policy Statement also requires companies to review their sales practices and to proactively remediate non-complaining customers if evidence of a systematic breach of the newly articulated sales standards is discovered which could include refunding premiums paid

In October 2010 the British Bankers' Association (BBA) on behalf of its members including the Corporation challenged the provisions of the FSA Policy Statement and its retroactive application to sales of PPI to U K consumers through a judicial review process against the FSA and the U K Financial Ombudsman Service On April 20 2011 the U K court issued a judgment upholding the FSA Policy Statement as promulgated and dismissing the BBA s challenge The BBA did not appeal the decision Following the conclusion of the judicial review and the subsequent completion of the detailed root cause analysis as required by the FSA Policy Statement the Corporation reassessed its reserve for PPI claims during 2010 The total accrued liability was $476 million and $700 million at December 31 2011 and 2010

Litigation and Regulatory Matters

In the ordinary course of business the Corporation and its subsidiaries are routinely defendants in or parties to many pending and threatened legal actions and proceedings including actions brought on behalf of various classes of claimants These actions and proceedings are generally based on alleged violations of consumer protection securities environmental banking employment contract and other laws In some of these actions and proceedings claims for substantial monetary damages are asserted against the Corporation and its subsidiaries

In the ordinary course of business the Corporation and its subsidiaries are also subject to regulatory examinations information gathering requests inquiries and investigations Certain subsidiaries of the Corporation are registered broker/dealers or investment advisors and are subject to regulation by the SEC the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority the New York Stock Exchange the FSA and other domestic international and state securities regulators In connection with formal and informal inquiries by those agencies such subsidiaries receive numerous requests subpoenas and orders for documents testimony and information in connection with various aspects of their regulated activities

In view of the inherent difficulty of predicting the outcome of such litigation and regulatory matters particularly where the claimants seek very large or indeterminate damages or where the matters present novel legal theories or involve a large number of parties the Corporation generally cannot predict what the eventual outcome of the pending matters will be what the timing of the ultimate resolution of these matters will be or what the eventual loss fines or penalties related to each pending matter may be

In accordance with applicable accounting guidance the Corporation establishes an accrued liability for litigation and regulatory matters when those matters present loss contingencies that are both probable and estimable In such cases there may be an exposure to loss in excess of any amounts accrued When a loss contingency is not both probable and estimable the Corporation does not establish an accrued liability As a litigation or regulatory matter develops the Corporation in conjunction with any outside counsel handling the matter evaluates on an ongoing basis whether such matter presents a loss contingency that is probable and estimable If at the time of evaluation the loss contingency related to a litigation or regulatory matter is not both probable and estimable the matter will continue to be monitored for further developments that would make such loss contingency both probable and estimable Once the loss contingency related to a litigation or regulatory matter is deemed to be both probable and estimable the Corporation will establish an accrued liability with respect to such loss contingency and record a corresponding amount of litigation-related expense The Corporation continues to monitor the matter for further developments that could affect the amount of the accrued liability that has been previously established Excluding expenses of internal or external legal service providers litigation-related expense of $5 6 billion was recognized for 2011 compared to $2 6 billion for 2010

For a limited number of the matters disclosed in this Note for which a loss is probable or reasonably possible in future periods whether in excess of a related accrued liability or where there is no accrued liability the Corporation is able to estimate a range of possible loss In determining whether it is possible to provide an estimate of loss or range of possible loss the Corporation reviews and evaluates its material litigation and regulatory matters on an ongoing basis in conjunction with any outside counsel handling the matter in light of potentially relevant factual and legal developments These may include information learned through the discovery process rulings on dispositive motions settlement discussions and other rulings by courts arbitrators or others In cases in which the Corporation possesses sufficient appropriate information to develop an estimate of loss or range of possible loss that estimate is aggregated and disclosed below There may be other disclosed matters for which a loss is probable or reasonably possible but such an estimate may not be possible For those matters where an estimate is possible management currently estimates the aggregate range of possible loss is $0 to $3 6 billion in excess of the accrued liability (if any) related to those matters This estimated range of possible loss is based upon currently available information and is subject to significant judgment and a variety of assumptions and known and unknown uncertainties The matters underlying the estimated range will change from time to time and actual results may vary significantly from the current estimate Those matters for which an estimate is not possible are not included within this estimated range Therefore this estimated range of possible loss represents what the Corporation believes to be an estimate of possible loss only for certain matters meeting these criteria It does not represent the Corporation s maximum loss exposure Information is provided below regarding the nature of all of these contingencies and where specified the amount of the claim associated with these loss contingencies Based on current knowledge management does not believe that loss contingencies arising from pending matters including the matters described herein will have a material adverse effect on the consolidated financial position or liquidity of the Corporation However in light of the inherent uncertainties involved in these matters some of which are beyond the Corporation s control and the very large or indeterminate damages sought in some of these matters an adverse outcome in one or more of these matters could be material to the Corporation s results of operations or cash flows for any particular reporting period

Auction Rate Securities Litigation

Since October 2007 the Corporation Merrill Lynch and certain affiliates have been named as defendants in a variety of lawsuits and other proceedings brought by customers and both individual and institutional investors regarding auction rate securities (ARS) These actions generally allege that defendants (i) misled plaintiffs into believing that there was a deeply liquid market for ARS and (ii) failed to adequately disclose their or their affiliates practice of placing their own bids to support ARS auctions Plaintiffs assert that ARS auctions started failing from August 2007 through February 2008 when defendants and other broker/dealers stopped placing those "support bids " In addition to the matters described in more detail below numerous arbitrations and individual lawsuits have been filed against the Corporation Merrill Lynch and certain affiliates by parties who purchased ARS and are seeking relief that includes compensatory and punitive damages totaling in excess of $1 2 billion as well as rescission among other relief

Securities Actions

The Corporation and Merrill Lynch face a number of civil actions relating to the sales of ARS and management of ARS auctions including two putative class action lawsuits in which plaintiffs seek to recover the alleged losses in market value of ARS securities purportedly caused by defendants actions Plaintiffs also seek unspecified damages including rescission other compensatory and consequential damages costs fees and interest The first action In Re Merrill Lynch Auction Rate Securities Litigation is the result of the consolidation of two class action suits in the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York These suits were brought by two Merrill Lynch customers on behalf of all persons who purchased ARS in auctions managed by Merrill Lynch against Merrill Lynch and Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith Incorporated (MLPF&S) On March 31 2010 the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York granted Merrill Lynch s motion to dismiss Plaintiffs appealed and on November 14 2011 the U S Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed the district court s dismissal Plaintiffs time to seek a writ of certiorari to the U S Supreme Court expired on February 13 2012 and as a result

this action is now concluded The second action Bondar v Bank of America Corporation was brought by a putative class of ARS purchasers against the Corporation and Banc of America Securities LLC (BAS) On February 24 2011 the U S District Court for the Northern District of California dismissed the amended complaint and directed plaintiffs to state whether they will file a further amended complaint or appeal the court s dismissal Following the Second Circuit s decision in In Re Merrill Lynch Auction Rate Securities Litigation plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed their action on January 4 2012 The dismissal is subject to the district court s approval

Antitrust Actions

The Corporation Merrill Lynch and other financial institutions were also named in two putative antitrust class actions in the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York Plaintiffs in both actions assert federal antitrust claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act based on allegations that defendants conspired to restrain trade in ARS by placing support bids in ARS auctions only to collectively withdraw those bids in February 2008 which allegedly caused ARS auctions to fail In the first action Mayor and City Council of Baltimore Maryland v Citigroup Inc , et al plaintiff seeks to represent a class of issuers of ARS that defendants underwrote between May 12 2003 and February 13 2008 This issuer action seeks to recover among other relief the alleged above-market interest payments that ARS issuers allegedly have had to make after defendants allegedly stopped placing "support bids" in ARS auctions In the second action Mayfield et al v Citigroup Inc , et al plaintiff seeks to represent a class of investors that purchased ARS from defendants and held those securities when ARS auctions failed on February 13 2008 Plaintiff seeks to recover among other relief unspecified damages for losses in the ARS market value and rescission of the investors ARS purchases Both actions also seek treble damages and attorneys fees under the Sherman Act s private civil remedy On January 25 2010 the court dismissed both actions with prejudice and plaintiffs respective appeals are currently pending in the U S Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

Checking Account Overdraft Litigation

Bank of America N A (BANA) is currently a defendant in several consumer suits challenging certain deposit account related business practices Four suits are part of a multi-district litigation proceeding (the MDL) involving approximately 65 individual cases against 30 financial institutions assigned by the Judicial Panel on Multi-district Litigation (JPML) to the U S District Court for the Southern District of Florida The four cases Tornes v Bank of America N A Yourke et al v Bank of America N A et al Knighten v Bank of America, N A and Phillips, et al v Bank of America N A allege that BANA improperly and unfairly increased the number of overdraft fees it assessed on consumer deposit accounts by various means The cases challenge the practice of reordering debit card transactions to post high-to-low and BANA s failure to notify customers at the point of sale that the transaction may result in an overdraft charge The cases also allege that BANA s disclosures and advertising regarding the posting of debit card transactions are false deceptive and misleading These cases assert claims including breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing conversion unjust enrichment and violation of the unfair and deceptive practices statutes of various states Plaintiffs generally seek restitution of all overdraft fees paid to BANA as a result of BANA s allegedly wrongful business practices as well as disgorgement punitive damages injunctive relief pre-judgment interest and attorneys fees Omnibus motions to dismiss many of the complaints involved in the MDL including Tornes Yourke and Knighten were denied on March 12 2010

Knighten was dismissed without prejudice on February 4 2011 On November 22 2011 the MDL court granted final approval of a settlement of all the remaining class matters in the MDL (including Tornes Yourke and Phillips) providing for a payment by the Corporation of $410 million (which amount was fully accrued by the Corporation as of December 31 2011) in exchange for a complete release of claims asserted against the Corporation in the MDL Several MDL settlement class members have appealed to the U S Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit from the judgment granting final approval to the settlement

Countrywide Bond Insurance Litigation

The Corporation Countrywide Financial Corporation (CFC) and other Countrywide entities are subject to claims from several monoline bond insurance companies These claims generally relate to bond insurance policies provided by the insurers on securitized pools of home equity lines of credit (HELOC) and fixed-rate second lien mortgage loans Plaintiffs in these cases generally allege that they have paid claims as a result of defaults in the underlying loans and assert that these defaults are the result of improper underwriting by defendants

Ambac

The Corporation CFC and other Countrywide entities are named as defendants in an action filed by Ambac Assurance Corporation (Ambac) entitled Ambac Assurance Corporation and The Segregated Account of Ambac Assurance Corporation v Countrywide Home Loans Inc et al This action currently pending in New York Supreme Court New York County relates to bond insurance policies provided by Ambac on certain securitized pools of HELOC and fixed-rate second lien mortgage loans On September 8 2011 plaintiffs filed an amended complaint which asserts claims involving five additional securitizations of first- and second-lien mortgage loans and alleges fraudulent inducement breach of contract as well as other claims set forth in the initial complaint The amended complaint also reasserts a claim that the Corporation is jointly and severally liable as the successor to Countrywide The amended complaint seeks unspecified actual and punitive damages and equitable relief

FGIC

The Corporation CFC and other Countrywide entities are named as defendants in an action filed by Financial Guaranty Insurance Company (FGIC) entitled Financial Guaranty Insurance Co v Countrywide Home Loans Inc This action currently pending in New York Supreme Court New York County relates to bond insurance policies provided by FGIC on securitized pools of HELOC and fixed-rate second lien mortgage loans In June 2010 the court entered an order that granted in part and denied in part the Countrywide defendants motion to dismiss On April 30 2010 FGIC filed an amended complaint reasserting claims set forth in the initial complaint and asserting a claim that the Corporation is jointly and severally liable as the successor to Countrywide In October 2011 following the appellate court s June 30 2011 order on the cross-appeals in MBIA Insurance Corporation Inc v Countrywide Home Loans et al the parties entered a joint stipulated order withdrawing cross-appeals from the court s June 2010 order

On March 24 2010 CFC and other Countrywide entities filed a separate but related action against FGIC in New York Supreme Court seeking monetary damages of at least $100 million against FGIC in connection with FGIC s failure to pay claims under certain bond insurance policies The same day CFC and the other Countrywide entities filed an action to enjoin the instruction of the New York State Department of Financial Services (NYSDFS) to FGIC to suspend payments claimed under various insurance agreements or its approval of FGIC s plan to do so This action is currently being voluntarily deferred at the request of the NYSDFS

MBIA

The Corporation CFC and other Countrywide entities are named as defendants in two actions filed by MBIA Insurance Corporation (MBIA) The first action MBIA Insurance Corporation, Inc v Countrywide Home Loans, et al is pending in New York Supreme Court New York County In April 2010 the court granted in part and denied in part the Countrywide defendants motion to dismiss and denied the Corporation s motion to dismiss The parties filed cross-appeals On December 22 2010 the court issued an order on MBIA s motion for use of sampling at trial in which the court held that MBIA may attempt to prove its breach of contract and fraudulent inducement claims through examination of statistically significant samples of the securitizations at issue In its order the court did not endorse any of MBIA s specific sampling proposals and stated that defendants have "significant valid challenges" to MBIA s methodology that they may present at trial together with defendants own views and evidence On June 30 2011 the appellate court issued a decision on the parties cross-appeals The appellate court dismissed MBIA s breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim which reversed the trial court ruling on that claim and otherwise affirmed the trial court s decisions

On May 25 2011 MBIA moved for partial summary judgment seeking rulings that (i) MBIA does not have to show that Countrywide s alleged fraud and breaches of contract proximately caused MBIA s losses and (ii) the term materially and adversely affects" in the transaction documents does not limit the repurchase remedy to defaulted loans or require MBIA to show that Countrywide s breaches of the representations and warranties caused the loans to default On January 3 2012 the court issued an order that granted in part and denied in part MBIA s motion The court ruled that under New York insurance law MBIA does not need to prove a causal link between Countrywide s alleged misrepresentations and the payments made pursuant to the policies The court also held that plaintiff could recover "rescissory damages" (the amounts it has been required to pay pursuant to the policies less premiums received) on such claims but must prove that it was damaged as a direct result of Countrywide s alleged material misrepresentations The court denied the motion in its entirety on the issue of the interpretation of the materially and adversely affects" language On January 25 2012 Countrywide appealed the court s decision and order to the extent it granted MBIA s motion On February 6 2012 MBIA filed a cross-appeal of the court s decision and order to the extent it denied MBIA s motion

The second MBIA action MBIA Insurance Corporation Inc v Bank of America Corporation Countrywide Financial Corporation Countrywide Home Loans Inc Countrywide Securities Corporation et al is pending in California Superior Court Los Angeles County MBIA purports to bring this action as subrogee to the note holders for certain securitized pools of HELOC and fixed-rate second-lien mortgage loans and seeks unspecified damages and declaratory relief On May 17 2010 the court dismissed the claims against the Countrywide defendants with leave to amend but denied the request to dismiss MBIA s successor liability claims against the Corporation On June 21 2010 MBIA filed an amended complaint re-asserting its previously dismissed claims against the Countrywide defendants re-asserting the successor liability claim against the Corporation and adding Countrywide Capital Markets LLC as a defendant The Countrywide defendants filed a demurrer to the amended complaint but the court declined to rule on the demurrer and instead entered an order staying the case until August 2011 On August 18 2011 the court ordered a partial lifting of the stay to permit certain limited discovery to proceed The stay otherwise remains in effect

Syncora

The Corporation CFC and other Countrywide entities are named as defendants in an action filed by Syncora Guarantee Inc (Syncora) entitled Syncora Guarantee Inc v Countrywide Home Loans Inc , et al This action currently pending in New York Supreme Court New York County relates to bond insurance policies provided by Syncora on certain securitized pools of HELOC In March 2010 the court issued an order that granted in part and denied in part the Countrywide defendants motion to dismiss Syncora and the Countrywide defendants filed cross-appeals from this order In May 2010 Syncora amended its complaint Defendants filed an answer to Syncora s amended complaint on July 9 2010 as well as a counterclaim for breach of contract and declaratory judgment The parties subsequently stipulated to the dismissal of defendants counterclaim without prejudice Following the appellate court s June 30 2011 order on the cross-appeals in MBIA Insurance Corporation Inc v Countrywide Home Loans et al the parties entered a joint stipulated order withdrawing their cross-appeals

On August 16 2011 Syncora moved for partial summary judgment seeking rulings that (i) Syncora does not have to show that Countrywide s alleged fraud and breaches of contract proximately caused Syncora s losses and (ii) the term "materially and adversely affects" in the transaction documents does not limit the repurchase remedy to defaulted loans or require Syncora to show that Countrywide s breaches of the representations and warranties caused the loans to default On January 3 2012 the court issued a decision and order that granted in part and denied in part Syncora s motion The court ruled that under New York insurance law Syncora does not need to prove a causal link between Countrywide s alleged misrepresentations and the payments made pursuant to the policies The Court also held plaintiff could recover "rescissory damages" (the amounts it has been required to pay pursuant to the policies less premiums received) on such claims but must prove that it was damaged as a direct result of Countrywide s alleged material misrepresentations The court denied the motion in its entirety on the issue of the interpretation of the "materially and adversely affects" language On January 6 2012 Syncora appealed the decision and order to the extent it denied Syncora s motion On January 25 2012 Countrywide filed a cross-appeal of the court s decision and order to the extent it granted Syncora s motion

Mortgage Servicing Investigations and Litigation

The Corporation entered into a consent order with the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) on April 13 2011 which requires servicers to make several enhancements to their servicing operations including implementation of a single point of contact model for borrowers throughout the loss mitigation and foreclosure processes adoption of measures designed to ensure that foreclosure activity is halted once a borrower has been approved for a modification unless the borrower fails to make payments under the modified loan and implementation of enhanced controls over third party vendors that provide default servicing support services In addition the consent order required that servicers retain an independent consultant approved by the OCC to conduct a review of all foreclosure actions pending or foreclosure sales that occurred between January 1 2009 and December 31 2010 and submit a plan to the OCC to remediate all financial injury to borrowers caused by any deficiencies identified through the review The review is comprised of two parts a sample file review conducted by the independent consultant which began in October 2011 and file reviews by the independent consultant based upon requests for review from customers with in-scope foreclosures The Corporation began outreach to those customers in November 2011 and additional outreach efforts are underway Because the review process is available to a large number of potentially eligible borrowers and involves an examination of many details and documents each review could take several months to complete The Corporation cannot yet accurately determine how many borrowers will request a review how many borrowers will meet the eligibility requirements or how much in compensation might ultimately be paid to eligible borrower

On February 9 2012 the Corporation reached agreements in principle (collectively the Servicing Resolution Agreements) with (i) the DOJ various federal regulatory agencies and 49 attorneys general to resolve federal and state investigations into certain origination servicing and foreclosure practices (the Global AIP) (ii) the Federal Housing Administration (the FHA) to resolve certain claims relating to the origination of FHA-insured mortgage loans primarily by Countrywide prior to and for a period following the acquisition of that lender (the FHA AIP) and (iii) each of the Federal Reserve and the OCC regarding civil monetary penalties related to conduct that was the subject of consent orders entered into with the banking regulators in April 2011 (the Consent Order AIPs)

The Servicing Resolution Agreements are subject to ongoing discussions among the parties and completion and execution of definitive documentation as well as required regulatory and court approvals The Global AIP is subject to among other things Federal court approval in the United States District Court in the District of Columbia and regulatory approvals of the United States Department of the Treasury and other federal agencies The Consent Order AIPs are subject to among other things the finalization of the Global AIP

The Global AIP calls for the establishment of certain uniform servicing standards upfront cash payments of approximately $1 9 billion to the state and federal governments and for borrower restitution approximately $7 6 billion in borrower assistance in the form of among other things principal reduction short sales and deeds-in-lieu of foreclosure and approximately $1 0 billion of refinancing assistance The Corporation could be required to make additional payments if it fails to meet its borrower assistance and refinancing assistance commitments over a three-year period In addition the Corporation could be required to pay an additional $350 million if the Corporation fails to meet certain first lien principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period The Corporation also entered into agreements with several states under which it committed to perform certain minimum levels of principal reduction and related activities within those states as part of the Global AIP and under which it could be required to make additional payments if it fails to meet such minimum levels The Corporation may also incur additional operating costs (e g servicing costs) to implement certain terms of the Global AIP in future periods The FHA AIP provides for an upfront cash payment by the Corporation of $500 million The FHA would release the Corporation from all claims arising from loans originated prior to April 30 2009 that were submitted for FHA insurance claim payments prior to January 1 2012 and from multiple damages and penalties for loans that were originated on or before April 30 2009 but had not been submitted for FHA insurance claim payment The Corporation would have the obligation to pay an additional $500 million if the Corporation fails to meet certain principal reduction thresholds over a three-year period

Pursuant to an agreement in principle the OCC agreed to hold in abeyance the imposition of a civil monetary penalty of $164 million Pursuant to a separate agreement in principle the Federal Reserve will assess a civil monetary penalty in the amount of $176 million against the Corporation Satisfying its payment borrower assistance and remediation obligations under the Global AIP will satisfy any civil monetary penalty obligations arising under these agreements in principle If however the Corporation does not make certain required payments or undertake certain required actions under the Global AIP the OCC will assess and the Federal Reserve will require the Corporation to pay the difference between the aggregate value of the payments and actions under these agreements in principle and the penalty amounts

Under the terms of the Global AIP the federal and participating state governments would release the Corporation from further liability for certain alleged residential mortgage origination servicing and foreclosure deficiencies In settling origination issues related to FHA guaranteed loans originated on or before April 30 2009 the FHA would provide the Corporation and its affiliates a release for all claims with respect to such loans if an insurance claim had been submitted to the FHA prior to January 1 2012 and a release of multiple damages and penalties (but not single damages) if no such claim had been submitted

The Servicing Resolution Agreements do not cover claims arising out of securitization including representations made to investors respecting MBS criminal claims private claims by borrowers claims by certain states for injunctive relief or actual economic damages to borrowers related to the Mortgage Electronic Registration System and claims by the GSEs (including repurchase demands) among other items

The Corporation continues to be subject to additional borrower and non-borrower litigation and governmental and regulatory scrutiny related to its past and current servicing and foreclosure activities including those claims not covered by the Servicing Resolution Agreements This scrutiny may extend beyond the Corporation s pending foreclosure matters to issues arising out of alleged irregularities with respect to previously completed foreclosure activities The current environment of heightened regulatory scrutiny may subject the Corporation to inquiries or investigations

Ocala Litigation

BNP Paribas Mortgage Corporation and Deutsche Bank AG each filed claims (the 2009 Actions) against BANA in the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York entitled BNP Paribas Mortgage Corporation v Bank of America N A and Deutsche Bank AG v Bank of America, N A Plaintiffs allege that BANA failed to properly perform its duties as indenture trustee collateral agent custodian and depositary for Ocala Funding LLC (Ocala) a home mortgage warehousing facility resulting in the loss of plaintiffs investment in Ocala Ocala was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Taylor Bean & Whitaker Mortgage Corp (TBW) a home mortgage originator and servicer which is alleged to have committed fraud that led to its eventual bankruptcy Ocala provided funding for TBW's mortgage origination activities by issuing notes the proceeds of which were to be used by TBW to originate home mortgages Such mortgages and other Ocala assets in turn were pledged to BANA as collateral agent to secure the notes Plaintiffs lost most or all of their investment in Ocala when as the result of the alleged fraud committed by TBW Ocala was unable to repay the notes purchased by plaintiffs and there was insufficient collateral to satisfy Ocala s debt obligations Plaintiffs allege that BANA breached its contractual fiduciary and other duties to Ocala thereby permitting TBW s alleged fraud to go undetected Plaintiffs seek compensatory damages and other relief from BANA including interest and attorneys fees in an unspecified amount, but which plaintiffs allege exceeds $1 6 billion

On March 23 2011 the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York issued an order granting in part and denying in part BANA s motions to dismiss the 2009 Actions The court dismissed plaintiffs claims against BANA in its capacity as custodian and depositary as well as plaintiffs claims for contractual indemnification and other claims The court retained the claims questioning BANA s performance as indenture trustee and collateral agent Finally the court agreed with BANA that plaintiffs may not pursue claims for any breach that arose prior to July 20 2009 (the date on which plaintiffs purchased the last issuance of Ocala notes) On December 29 2011 plaintiffs moved for leave to amend their complaints to include additional contractual tort and equitable claims

On June 22 2011 BANA filed third party complaints in the 2009 Actions against BNP Paribas Securities Corp (BNP Securities) and Deutsche Bank Securities Inc (Deutsche Securities) seeking contribution for damages sustained by BANA in the underlying actions BNP Securities and Deutsche Securities (collectively the Note Dealers) served as note dealers and private placement agents for the Ocala notes that are the subject of the underlying actions On September 15 2011 the Note Dealers moved to dismiss the third-party complaints

On August 30 2010 plaintiffs each filed new lawsuits (the 2010 Actions) against BANA in the U S District Court for the Southern District of Florida entitled BNP Paribas Mortgage Corporation v Bank of America N A and Deutsche Bank AG v Bank of America, N A which the parties agreed to transfer to the U S District Court for the Southern District of New York as related to the 2009 Actions On December 29 2011 plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed the 2010 Actions without prejudice and moved for leave to amend their complaints in the 2009 Actions as discussed above

On October 1 2010 BANA on behalf of Ocala s investors filed suit in the U S District Court for the District of Columbia against the FDIC as receiver of Colonial Bank TBW's primary bank, and Platinum Community Bank (Platinum a wholly-owned subsidiary of TBW) entitled Bank of America, National Association as indenture trustee, custodian and collateral agent for Ocala Funding, LLC v. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The suit seeks judicial review of the FDIC's denial of the administrative claims brought by BANA in the FDIC's Colonial and Platinum receivership proceedings. BANA's claims allege that Ocala's losses were in whole or in part the result of Colonial and Platinum's participation in TBW's alleged fraud. BANA seeks a court order requiring the FDIC to allow BANA's claims in an amount equal to Ocala's losses and accordingly to permit BANA as trustee, collateral agent, custodian and depositary for Ocala, to share appropriately in distributions of any receivership assets that the FDIC makes to creditors of the two failed banks.

On March 14, 2011, the FDIC moved to dismiss BANA's action, primarily on the ground that Ocala Funding had not exhausted its administrative remedies. BANA filed an amended complaint alleging that it had exhausted its administrative remedies. On August 5, 2011, the FDIC answered and moved to dismiss the amended complaint, and asserted counterclaims against BANA in its individual capacity, seeking approximately $900 million in damages. The counterclaims allege that Colonial sent 4,808 loans to BANA as bailee that BANA converted the loans into Ocala collateral without first ensuring that Colonial was paid, and that Colonial was never paid for these loans. BANA filed an opposition to the FDIC's motion to dismiss on October 21, 2011, along with a motion to dismiss the FDIC's counterclaims.

NOTE 18 Shareholders' Equity

Common Stock

In November 2011, August 2011, May 2011, and January 2011, the Corporation's Board of Directors (the Board) declared the fourth, third, second and first quarter cash dividends of $0.01 per common share, which were paid on December 23, 2011, September 23, 2011, June 24, 2011 and March 25, 2011 to common shareholders of record on December 2, 2011, September 2, 2011, June 3, 2011 and March 4, 2011, respectively. In addition, in January 2012, the Board declared a first quarter cash dividend of $0.01 per common share, payable on March 23, 2012 to common shareholders of record on March 2, 2012.

In connection with the exchanges described below in Preferred Stock, the Corporation issued 400 million shares of common stock.

On September 1, 2011, the Corporation closed the sale to Berkshire Hathaway Inc. (Berkshire) of 50,000 shares of the Series T Preferred Stock and a warrant (the Warrant) to purchase 700 million shares of the Corporation's common stock for an aggregate purchase price of $5.0 billion in cash. Of the $5.0 billion in cash proceeds, $2.9 billion was allocated to preferred stock and $2.1 billion to the Warrant on a relative fair value basis. The discount on the Series T Preferred Stock is not subject to accretion. The portion of proceeds allocated to the Warrant was recorded as additional paid-in capital. The Warrant is exercisable at the holder's option at any time, in whole or in part, until September 1, 2021, at an exercise price of $7.142857 per share of common stock. The Warrant may be settled in cash or by exchanging all or a portion of the Series T Preferred Stock. For additional information on the Berkshire investment and Series T Preferred Stock, see Preferred Stock in this Note.

On February 23, 2010, the Corporation held a special meeting of stockholders at which it obtained shareholder approval of an amendment to the Corporation's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to increase the number of authorized shares of common stock from 10.0 billion to 11.3 billion. On April 28, 2010, at the Corporation's 2010 annual meeting of stockholders, the Corporation obtained shareholder approval of an amendment to the Corporation's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to increase the number of authorized shares of common stock from 11.3 billion to 12.8 billion.

In January 2009, the Corporation issued 1.4 billion shares of common stock in connection with its acquisition of Merrill Lynch. During 2009 and 2008, in connection with preferred stock issuances to the U.S. government under the Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP), the Corporation issued warrants to purchase 121.8 million shares of common stock at an exercise price of $30.79 per share and 150.4 million shares of common stock at an exercise price of $13.30 per share. The U.S. Treasury auctioned these warrants in March 2010.

In May 2009, the Corporation issued 1.3 billion shares of its common stock at an average price of $10.77 per share through an at-the-market issuance program resulting in gross proceeds of approximately $13.5 billion.

In connection with employee stock plans in 2011, the Corporation issued approximately 51 million shares and repurchased approximately 28 million shares of its common stock to satisfy tax withholding obligations. At December 31, 2011, the Corporation had reserved 2.2 billion unissued shares of common stock for future issuances under employee stock plans, common stock warrants, convertible notes and preferred stock.

There is no existing Board authorized share repurchase program.

Preferred Stock

During both 2011 and 2010, the dividends declared on preferred stock were $1.4 billion and $4.5 billion for 2009.

In 2011, the Corporation entered into separate agreements with certain institutional preferred and Trust Security holders (the Exchange Agreements) pursuant to which the Corporation and each security holder agreed to exchange shares or depositary shares representing fractional interests in shares of various series of the Corporation's preferred stock, par value $0.01 per share, or Trust Securities for an aggregate of 400 million shares of the Corporation's common stock, valued at $2.2 billion and $2.3 billion aggregate principal amount of senior notes. The exchanges, in the aggregate, increased Tier 1 common capital by $3.9 billion, or approximately 29 bps. The Exchange Agreements related to Trust Securities are described in Note 13 – Long-term Debt and the Exchange Agreements related to preferred stock are described below.

As part of the Exchange Agreements, the Corporation exchanged non-convertible preferred stock with an aggregate liquidation preference of $815 million and carrying value of $814 million for 72 million shares of common stock valued at $399 million and senior notes valued at $731 million. The $184 million difference between the carrying value of the non-convertible preferred stock and the fair value of the consideration issued to the holders of the non-convertible preferred stock was recorded in retained earnings as a non-cash reduction to preferred stock dividends.

Additionally, as a part of the Exchange Agreements, a portion of the Series L 7.25% Non-Cumulative Perpetual Convertible Preferred Stock (Series L Preferred Stock) with an aggregate liquidation preference and carrying value of $269 million was exchanged for 20 million common shares valued at $123 million and senior notes valued at $129 million. The $17 million difference between the carrying value of the Series L Preferred Stock and the fair value of the consideration issued to holders of the Series L Preferred Stock was reclassified from preferred stock to common stock and additional paid-in capital. Because the number of common shares issued to the Series L Preferred Stock holders was in excess of the number of common shares issuable pursuant to the original conversion terms, the $220 million fair value of consideration transferred to the Series L Preferred Stock holders in excess of the $32 million fair value of securities issuable pursuant to the original conversion terms was recorded as a non-cash preferred stock dividend. The dividend did not impact total shareholders' equity as it reduced retained earnings and increased common stock and additional paid-in capital by the same amount.

The table below lists the aggregate liquidation value of each series of preferred stock exchanged.

The Series T Preferred Stock issued as part of the Berkshire investment has a liquidation value of $100,000 per share and dividends on the Series T Preferred Stock accrue on the liquidation value at a rate per annum of six percent but will be paid only when and if declared by the Board out of legally available funds. Subject to the approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Series T Preferred Stock may be redeemed by the Corporation at any time at a redemption price of $105,000 per share plus any accrued, unpaid dividends. The Series T Preferred Stock has no maturity date and ranks senior to the outstanding common stock with respect to the payment of dividends and distributions in liquidation. At any time when dividends on the Series T Preferred Stock have not been paid in full, the unpaid amounts will accrue dividends at a rate per annum of eight percent and the Corporation will not be permitted to pay dividends or other distributions on, or to repurchase, any outstanding common stock or any of the Corporation's outstanding preferred stock of any series. Following payment in full of accrued but unpaid dividends on the Series T Preferred Stock, the dividend rate remains at eight percent per annum.

In connection with the Merrill Lynch acquisition, Merrill Lynch non-convertible preferred shareholders received Bank of America Corporation preferred stock having substantially identical terms. On October 15, 2010, all of the outstanding shares of the mandatory convertible preferred stock of Merrill Lynch automatically converted into an aggregate of 50 million shares of the Corporation's common stock in accordance with the terms of these preferred securities.

In January 2009, in connection with TARP and the Merrill Lynch acquisition, the Corporation issued to the U.S. Treasury non-voting perpetual preferred stock for $30.0 billion.

In December 2009, the Corporation repurchased the non-voting perpetual preferred stock previously issued to the U.S. Treasury (TARP Preferred Stock) in 2009 and 2008 through the use of $25.7 billion in excess liquidity and $19.3 billion in proceeds from the sale of 1.3 billion Common Equivalent Securities (CES) valued at $15.00 per unit. The CES consisted of depositary shares representing interests in shares of Common Equivalent Junior Preferred Stock, Series S (Common Equivalent Stock) and contingent warrants to purchase an aggregate of 60 million shares of the Corporation's common stock. On February 23, 2010, the Corporation held a special meeting of stockholders at which it obtained shareholder approval of an amendment to the Corporation's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to increase the number of authorized shares of common stock. Accordingly, the Common Equivalent Stock automatically converted in full into 1.286 billion shares of common stock on February 24, 2010. In addition, as a result, the contingent warrants expired without having become exercisable and the CES ceased to exist.

During 2009, the Corporation entered into agreements with certain holders of non-government perpetual preferred stock to exchange their holdings of approximately $7.3 billion aggregate liquidation preference before third-party issuance costs of 323 million shares of perpetual preferred stock for 545 million shares of common stock with a fair value of $6.1 billion. In addition, the Corporation exchanged $3.9 billion aggregate liquidation preference, before third-party issuance costs, of 144 million shares of non-government preferred stock for 200 million shares of common stock in an exchange offer with a fair value of stock issued of $2.5 billion. In total, these exchanges resulted in the exchange of $11.3 billion aggregate liquidation preference, before third-party issuance costs, or 467 million shares of preferred stock into 745 million shares of common stock with a fair value of $8.6 billion.

In addition, during 2009, the Corporation exchanged 3.6 million shares, or $3.6 billion aggregate liquidation preference, of Series L Preferred Stock into 255 million shares of common stock with a fair value of $2.8 billion, which was accounted for as an induced conversion of preferred stock.

As a result of these 2009 exchanges, the Corporation recorded an increase to retained earnings and net income (loss) applicable to common shareholders of $576 million. This represents the net of a $2.62 billion benefit due to the excess of the carrying value of the Corporation's non-convertible preferred stock over the fair value of the common stock exchanged, partially offset by a $2.04 billion inducement representing the excess of the fair value of the common stock exchanged over the fair value of the common stock that would have been issued under the original conversion terms.

The table below presents a summary of perpetual preferred stock previously issued by the Corporation and remaining outstanding at December 31 2011

Diluted earnings (loss) per common share	$ (0 05)	$ (0 37)	$ (0 29)

(1) Includes incremental shares from RSUs restricted stock shares stock options and warrants

Due to the net loss applicable to common shareholders for 2010 and 2009 no dilutive potential common shares were included in the calculation of diluted EPS because they would have been antidilutive

For 2011 2010 and 2009 average options to purchase 217 million 271 million and 315 million shares respectively of common stock were outstanding but not included in the computation of EPS because they were antidilutive under the treasury stock method For both 2011 and 2010 average warrants to purchase 272 million shares of common stock and 265 million for 2009 were outstanding but not included in the computation of EPS because they were antidilutive under the treasury stock method For 2011 66 million average dilutive potential common shares associated with the Series L Preferred Stock were excluded from the diluted share count because the result would have been antidilutive under the "if-converted" method For 2010 and 2009 107 million and 147 million average dilutive potential common shares associated with the Series L Preferred Stock and the mandatory convertible Preferred Stock Series 2 and Series 3 of Merrill Lynch were excluded from the diluted share count because the result would have been antidilutive under the "if-converted" method For 2009 81 million average dilutive potential common shares associated with the CES were excluded from the diluted share count because the result would have been antidilutive under the "if-converted" method For 2011 234 million average dilutive potential common shares associated with the Series T Preferred Stock issued in 2011 were excluded from the diluted share count because the result would have been antidilutive under the if-converted method

For purposes of computing basic EPS CES were considered to be participating securities prior to February 24 2010 however due to a net loss for 2010 earnings were not allocated to the CES The two-class method prohibits allocation of an undistributed loss to participating securities For purposes of computing diluted EPS there was no dilutive effect of the CES which were outstanding prior to February 24 2010 due to a net loss for 2010

In 2011 in connection with the exchanges described in Note 15 – Shareholders Equity the Corporation recorded a net $36 million non-cash preferred stock dividend which is included in the calculation of net income allocated to common shareholders

For 2009 as a result of repurchasing the TARP Preferred Stock the Corporation accelerated the remaining accretion of the issuance discount on the TARP Preferred Stock of $4 0 billion and recorded a corresponding charge to retained earnings and income (loss) applicable to common shareholders in the calculation of diluted EPS In addition in 2009 the Corporation recorded an increase to retained earnings and net income (loss) applicable to common shareholders of $576 million related to the Corporation s preferred stock exchange for common stock

NOTE 18 Regulatory Requirements and Restrictions

The Federal Reserve requires the Corporation s banking subsidiaries to maintain reserve balances based on a percentage of certain deposits Average daily reserve balances required by the Federal Reserve were $14 6 billion and $12 9 billion for 2011 and 2010 Currency and coin residing in branches and cash vaults (vault cash) are used to partially satisfy the reserve requirement The average daily reserve balances in excess of vault cash held with the Federal Reserve amounted to $6 5 billion and $5 5 billion for 2011 and 2010

The primary sources of funds for cash distributions by the Corporation to its shareholders are dividends received from its banking subsidiaries Bank of America N A and FIA Card Services N A In 2011 the Corporation received $9 8 billion in dividends from Bank of America N A and FIA Card Services N A returned capital of $7 0 billion to the Corporation In 2012 Bank of America N A and FIA Card Services N A can declare and pay dividends to the Corporation of $4 5 billion and $0 plus an additional amount equal to their net profits for 2012 as defined by statute up to the date of any such dividend declaration The other subsidiary national banks can pay dividends in aggregate of $1 0 billion in 2012 plus an additional amount equal to their net profits for 2012 as defined by statute up to the date of any such dividend declaration The amount of dividends that each subsidiary bank may declare in a calendar year without approval by the OCC is the subsidiary bank s net profits for that year combined with its net retained profits as defined for the preceding two years

The Federal Reserve OCC and FDIC (collectively joint agencies) have in place regulatory capital guidelines for U S banking organizations Failure to meet the capital requirements can initiate certain mandatory and discretionary actions by regulators that could have a material effect on the Corporation s financial position The regulatory capital guidelines measure capital in relation to the credit and market risks of both on and off-balance sheet items using various risk weights Under the regulatory capital guidelines Total capital consists of three tiers of capital Tier 1 capital includes qualifying common shareholders equity qualifying noncumulative perpetual preferred stock qualifying Trust Securities hybrid securities and qualifying non-controlling interests less goodwill and other adjustments Tier 2 capital consists of qualifying subordinated debt a limited portion of the allowance for loan and lease losses a portion of net unrealized gains on AFS marketable equity securities and other adjustments Tier 3 capital includes subordinated debt that is unsecured fully paid has an original maturity of at least two years is not redeemable before maturity without prior approval by the Federal Reserve and includes a lock-in clause precluding payment of either interest or principal if the payment would cause the issuing bank s risk-based capital ratio to fall or remain below the required minimum Tier 3 capital can only be used to satisfy the Corporation s market risk capital requirement and may not be used to support its credit risk requirement At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation had no subordinated debt that qualified as Tier 3 capital

Certain corporate-sponsored trust companies which issue Trust Securities are not consolidated In accordance with Federal Reserve guidance Trust Securities continue to qualify as Tier 1 capital with revised quantitative limits effective March 31 2011 As a result the Corporation includes Trust Securities in Tier 1 capital The Financial Reform Act includes a provision under which the Corporation s previously issued and outstanding Trust Securities in the aggregate amount of $16 1 billion (approximately 125 bps of Tier 1 capital) at December 31 2011 will no longer qualify as Tier 1 capital effective January 1 2013 This amount excludes $633 million of hybrid Trust Securities that are expected to be converted to preferred stock prior to the date of implementation The exclusion of Trust Securities from Tier 1 capital will be phased in incrementally over a three-year phase-in period The treatment of Trust Securities during the phase in period remains unclear and is subject to future rulemaking

Current limits restrict core capital elements to 15 percent of total core capital elements for internationally active bank holding companies Internationally active bank holding companies are those that have significant activities in non-U S markets with consolidated assets greater than $250 billion or on balance sheet non-U S exposure greater than $10 billion In addition the Federal Reserve revised the qualitative standards for capital instruments included in regulatory capital At December 31 2011 the Corporation s restricted core capital elements comprised 9 1 percent of total core capital elements The Corporation is and expects to remain compliant with the revised limits

To meet minimum adequately capitalized regulatory requirements an institution must maintain a Tier 1 capital ratio of four percent and a Total capital ratio of eight percent A "well-capitalized" institution must generally maintain capital ratios 200 bps higher than the minimum guidelines The risk based capital rules have been further supplemented by a Tier 1 leverage ratio defined as Tier 1 capital divided by quarterly average total assets after certain adjustments "Well-capitalized" bank holding companies must have a minimum Tier 1 leverage ratio of four percent National banks must maintain a Tier 1 leverage ratio of at least five percent to be classified as "well-capitalized " At December 31 2011 the Corporation s Tier 1 capital Total capital and Tier 1 leverage ratios were 12 40 percent 16 75 percent and 7 53 percent, respectively This classifies the Corporation as "well-capitalized" for regulatory purposes the highest classification

Net unrealized gains or losses on AFS debt securities and marketable equity securities net unrealized gains and losses on derivatives and employee benefit plan adjustments in shareholders equity are excluded from the calculations of Tier 1 common capital as discussed below Tier 1 capital and leverage ratios The Total capital ratio excludes all of the above with the exception of up to 45 percent of the pre-tax net unrealized gains on AFS marketable equity securities

The Corporation calculates Tier 1 common capital as Tier 1 capital including any CES less preferred stock qualifying Trust Securities hybrid securities and qualifying noncontrolling interest in subsidiaries CES was included in Tier 1 common capital based upon applicable regulatory guidance and the expectation at December 31 2009 that the underlying Common Equivalent Junior Preferred Stock Series S would convert into common stock following shareholder approval of additional authorized shares Shareholders approved the increase in the number of authorized shares of common stock and the Common Equivalent Stock converted into common stock on February 24 2010 Tier 1 common capital was $126 7 billion and $125 1 billion and the Tier 1 common capital ratio was 9 86 percent and 8 60 percent at December 31 2011 and 2010

Regulatory Capital Developments

The Corporation manages regulatory capital to adhere to regulatory standards of capital adequacy based on current understanding of the rules and the application of such rules to the Corporation's business as currently conducted The regulatory capital rules as written by the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (the Basel Committee) continue to evolve

U S banking regulators published a final Basel II rule (Basel II) in December 2007 which requires the Corporation to implement Basel II at the holding company level as well as at certain U S bank subsidiaries establishes requirements for the U S implementation and provides detailed requirements for a new regulatory capital framework related to credit and operational risk (Pillar 1) supervisory requirements (Pillar 2) and disclosure requirements (Pillar 3) The Corporation is currently in the Basel II parallel period

On December 15 2010 U S regulators announced a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPR) on the Risk-based Capital Guidelines for Market Risk On December 29 2011 U S regulators issued an NPR that would amend the December 2010 NPR The amended NPR is expected to increase the capital requirements for the Corporation's trading assets and liabilities The Corporation continues to evaluate the capital impact of the proposed rules and currently anticipates it will be in compliance with any final rules by the projected implementation date in late 2012

In addition the Basel Committee issued capital standards entitled "Basel III A global regulatory framework for more resilient banks and banking systems " together with liquidity standards discussed below (Basel III) in December 2010 The Corporation expects to be in compliance with the Basel III capital standards within the regulatory timelines If implemented by U S banking regulators as proposed Basel III could significantly increase the Corporation's capital requirements Basel III and the Financial Reform Act propose the disqualification of Trust Securities from Tier 1 capital with the Financial Reform Act proposing that the disqualification be phased in from 2013 to 2015 Basel III also proposes the deduction of certain assets from capital (deferred tax assets MSRs investments in financial firms and pension assets among others within prescribed limitations) the inclusion of accumulated OCI in capital increased capital for counterparty credit risk and new minimum capital and buffer requirements For additional information on deferred tax assets and MSRs see Note 21 – Income Taxes and Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights The phase-in period for the capital deductions is proposed to occur in 20 percent increments from 2014 through 2018 with full implementation by December 31 2018 An increase in capital requirements for counterparty credit is proposed to be effective January 2013 The phase-in period for the new minimum capital requirements and related buffers is proposed to occur between 2013 and 2019 U S banking regulators have indicated a goal to adopt final rules in 2012

Preparing for the implementation of the new capital rules is a top strategic priority for the Corporation The Corporation intends to continue to build capital through retaining earnings actively reducing legacy asset portfolios and implementing other capital related initiatives including focusing on reducing both higher risk-weighted assets and assets currently deducted or expected to be deducted under Basel III from capital

On June 17 2011 U S banking regulators proposed rules requiring all large bank holding companies (BHCs) to submit a comprehensive capital plan to the Federal Reserve as part of an annual Comprehensive Capital Analysis and Review (CCAR) The proposed regulations require BHCs to demonstrate adequate capital to support planned capital actions such as dividends share repurchases or other forms of distributing capital CCAR submissions are subject to approval by the Federal Reserve The Federal Reserve may require BHCs to provide prior notice under certain circumstances before making a capital distribution On January 5 2012 the Corporation submitted a capital plan to the Federal Reserve consistent with the proposed rules

On July 19 2011 the Basel Committee published the consultative document "Globally systemic important banks Assessment methodology and the additional loss absorbency requirement" which sets out measures for global systemically important financial institutions including the methodology for measuring systemic importance the additional capital required (the SIFI buffer) and the arrangements by which they will be phased in As proposed the SIFI buffer would be met with additional Tier 1 common equity ranging from one percent to 2 5 percent and in certain circumstances 3 5 percent This will be phased in from 2016 through 2018 U S banking regulators have not yet provided similar rules for U S implementation of a SIFI buffer

Given that the U S regulatory agencies have issued neither proposed rulemaking nor supervisory guidance on Basel III significant uncertainty exists regarding the eventual impacts of Basel III on U S financial institutions including the Corporation These regulatory changes also require approval by the U S regulatory agencies of analytical models used as part of the Corporation's capital measurement and assessment, especially in the case of more complex models If these more complex models are not approved it could require financial institutions to hold additional capital which in some cases could be significant

On December 20, 2011 the Federal Reserve issued proposed rules to implement enhanced supervisory and prudential requirements and the early remediation requirements established under the Financial Reform Act The enhanced standards include risk-based capital and leverage requirements liquidity standards requirements for overall risk management, single-counterparty credit limits stress test requirements and a debt-to-equity limit for certain companies determined to pose a threat to financial stability Comments on the proposed rules are due by March 31 2012 The final rules are likely to influence the Corporation's regulatory capital and liquidity planning process and may impose additional operational and compliance costs on the Corporation

NOTE 19 Employee Benefit Plans

Pension and Postretirement Plans

The Corporation sponsors noncontributory trusteed pension plans that cover substantially all officers and employees a number of noncontributory nonqualified pension plans and postretirement health and life plans The plans provide defined benefits based on an employee's compensation and years of service The Bank of America Pension Plan (the Pension Plan) provides participants with compensation credits, generally based on years of service For account balances based on compensation credits prior to January 1 2008 the Pension Plan allows participants to select from various earnings measures which are based on the returns of certain funds or common stock of the Corporation The participant-selected earnings measures determine the earnings rate on the individual participant account balances in the Pension Plan Participants may elect to modify earnings measure allocations on a periodic basis subject to the provisions of the Pension Plan For account balances based on compensation credits subsequent to December 31 2007 the account balance earnings rate is based on a benchmark rate For eligible employees in the Pension Plan on or after January 1 2008 the benefits become vested upon completion of three years of service It is the policy of the Corporation to fund not less than the minimum funding amount required by ERISA

The Pension Plan has a balance guarantee feature for account balances with participant-selected earnings applied at the time a benefit payment is made from the plan that effectively provides principal protection for participant balances transferred and certain compensation credits The Corporation is responsible for funding any shortfall on the guarantee feature

As a result of acquisitions the Corporation assumed the obligations related to the pension plans of certain legacy companies These acquired pension plans have been merged into a separate defined benefit pension plan which together with the Pension Plan are referred to as the Qualified Pension Plans The benefit structures under these acquired plans have not changed and remain intact in the merged plan Certain benefit structures are substantially similar to the Pension Plan discussed above however certain of these structures do not allow participants to select various earnings measures rather the earnings rate is based on a benchmark rate In addition, these benefit structures include participants with benefits determined under formulas based on average or career compensation and years of service rather than by reference to a pension account Certain of the other benefit structures provide a participant's retirement benefits based on the number of years of benefit service and a percentage of the participant's average annual compensation during the five highest paid consecutive years of the last ten years of employment

In connection with a redesign of the Corporation's retirement plans after the end of 2011 the Corporation announced that it will freeze the benefits earned in the Qualified Pension Plans effective June 30 2012 The Corporation will continue to offer retirement benefits through its defined contribution plans and will increase its contributions to certain of these plans

As a result of the Merrill Lynch acquisition the Corporation assumed the obligations related to the plans of Merrill Lynch These plans include a terminated U S pension plan non-U S pension plans nonqualified pension plans and postretirement plans The non-U S pension plans vary based on the country and local practices The terminated U S pension plan is referred to as the Other Pension Plan

In 1988 Merrill Lynch purchased a group annuity contract that guarantees the payment of benefits vested under the terminated U S pension plan The Corporation under a supplemental agreement, may be responsible for or benefit from actual experience and investment performance of the annuity assets The Corporation made no contribution under this agreement in 2011 or 2010 Contributions may be required in the future under this agreement

The Corporation sponsors a number of noncontributory nonqualified pension plans (the Nonqualified Pension Plans) As a result of acquisitions the Corporation assumed the obligations related to the noncontributory nonqualified pension plans of certain legacy companies including Merrill Lynch These plans which are unfunded provide defined pension benefits to certain employees

In addition to retirement pension benefits full-time salaried employees and certain part-time employees may become eligible to continue participation as retirees in health care and/or life insurance plans sponsored by the Corporation Based on the other provisions of the individual plans certain retirees may also have the cost of these benefits partially paid by the Corporation The obligations assumed as a result of acquisitions are substantially similar to the Corporation s postretirement health and life plans except for Countrywide which did not have a postretirement health and life plan Collectively these plans are referred to as the Postretirement Health and Life Plans

The Pension and Postretirement Plans table summarizes the changes in the fair value of plan assets changes in the projected benefit obligation (PBO) the funded status of both the accumulated benefit obligation (ABO) and the PBO and the weighted average assumptions used to determine benefit obligations for the pension plans and postretirement plans at December 31 2011 and 2010 Amounts recognized at December 31 2011 and 2010 are reflected in other assets and accrued expenses and other liabilities on the Consolidated Balance Sheet The discount rate assumption is based on a cash flow matching technique and is subject to change each year This technique utilizes yield curves that are based on Aa rated corporate bonds with cash flows that match estimated benefit payments of each of the plans to produce the discount rate assumptions The asset valuation method for the Qualified Pension Plans recognizes 60 percent of the prior year s market gains or losses at the next measurement date with the remaining 40 percent spread equally over the subsequent four years

The Corporation s best estimate of its contributions to be made to the Non-U S Pension Plans Nonqualified and Other Pension Plans and Postretirement Health and Life Plans in 2012 is $98 million $124 million and $115 million respectively The Corporation does not expect to make a contribution to the Qualified Pension plans in 2012

Net periodic postretirement health and life expense was determined using the "projected unit credit" actuarial method Gains and losses for all benefits except postretirement health care are recognized in accordance with the standard amortization provisions of the applicable accounting guidance For the Postretirement Health Care Plans 50 percent of the unrecognized gain or loss at the beginning of the fiscal year (or at subsequent remeasurement) is recognized on a level basis during the year

The discount rate and expected return on plan assets impact the net periodic benefit cost recorded for the plans With all other assumptions held constant, a 25-basis point decline in the discount rate and expected return on plan assets would result in an increase of approximately $55 million and $27 million for the Qualified Pension Plans For the Non-U S Pension Plans, the Nonqualified and Other Pension Plans and Postretirement Health and Life Plans the 25-basis point decline in rates would not have a significant impact

Assumed health care cost trend rates affect the postretirement benefit obligation and benefit cost reported for the Postretirement Health and Life Plans The assumed health care cost trend rate used to measure the expected cost of benefits covered by the Postretirement Health and Life Plans was 8 00 percent for 2012 reducing in steps to 5 00 percent in 2019 and later years A one-percentage-point increase in assumed health care cost trend rates would have increased the service and interest costs and the benefit obligation by $4 million and $59 million in 2011 A one-percentage-point decrease in assumed health care cost trend rates would have lowered the service and interest costs and the benefit obligation by $3 million and $52 million in 2011

Plan Assets

The Qualified Pension Plans have been established as retirement vehicles for participants and trusts have been established to secure benefits promised under the Qualified Pension Plans The Corporation's policy is to invest the trust assets in a prudent manner for the exclusive purpose of providing benefits to participants and defraying reasonable expenses of administration The Corporation s investment strategy is designed to provide a total return that over the long term increases the ratio of assets to liabilities The strategy attempts to maximize the investment return on assets at a level of risk deemed appropriate by the Corporation while complying with ERISA and any applicable regulations and laws The investment strategy utilizes asset allocation as a principal determinant for establishing the risk/return profile of the assets Asset allocation ranges are established periodically reviewed and adjusted as funding levels and liability characteristics change Active and passive investment managers are employed to help enhance the risk/return profile of the assets An additional aspect of the investment strategy used to minimize risk (part of the asset allocation plan) includes matching the equity exposure of participant-selected earnings measures For example the common stock of the Corporation held in the trust is maintained as an offset to the exposure related to participants who elected to receive an earnings measure based on the return performance of common stock of the Corporation No plan assets are expected to be returned to the Corporation during 2012

The assets of the Non-U S Pension Plans are primarily attributable to a U K pension plan This U K pension plan s assets are invested prudently so that the benefits promised to members are provided with consideration given to the nature and the duration of the plan s liabilities The current planned investment strategy was set following an asset-liability study and advice from the trustee s investment advisors The selected asset allocation strategy is designed to achieve a higher return than the lowest risk strategy while maintaining a prudent approach to meeting the plan s liabilities

The Expected Return on Asset assumption (EROA assumption) was developed through analysis of historical market returns historical asset class volatility and correlations current market conditions anticipated future asset allocations the funds' past experience and expectations on potential future market returns The EROA assumption is determined using the calculated market-related value for the Qualified Pension Plans and the Other Pension Plan and the fair value for the Non-U S Pension Plans and Postretirement Health and Life Plans The EROA assumption represents a long-term average view of the performance of the assets in the Qualified Pension Plans the Non-U S Pension Plans the Other Pension Plan and Postretirement Health and Life Plans a return that may or may not be achieved during any one calendar year Some of the building blocks used to arrive at the long-term return assumption include an implied return from equity securities of 8 75 percent debt securities of 5 75 percent and real estate of 7 00 percent for the Qualified Pension Plans the Non-U S Pension Plans the Other Pension Plan and Postretirement Health and Life Plans The terminated U S pension plan is solely invested in a group annuity contract which is primarily invested in fixed-income securities structured such that asset maturities match the duration of the plan s obligations

The target allocations for 2012 by asset category for the Qualified Pension Plans Non-U S Pension Plans Nonqualified and Other Pension Plans and Postretirement Health and Life Plans are presented in the table below

Defined Contribution Plans

The Corporation maintains qualified defined contribution retirement plans and nonqualified defined contribution retirement plans As a result of the Merrill Lynch acquisition the Corporation also maintains the defined contribution plans of Merrill Lynch which include the 401(k) Savings & Investment Plan the Retirement and Accumulation Plan (RAP) and the Employee Stock Ownership Plan (ESOP) The Corporation contributed approximately $723 million $670 million and $605 million in 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively in cash to the qualified defined contribution plans At December 31 2011 and 2010 232 million shares and 208 million shares of the Corporation's common stock were held by these plans Payments to the plans for dividends on common stock were $9 million $8 million and $8 million in 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively

In addition certain non-U.S. employees within the Corporation are covered under defined contribution pension plans that are separately administered in accordance with local laws

NOTE 20 Stock-based Compensation Plans

The Corporation administers a number of equity compensation plans including the Key Employee Stock Plan the Key Associate Stock Plan and the Merrill Lynch Employee Stock Compensation Plan Descriptions of the significant features of the equity compensation plans are below Under these plans the Corporation grants stock-based awards including stock options restricted stock shares and RSUs For grants in 2011 restricted stock awards generally vest in three equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date

For most awards expense is generally recognized ratably over the vesting period net of estimated forfeitures, unless the employee meets certain retirement eligibility criteria For awards to employees that meet retirement eligibility criteria the Corporation records the expense upon grant For employees that become retirement eligible during the vesting period the Corporation recognizes expense from the grant date to the date on which the employee becomes retirement eligible net of estimated forfeitures The compensation cost for the stock-based plans was $2.6 billion, $2.0 billion and $2.4 billion in 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively The related income tax benefit was $969 million $727 million and $892 million for 2011 2010 and 2009 respectively

For capital purposes the Corporation issued approximately 122 million of immediately tradable shares of common stock or approximately $1.0 billion (after-tax) to certain employees in February 2012 in lieu of a portion of their 2011 year-end cash incentive

Key Employee Stock Plan

The Key Employee Stock Plan as amended and restated provided for different types of awards including stock options restricted stock shares and RSUs Under the plan 10-year options to purchase approximately 260 million shares of common stock were granted through December 31 2002 to certain employees at the closing market price on the respective grant dates At December 31 2011 approximately 21 million fully vested options were outstanding under this plan No further awards may be granted

Key Associate Stock Plan

The Key Associate Stock Plan became effective January 1 2003 It provides for different types of awards including stock options restricted stock shares and RSUs As of December 31 2011 the shareholders had authorized approximately 1.1 billion shares for grant under this plan Additionally any shares covered by awards under the Key Employee Stock Plan or certain legacy company plans that cancel terminate expire lapse or settle in cash after a specified date may be re-granted under the Key Associate Stock Plan

During 2011 the Corporation issued approximately 193 million RSUs to certain employees under the Key Associate Stock Plan Certain awards are earned based on the achievement of specified performance criteria Vested RSUs may be settled in cash or in shares of common stock depending on the terms of the applicable award In 2011 approximately 126 million of these RSUs were authorized to be settled in shares of common stock Certain awards contain clawback provisions which permit the Corporation to cancel all or a portion of the award under specified circumstances The compensation cost for cash-settled awards and awards subject to certain clawback provisions is accrued over the vesting period and is adjusted to fair value based upon changes in the share price of the Corporation's common stock The compensation cost for the remaining awards is fixed and based on the share price of the Corporation's common stock on the date of grant The Corporation hedges a portion of its exposure to variability in the expected cash flows for certain unvested awards using a combination of economic and cash flow hedges as described in Note 4 – Derivatives

At December 31 2011 approximately 135 million options were outstanding under this plan There were no options granted under this plan during 2011 or 2010

Merrill Lynch Employee Stock Compensation Plan

The Corporation assumed the Merrill Lynch Employee Stock Compensation Plan with the acquisition of Merrill Lynch Approximately 8 million RSUs were granted in 2011 which generally vest in three equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date There were no shares granted under this plan during 2010 Awards granted in 2009 generally vest in three equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date, and awards granted prior to 2009 generally vest in four equal annual installments beginning one year from the grant date At December 31 2011 there were approximately 20 million shares outstanding

Other Stock Plans

As a result of the Merrill Lynch acquisition the Corporation assumed the obligations of outstanding awards granted under the Merrill Lynch Financial Advisor Capital Accumulation Award Plan (FACAAP) and the Merrill Lynch Employee Stock Purchase Plan (ESPP) The FACAAP is no longer an active plan and no awards were granted in 2011 or 2010 Awards granted in 2003 and thereafter are generally payable eight years from the grant date in a fixed number of the Corporation's common shares For outstanding awards granted prior to 2003 payment is generally made ten years from the grant date in a fixed number of the Corporation's common shares unless the fair value of such shares is less than a specified minimum value in which case the minimum value is paid in cash At December 31 2011 there were 12 million shares outstanding under this plan

The ESPP allows eligible employees to invest from one percent to 10 percent of eligible compensation to purchase the Corporation's common stock subject to legal limits. Purchases were made at a discount of five percent of the average high and low market price on the relevant purchase date and the maximum annual contribution per employee was $23,750 in 2011. Approximately 107 million shares were authorized for issuance under the ESPP in 2009. There were 6 million shares available at December 31, 2011.

The weighted average fair value of the ESPP stock purchase rights representing the five percent discount on the Corporation's common stock purchases exercised by employees in 2011 was $0.54 per stock purchase right.

At December 31, 2011, there was $1.2 billion of total unrecognized compensation cost related to share-based compensation arrangements for all awards and it is expected to be recognized over a period up to seven years with a weighted average period of 1.4 years. The total fair value of restricted stock vested in 2011 was $1.7 billion. In 2011, the amount of cash paid to settle equity-based awards was $489 million, which included cash settled RSUs not reflected in the Restricted Stock/Unit Details table.

Stock Options

The table below presents the status of all option plans at December 31, 2011 and changes during 2011. Outstanding options at December 31, 2011 include 21 million options under the Key Employee Stock Plan, 135 million options under the Key Associate Stock Plan and 52 million options to employees of predecessor company plans assumed in mergers.

Stock Options

	Options	Weighted-average Exercise Price
Outstanding at January 1, 2011	261,122,819	$ 50.61
Forfeited	(52,853,270)	65.12
Outstanding at December 31, 2011	208,269,549	46.83
Options exercisable at December 31, 2011	208,258,554	46.83
Options vested and expected to vest (1)	208,269,549	46.83

(1) Includes vested shares and nonvested shares after a forfeiture rate is applied.

At December 31, 2011, there was no aggregate intrinsic value of options outstanding, exercisable and vested and expected to vest. The weighted-average remaining contractual term of options outstanding was 2.7 years, options exercisable was 2.6 years, and options vested and expected to vest was 2.6 years at December 31, 2011. These remaining contractual terms are similar because options have not been granted since 2008 and they generally vest over three years.

NOTE 21 Income Taxes

The components of income tax expense (benefit) for 2011, 2010 and 2009 were as presented in the table below.

Income Tax Expense (Benefit)

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010	2009
Current income tax expense (benefit)
U.S. federal	$ (732)	$ (886)	$ (3,576)
U.S. state and local	869	158	555
Non-U.S.	618	815	735
Total current expense (benefit)	879	307	(2,286)
Deferred income tax expense (benefit)

Total deferred expense (benefit)	(1,648)	608	370
Total income tax expense (benefit)	$ (1,678)	$ 915	$ (1,916)

Total income tax expense (benefit) does not reflect the deferred tax effects of unrealized gains and losses on AFS debt and marketable equity securities, foreign currency translation adjustments, derivatives and employee benefit plan adjustments that are included in accumulated OCI. As a result of these tax effects, accumulated OCI increased $3.0 billion in 2011 and decreased $3.2 billion and $1.6 billion in 2010 and 2009. In addition, total income tax expense (benefit) does not reflect tax effects associated with the Corporation's employee stock plans which increased common stock and additional paid-in capital $19 million in 2011 and decreased common stock and additional paid-in capital $98 million and $295 million in 2010 and 2009.

Income tax expense (benefit) for 2011, 2010 and 2009 varied from the amount computed by applying the statutory income tax rate to income (loss) before income taxes. A reconciliation between the expected U.S. federal income tax expense using the federal statutory tax rate of 35 percent to the Corporation's actual income tax expense (benefit) and resulting effective tax rate for 2011, 2010 and 2009 is presented in the Reconciliation of Income Tax Expense (Benefit) table.

The reconciliation of the beginning unrecognized tax benefits (UTB) balance to the ending balance is presented in the table below.

Reconciliation of the Change in Unrecognized Tax Benefits

(Dollars in millions)	2011	2010	2009
Beginning balance	$ 5,169	$ 5,253	$ 3,541

Expiration of statute of limitations	(119)	(49)	(15)
Ending balance	$ 4,906	$ 5,169	$ 5,253

(1) The gain per year of positions taken during prior years differs from the $(339) million, $(349) million and $87 million in the Reconciliation of Income Tax Expense (Benefit) table due to temporary items and jurisdictional offsets, as well as the inclusion of interest in the Reconciliation of Income Tax Expense (Benefit) table.

At December 31 2011 2010 and 2009 the balance of the Corporation s UTBs which would if recognized affect the Corporation s effective tax rate was $3 3 billion $3 4 billion and $4 0 billion respectively Included in the UTB balance are some items the recognition of which would not affect the effective tax rate such as the tax effect of certain temporary differences the portion of gross state UTBs that would be offset by the tax benefit of the associated federal deduction and the portion of gross non-U S UTBs that would be offset by tax reductions in other jurisdictions

The Corporation files income tax returns in more than 100 state and non-U S jurisdictions each year The IRS and other tax authorities in countries and states in which it has significant business operations examine tax returns periodically (continuously in some jurisdictions) The Tax Examination Status table summarizes the status of significant examinations (U S federal unless otherwise noted) for the Corporation and various acquired subsidiaries as of December 31 2011

	Years under Examination (1)	Status at December 31, 2011
Bank of America Corporation - U S	2001 - 2009	See below
Bank of America Corporation - New York	1999 - 2003	Field examination
Merrill Lynch - U S	2004 - 2008	See below
Various - U K	2007 - 2009	Field examination
Fleet Boston - U S	2001 - 2004	In Appeals process

(1) All tax years subsequent to the years shown remain open to examination

During 2011 the Corporation and IRS made significant progress toward resolving all federal income tax examinations for Bank of America Corporation tax years through 2009 and Merrill Lynch tax years through 2008 While subject to final agreement, including review by the Joint Committee on Taxation of the U S Congress for certain years the Corporation believes that all federal examinations in the Tax Examination Status table may be concluded during 2012

Considering all examinations it is reasonably possible the UTB balance may decrease by as much as $2 6 billion during the next twelve months since resolved items will be removed from the balance whether their resolution results in payment or recognition If such decrease were to occur it likely would primarily result from outcomes consistent with management expectations

During 2011 and 2010 the Corporation recognized in income tax expense a benefit of $168 million and expense of $99 million for interest and penalties net-of-tax At December 31 2011 and 2010 the Corporation s accrual for interest and penalties that related to income taxes net of taxes and remittances was $787 million and $1 1 billion

Significant components of the Corporation s net deferred tax assets and liabilities at December 31 2011 and 2010 are presented in the Deferred Tax Assets and Liabilities table

The 2010 U S federal deferred tax asset excludes $56 million related to certain employee stock plan deductions that was recognized and increased additional paid-in capital in 2011

The table below summarizes the deferred tax assets and related valuation allowances recognized for the net operating loss and tax credit carryforwards at December 31 2011

NOL and Tax Credit Carryforwards

(Dollars in millions)	Deferred Tax Asset	Valuation Allowance	Net Deferred Tax Asset	First Year Expiring
Net operating losses - U S	$ 5 088	$ —	$ 5 088	After 2027
Net operating losses - U K	8 836	—	8 836	None (1)
Net operating losses - other non-U S	383	(251)	132	Various
Net operating losses - U S states (2)	1 879	(915)	964	Various
General business credits	2 327	—	2 327	After 2027
Foreign tax credits	2 183	(246)	1 937	After 2017

(1) The U K NOLs may be carried forward indefinitely
(2) The NOLs and related valuation allowances for U S states before consideration of federal deduction were $2 8 billion and $1 4 billion

The Corporation concluded that no valuation allowance is necessary to reduce the U K NOLs U S NOL and general business credit carryforwards since estimated future taxable income will be sufficient to utilize these assets prior to their expiration During 2011 the valuation allowance decreased due to the utilization of the remaining acquired capital loss carryforward and increased primarily against net operating loss carryforwards in non-U S and state jurisdictions

At December 31 2011 and 2010 U S federal income taxes had not been provided on $18 5 billion and $17 9 billion of undistributed earnings of non-U S subsidiaries earned prior to 1997 and after 1997 that have been reinvested for an indefinite period of time If the earnings were distributed an additional $2 5 billion and $2 6 billion of tax expense net of credits for non-U S taxes paid on such earnings and for the related non-U S withholding taxes would have resulted as of December 31 2011 and 2010

NOTE 22 Fair Value Measurements

Under applicable accounting guidance fair value is defined as the exchange price that would be received for an asset or paid to transfer a liability (an exit price) in the principal or most advantageous market for the asset or liability in an orderly transaction between market participants on the measurement date The Corporation determines the fair values of its financial instruments based on the fair value hierarchy established under applicable accounting guidance which requires an entity to maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs when measuring fair value There are three levels of inputs used to measure fair value For more information regarding the fair value hierarchy and how the Corporation measures fair value see Note 1 – Summary of Significant Accounting Principles The Corporation accounts for certain financial instruments under the fair value option For more information see Note 23 – Fair Value Option

Level 1, 2 and 3 Valuation Techniques

Financial instruments are considered Level 1 when the valuation is based on quoted prices in active markets for identical assets or liabilities Level 2 financial instruments are valued using quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities quoted prices in markets that are not active, or models using inputs that are observable or can be corroborated by observable market data for substantially the full term of the assets or liabilities Financial instruments are considered Level 3 when their values are determined using pricing models discounted cash flow methodologies or similar techniques and at least one significant model assumption or input is unobservable and when determination of the fair value requires significant management judgment or estimation

Trading Account Assets and Liabilities and Available-for-Sale Debt Securities

The fair values of trading account assets and liabilities are primarily based on actively traded markets where prices are based on either direct market quotes or observed transactions The fair values of AFS debt securities are generally based on quoted market prices or market prices for similar assets Liquidity is a significant factor in the determination of the fair values of trading account assets and liabilities and AFS debt securities Market price quotes may not be readily available for some positions or positions within a market sector where trading activity has slowed significantly or ceased Some of these instruments are valued using a discounted cash flow model which estimates the fair value of the securities using internal credit risk interest rate and prepayment risk models that incorporate management s best estimate of current key assumptions such as default rates loss severity and prepayment rates Principal and interest cash flows are discounted using an observable discount rate for similar instruments with adjustments that management believes a market participant would consider in determining fair value for the specific security Other instruments are valued using a net asset value approach which considers the value of the underlying securities Underlying assets are valued using external pricing services where available or matrix pricing based on the vintages and ratings Situations of illiquidity generally are triggered by the market s perception of credit uncertainty regarding a single company or a specific market sector In these instances fair value is determined based on limited available market information and other factors principally from reviewing the issuer s financial statements and changes in credit ratings made by one or more rating agencies

Derivative Assets and Liabilities

The fair values of derivative assets and liabilities traded in the OTC market are determined using quantitative models that utilize multiple market inputs including interest rates prices and indices to generate continuous yield or pricing curves and volatility factors to value the position The majority of market inputs are actively quoted and can be validated through external sources including brokers market transactions and third-party pricing services When third-party pricing services are used the methods and assumptions used are reviewed by the Corporation Estimation risk is greater for derivative asset and liability positions that are either option-based or have longer maturity dates where observable market inputs are less readily available or are unobservable in which case quantitative-based extrapolations of rate price or index scenarios are used in determining fair values The fair values of derivative assets and liabilities include adjustments for market liquidity counterparty credit quality and other instrument-specific factors where appropriate In addition the Corporation incorporates within its fair value measurements of OTC derivatives a valuation adjustment to reflect the credit risk associated with the net position Positions are netted by counterparty and fair value for net long exposures is adjusted for counterparty credit risk while the fair value for net short exposures is adjusted for the Corporation s own credit risk An estimate of severity of loss is also used in the determination of fair value primarily based on market data

Loans and Loan Commitments

The fair values of loans and loan commitments are based on market prices where available or discounted cash flow analyses using market-based credit spreads of comparable debt instruments or credit derivatives of the specific borrower or comparable borrowers Results of discounted cash flow calculations may be adjusted as appropriate to reflect other market conditions or the perceived credit risk of the borrower

Mortgage Servicing Rights

The fair values of MSRs are determined using models that rely on estimates of prepayment rates the resultant weighted-average lives of the MSRs and the OAS levels For more information on MSRs see Note 25 – Mortgage Servicing Rights

Loans Held-for-Sale

The fair values of LHFS are based on quoted market prices where available or are determined by discounting estimated cash flows using interest rates approximating the Corporation s current origination rates for similar loans adjusted to reflect the inherent credit risk

Other Assets

The fair values of AFS marketable equity securities are generally based on quoted market prices or market prices for similar assets However non-public investments are initially valued at the transaction price and subsequently adjusted when evidence is available to support such adjustments

Securities Financing Agreements

The fair values of certain reverse repurchase agreements repurchase agreements and securities borrowed transactions are determined using quantitative models including discounted cash flow models that require the use of multiple market inputs including interest rates and spreads to generate continuous yield or pricing curves and volatility factors The majority of market inputs are actively quoted and can be validated through external sources including brokers market transactions and third-party pricing services

Deposits and Other Short-term Borrowings

The fair values of deposits and other short-term borrowings are determined using quantitative models including discounted cash flow models that require the use of multiple market inputs including interest rates and spreads to generate continuous yield or pricing curves and volatility factors The majority of market inputs are actively quoted and can be validated through external sources including brokers market transactions and third-party pricing services The Corporation considers the impact of its own credit spreads in the valuation of these liabilities The credit risk is determined by reference to observable credit spreads in the secondary cash market

Long-term Debt

The Corporation issues structured liabilities that have coupons or repayment terms linked to the performance of debt or equity securities indices currencies or commodities The fair values of these structured liabilities are estimated using valuation models for the combined derivative and debt portions of the notes These models incorporate observable and in some instances unobservable inputs including security prices interest rate yield curves option volatility currency commodity or equity rates and correlations between these inputs The Corporation considers the impact of its own credit spreads in the valuation of these liabilities The credit risk is determined by reference to observable credit spreads in the secondary bond market

Asset-backed Secured Financings

The fair values of asset-backed secured financings are based on external broker bids where available or are determined by discounting estimated cash flows using interest rates approximating the Corporation s current origination rates for similar loans adjusted to reflect the inherent credit risk

Recurring Fair Value

Assets and liabilities carried at fair value on a recurring basis at December 31 2011 and 2010 including financial instruments which the Corporation accounts for under the fair value option are summarized in the following tables

Nonrecurring Fair Value

The Corporation held certain assets that are measured at fair value on a nonrecurring basis and are not included in the previous tables in this Note. These assets primarily include LHFS, certain loans and leases, and foreclosed properties. The amounts below represent only balances measured at fair value during 2011, 2010 and 2009 and still held as of the reporting date.

NOTE 23 Fair Value Option

Loans and Loan Commitments

The Corporation elected to account for certain consumer and commercial loans and loan commitments that exceeded the Corporation's single name credit risk concentration guidelines under the fair value option. Lending commitments, both funded and unfunded, are actively managed and monitored and, as appropriate, credit risk for these lending relationships may be mitigated through the use of credit derivatives, with the Corporation's public side credit view and market perspectives determining the size and timing of the hedging activity. These credit derivatives do not meet the requirements for designation as accounting hedges and therefore are carried at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in other income (loss). Electing the fair value option allows the Corporation to carry these loans and loan commitments at fair value, which is more consistent with management's view of the underlying economics and the manner in which they are managed. In addition, election of the fair value option allows the Corporation to reduce the accounting volatility that would otherwise result from the asymmetry created by accounting for the financial instruments at historical cost and the economic hedges at fair value. An immaterial portion of the changes in fair value for these loans was attributable to changes in borrower-specific credit risk.

Loans Held-for-Sale

The Corporation elected to account for residential mortgage LHFS, commercial mortgage LHFS and other LHFS under the fair value option with interest income on these LHFS recorded in other interest income. The changes in fair value are largely offset by hedging activities. An immaterial portion of the changes in fair value for these loans was attributable to changes in borrower-specific credit risk. Election of the fair value option allows the Corporation to reduce the accounting volatility that would otherwise result from the asymmetry created by accounting for the financial instruments at historical cost and the economic hedges at fair value. The Corporation has not elected to account for other LHFS under the fair value option primarily because these loans are floating-rate loans that are not economically hedged using derivative instruments.

Loans Reported as Trading Account Assets

The Corporation elected to account for certain loans that are risk-managed on a fair value basis under the fair value option. An immaterial portion of the changes in fair value for these loans was attributable to changes in borrower specific credit risk.

Other Assets

The Corporation elected to account for certain private equity investments that are not in an investment company under the fair value option as this measurement basis is consistent with applicable accounting guidance for similar investments that are in an investment company.

Securities Financing Agreements

The Corporation elected to account for certain securities financing agreements including resale and repurchase agreements under the fair value option based on the tenor of the agreements, which reflects the magnitude of the interest rate risk. The majority of securities financing agreements collateralized by U.S. government securities are not accounted for under the fair value option as these contracts are generally short-dated and therefore the interest rate risk is not significant.

Long-term Deposits

The Corporation elected to account for certain long-term fixed-rate and rate-linked deposits that are economically hedged with derivatives under the fair value option. Election of the fair value option allows the Corporation to reduce the accounting volatility that would otherwise result from the asymmetry created by accounting for the financial instruments at historical cost and the economic hedges at fair value. The Corporation did not elect to carry other long-term deposits at fair value because they were not economically hedged using derivatives.

Other Short-term Borrowings

The Corporation elected to account for certain other short-term borrowings under the fair value option because this debt is risk-managed on a fair value basis.

Long-term Debt

The Corporation elected to account for certain long-term debt, primarily structured liabilities, under the fair value option. This long-term debt is risk-managed on a fair value basis. Election of the fair value option allows the Corporation to reduce the accounting volatility that would otherwise result from the asymmetry created by accounting for these financial instruments at historical cost and the economic hedges at fair value.

Asset-backed Secured Financings

The Corporation elected to account for certain asset-backed secured financings, which are classified in other short-term borrowings, under the fair value option. Election of the fair value option allows the Corporation to reduce the accounting volatility that would otherwise result from the asymmetry created by accounting for the asset-backed secured financings at historical cost and the corresponding mortgage LHFS securing these financings at fair value.

The table below provides information about the fair value carrying amount and the contractual principal outstanding of assets and liabilities accounted for under the fair value option at December 31 2011 and 2010

NOTE 24 Fair Value of Financial Instruments

The fair values of financial instruments have been derived using methodologies described in Note 22 – Fair Value Measurements The following disclosures include financial instruments where only a portion of the ending balance at December 31 2011 and 2010 was carried at fair value on the Corporation's Consolidated Balance Sheet

Short-term Financial Instruments

The carrying value of short-term financial instruments including cash and cash equivalents time deposits placed federal funds sold and purchased resale and certain repurchase agreements and other short-term investments and borrowings approximates the fair value of these instruments These financial instruments generally expose the Corporation to limited credit risk and have no stated maturities or have short-term maturities and carry interest rates that approximate market The Corporation elected to account for certain repurchase agreements under the fair value option

Loans

Fair values were generally determined by discounting both principal and interest cash flows expected to be collected using an observable discount rate for similar instruments with adjustments that the Corporation believes a market participant would consider in determining fair value The Corporation estimates the cash flows expected to be collected using internal credit risk interest rate and prepayment risk models that incorporate the Corporation's best estimate of current key assumptions such as default rates loss severity and prepayment speeds for the life of the loan The carrying value of loans is presented net of the applicable allowance for loan losses and excludes leases The Corporation elected to account for certain large corporate loans that exceeded the Corporation s single name credit risk concentration guidelines under the fair value option

The fair value for certain deposits with stated maturities was determined by discounting contractual cash flows using current market rates for instruments with similar maturities The carrying value of non-U S time deposits approximates fair value For deposits with no stated maturities the carrying value was considered to approximate fair value and does not take into account the significant value of the cost advantage and stability of the Corporation s long-term relationships with depositors The Corporation accounts for certain long-term fixed-rate deposits that are economically hedged with derivatives under the fair value option

Long-term Debt

The Corporation uses quoted market prices when available to estimate fair value for its long term debt When quoted market prices are not available fair value is estimated based on current market interest rates and credit spreads for debt with similar terms and maturities The Corporation accounts for certain structured liabilities under the fair value option

Fair Value of Financial Instruments

The carrying values and fair values of certain financial instruments where only a portion of the ending balance at December 31 2011 and 2010 was carried at fair value are presented in the table below

NOTE 25 Mortgage Servicing Rights

The Corporation accounts for consumer MSRs at fair value with changes in fair value recorded in the Consolidated Statement of Income in mortgage banking income (loss) The Corporation economically hedges these MSRs with certain derivatives and securities including MBS and U S Treasuries The securities that economically hedge the MSRs are classified in other assets with changes in the fair value of the securities and the related interest income recorded in mortgage banking income (loss)

The table below presents activity for residential first-lien MSRs for 2011 and 2010 Commercial and residential reverse MSRs which are carried at the lower of carrying or market value and accounted for using the amortization method totaled $132 million and $277 million at December 31 2011 and 2010 and are not included in the tables in this Note

Mortgage loans serviced for investors (in billions)	$ 1,579	$ 1 628

(1) Represents the change in the expired value of the MSR asset due to the impact of contractual payments received during the period

(2) These amounts reflect changes in the expected MSR fair value largely due to observed changes in interest rates volatility spreads and the shape of the forward swap curve

(3) These amounts reflect periodic adjustments to the valuation model as well as changes in certain cash flow assumptions such as costs to service and ancillary income per loan

The Corporation uses an OAS valuation approach which factors in prepayment risk to determine the fair value of MSRs This approach consists of projecting servicing cash flows under multiple interest rate scenarios and discounting these cash flows using risk-adjusted discount rates The significant economic assumptions used in determining the fair value of MSRs at December 31 2011 and 2010 are presented below

Significant Economic Assumptions

	2011		2010
(Dollars in millions)	Fixed	Adjustable	Fixed	Adjustable
Weighted-average OAS	2.80%	5.41%	2 17%	5 12%
Weighted-average life in years	9.78	2.10	4 85	2 28

The table below presents the sensitivity of the weighted-average lives and fair value of MSRs to changes in modeled assumptions These sensitivities are hypothetical and should be used with caution As the amounts indicate changes in fair value based on variations in assumptions generally cannot be extrapolated because the relationship of the change in assumption to the change in fair value may not be linear Also the effect of a variation in a particular assumption on the fair value of MSRs that continue to be held by the Corporation is calculated without changing any other assumption In reality changes in one factor may result in changes in another which might magnify or counteract the sensitivities The below sensitivities do not reflect any hedge strategies that may be undertaken to mitigate such risk

Global Banking & Markets

GBAM provides advisory services financing securities clearing settlement and custody services globally to institutional investor clients in support of their investing and trading activities GBAM also works with commercial and corporate clients to provide debt and equity underwriting and distribution capabilities merger related and other advisory services and risk management products using interest rate equity credit currency and commodity derivatives foreign exchange fixed-income and mortgage-related products As a result of the Corporation s market-making activities in these products it may be required to manage positions in government securities equity and equity-linked securities high-grade and high-yield corporate debt securities commercial paper MBS and ABS Corporate banking services provide a wide range of lending related products and services integrated working capital management and treasury solutions to clients through the Corporation s network of offices and client relationship teams along with various product partners Corporate clients are generally defined as companies with annual sales greater than $2 billion

Global Wealth & Investment Management

GWIM provides comprehensive wealth management capabilities to a broad base of clients from emerging affluent to the ultra-high net worth These services include investment and brokerage services estate and financial planning fiduciary portfolio management cash and liability management and specialty asset management GWIM also provides retirement and benefit plan services philanthropic management and asset management to individual and institutional clients GWIM results are impacted by the migration of clients and their related deposit and loan balances to or from Deposits CRES and the ALM portfolio Migration in the current year includes the additional movement of balances to Merrill Edge which is in Deposits Subsequent to the date of migration the associated net interest income noninterest income and noninterest expense are recorded in the business to which the clients migrated

All Other

All Other consists of equity investment activities including Global Principal Investments Strategic and other investments and Corporate Investments All Other also includes liquidating businesses merger and restructuring charges ALM functions such as residential mortgage portfolio and investment securities and related activities including economic hedges and gains/losses on structured liabilities the impact of certain allocation methodologies and accounting hedge ineffectiveness Additionally All Other includes certain residential mortgage and discontinued real estate loans that are managed by CRES During 2011 the Corporation sold its Canadian consumer card business and is evaluating its remaining international consumer card operations As a result of these actions the international consumer card business results were moved to All Other from Card Services and prior periods have been reclassified

Basis of Presentation

The management accounting and reporting process derives segment and business results by utilizing allocation methodologies for revenue and expense The net income derived for the businesses is dependent upon revenue and cost allocations using an activity-based costing model funds transfer pricing and other methodologies and assumptions management believes are appropriate to reflect the results of the business

Total revenue net of interest expense includes net interest income on a fully taxable equivalent (FTE) basis and noninterest income The adjustment of net interest income to a FTE basis results in a corresponding increase in income tax expense The segment results also reflect certain revenue and expense methodologies that are utilized to determine net income The net interest income of the businesses includes the results of a funds transfer pricing process that matches assets and liabilities with similar interest rate sensitivity and maturity characteristics For presentation purposes in segments where the total of liabilities and equity exceeds assets which are generally deposit-taking segments the Corporation allocates assets to match liabilities Net interest income of the business segments also includes an allocation of net interest income generated by the Corporation s ALM activities

The Corporation s ALM activities include an overall interest rate risk management strategy that incorporates the use of interest rate contracts to manage fluctuations in earnings that are caused by interest rate volatility The Corporation s goal is to manage interest rate sensitivity so that movements in interest rates do not significantly adversely affect earnings and capital The majority of the Corporation s ALM activities are allocated to the business segments and fluctuate based on performance ALM activities include external product pricing decisions including deposit pricing strategies the effects of the Corporation s internal funds transfer pricing process and the net effects of other ALM activities

Certain expenses not directly attributable to a specific business segment are allocated to the segments The most significant of these expenses include data and item processing costs and certain centralized or shared functions Data processing costs are allocated to the segments based on equipment usage Item processing costs are allocated to the segments based on the volume of items processed for each segment The costs of certain centralized or shared functions are allocated based on methodologies that reflect utilization

The following tables present total revenue net of interest expense on a FTE basis and net income (loss) for 2011 2010 and 2009 and total assets at December 31 2011 and 2010 for each business segment as well as All Other

Item 9A. Controls And Procedures

Disclosure Controls and Procedures

As of the end of the period covered by this report and pursuant to Rule 13a-15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (Exchange Act) Bank of America s management including the Chief Executive Officer and Chief Financial Officer conducted an evaluation of the effectiveness and design of our disclosure controls and procedures (as that term is defined in Rule 13a-15(e) of the Exchange Act) Based upon that evaluation Bank of America s Chief Executive Officer and Chief Financial Officer concluded that Bank of America s disclosure controls and procedures were effective as of the end of the period covered by this report in recording processing summarizing and reporting information required to be disclosed within the time periods specified in the SEC s rules and forms

Report of Independent Registered Public Accounting Firm

To the Board of Directors of Bank of America Corporation:

We have examined based on criteria established in Internal Control – Integrated Framework issued by the Committee of Sponsoring Organizations of the Treadway Commission Bank of America Corporation s (the 'Corporation') assertion included under Item 9A that the Corporation s disclosure controls and procedures were effective as of December 31 2011 ('Management s Assertion) Disclosure controls and procedures mean controls and other procedures of an issuer that are designed to ensure that information required to be disclosed by an issuer in reports that it files or submits under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is recorded processed summarized and reported within the time periods specified in the Securities and Exchange Commission s rules and forms and that information required to be disclosed by an issuer in reports that it files or submits under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is accumulated and communicated to the issuer s management including its principal executive and principal financial officer or persons performing similar functions as appropriate to allow timely decisions regarding required disclosure The Corporation's management is responsible for maintaining effective disclosure controls and procedures and for Management s Assertion of the effectiveness of its disclosure controls and procedures Our responsibility is to express an opinion on Management s Assertion based on our examination

There are inherent limitations to disclosure controls and procedures Because of these inherent limitations effective disclosure controls and procedures can only provide reasonable assurance of achieving the intended objectives Disclosure controls and procedures may not prevent or detect and correct material misstatements and they may not identify all information relating to the Corporation to be accumulated and communicated to the Corporation s management to allow timely decisions regarding required disclosures Also projections of any evaluation of effectiveness to future periods are subject to the risk that disclosure controls and procedures may become inadequate because of changes in conditions or that the degree of compliance with the policies or procedures may deteriorate

We conducted our examination in accordance with attestation standards established by the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (United States) Those standards require that we plan and perform the examination to obtain reasonable assurance about whether effective disclosure controls and procedures were maintained in all material respects Our examination included obtaining an understanding of the Corporation s disclosure controls and procedures and testing and evaluating the design and operating effectiveness of the Corporation s disclosure controls and procedures based on the assessed risk Our examination also included performing such other procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances We believe that our examination provides a reasonable basis for our opinion Our examination was not conducted for the purpose of expressing an opinion and accordingly we express no opinion on the accuracy or completeness of the Corporation s disclosures in its reports or whether such disclosures comply with the rules and regulations adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission

In our opinion Management s Assertion that the Corporation s disclosure controls and procedures were effective as of December 31 2011 is fairly stated in all material respects based on criteria established in Internal Control – Integrated Framework issued by the Committee of Sponsoring Organizations of the Treadway Commission

AND

THE BANK OF NEW YORK MELLON TRUST COMPANY, N.A.

DATED AS OF DECEMBER 8, 2011

Supplement to Restated Junior Subordinated Debt Securities Indenture dated as of November 1, 2001, as supplemented

SIXTEENTH SUPPLEMENTAL INDENTURE

THIS SIXTEENTH SUPPLEMENTAL INDENTURE, dated as of December 8, 2011 (the "Sixteenth Supplemental Indenture"), between BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation (the "Company"), having its principal office at 100 North Tryon Street, Charlotte, North Carolina 28255, and THE BANK OF NEW YORK MELLON TRUST COMPANY, N.A. (formerly The Bank of New York Trust Company, N A), a national banking association, as successor Trustee (the "Trustee")

WITNESSETH:

WHEREAS, the Company and The Bank of New York Mellon (formerly The Bank of New York), as predecessor trustee, previously entered into a Restated Junior Subordinated Debt Securities Indenture dated as of November 1, 2001 (the "Base Indenture" and, as supplemented, the "Indenture");

WHEREAS, Section 9 01(i) of the Base Indenture provides that the Company and the Trustee may enter into indentures supplemental to the Indenture without the consent of any holder of Securities to establish the form and terms of the Company's Remarketable Floating Rate Junior Subordinated Notes due 2043 (the "Notes");

WHEREAS, pursuant to Section 9 01 of the Base Indenture, the Company and the Trustee entered into the Thirteenth Supplemental Indenture, dated as of February 16, 2007 (the "Thirteenth Supplemental Indenture"), to establish the form and terms of the Notes,

WHEREAS, on February 16, 2007, the Company issued $700,100,000 aggregate principal amount of the Notes to BAC Capital Trust XIII (the "Trust"), a Delaware statutory trust, in connection with the Trust's public offering of its securities known as Floating Rate Preferred Hybrid Income Securities (the "Preferred HITS");

WHEREAS, Section 9 01(h) of the Base Indenture provides that the Company and the Trustee may enter into indentures supplemental to the Indenture without the consent of any holder of Securities to make any change that does not adversely affect the rights of any Securityholder in any material respect;

WHEREAS, the Company has requested that the Trustee execute and deliver this Sixteenth Supplemental Indenture,

WHEREAS, the conditions set forth in the Indenture for the execution and delivery of this Sixteenth Supplemental Indenture have been satisfied,

WHEREAS, all things necessary to make this Sixteenth Supplemental Indenture a valid agreement of the Company and the Trustee, in accordance with its terms, and a valid amendment of, and supplement to, the Indenture have been done,

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the foregoing and for other good and valuable consideration, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, it is mutually covenanted and agreed that the Indenture is supplemented and amended to the extent and for the purposes expressed herein, as follows

Number Granted :

Note The number of Restricted Stock Units is based on a "divisor price" of $7 95, which is the ten-day average closing price of Bank of America Corporation common stock for the ten business days immediately preceding and including February 15, 2012

This Restricted Stock Units Award Agreement and all Exhibits hereto (the "Agreement") is made between Bank of America Corporation, a Delaware corporation ("Bank of America"), and you, an employee of Bank of America or one of its Subsidiaries

Bank of America sponsors the Bank of America Corporation 2003 Key Associate Stock Plan (the "Stock Plan") A Prospectus describing the Stock Plan has been delivered to you The Stock Plan itself is available upon request, and its terms and provisions are incorporated herein by reference When used herein, the terms which are defined in the Stock Plan shall have the meanings given to them in the Stock Plan, as modified herein (if applicable)

The Restricted Stock Units covered by this Agreement are being awarded to you, subject to the following terms and provisions

1 Subject to the terms and conditions of the Stock Plan and this Agreement, Bank of America awards to you the number of Restricted Stock Units shown above Each Restricted Stock Unit shall have a value equal to the Fair Market Value of one (1) share of Bank of America common stock

2 You acknowledge having read the Prospectus and agree to be bound by all the terms and conditions of the Stock Plan and this Agreement

3 The Restricted Stock Units covered by this Award shall become earned by, and payable to, you in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Stock Plan and this Agreement, in the amounts and on the dates shown on the enclosed Exhibit A

4 If a cash dividend is paid with respect to Bank of America common stock, you shall not receive any dividend equivalents, additional full or fractional Restricted Stock Units or other cash payments with respect to such cash dividends

5 You may designate a beneficiary to receive payment in connection with the Restricted Stock Units awarded hereunder in the event of your death while in service with Bank of America or its Subsidiaries in accordance with Bank of America's beneficiary designation procedures, as in effect from time to time If you do not designate a beneficiary or if your designated beneficiary does not survive you, then your beneficiary will be your estate

6 The existence of this Award shall not affect in any way the right or power of Bank of America or its stockholders to make or authorize any or all adjustments, recapitalizations, reorganizations or other changes in Bank of America's capital structure or its business, or any merger or consolidation of Bank of America, or any issue of bonds, debentures, preferred or prior preference stocks ahead of or convertible into, or otherwise affecting the Bank of America common stock or the rights thereof, or the dissolution or liquidation of Bank of America, or any sale or transfer of all or any part of its assets or business, or any other corporate act or proceeding, whether of a similar character or otherwise

7 Bank of America may, in its sole discretion, decide to deliver any documents related to this grant or future Awards that may be granted under the Stock Plan by electronic means or request your consent to participate in the Stock Plan by electronic means You hereby consent to receive such documents by electronic delivery and, if requested, agree to participate in the Stock Plan through an on-line or electronic system established and maintained by Bank of America or a third party designated by Bank of America

Any notice which either party hereto may be required or permitted to give to the other shall be in writing and may be delivered personally, by intraoffice mail, by fax, by electronic mail or other electronic means, or via a postal service, postage prepaid, to such electronic mail or postal address and directed to such person as Bank of America may notify you from time to time, and to you at your electronic mail or postal address as shown on the records of Bank of America from time to time, or at such other electronic mail or postal address as you, by notice to Bank of America, may designate in writing from time to time

8 You agree that the Award covered by this Agreement is subject to the Incentive Compensation Recoupment Policy set forth in the Bank of America Corporate Governance Guidelines To the extent allowed by and consistent with applicable law and any applicable limitations period, if it is determined at any time that you have engaged in Detrimental Conduct or engaged in any hedging or derivative transactions involving Bank of America common stock in violation of the Bank of America Corporation Code of Ethics that would undermine the performance incentives created by the Award, Bank of America will be entitled to recover from you in its sole discretion some or all of the cash paid to you pursuant to this Agreement You recognize that if you engage in Detrimental Conduct or any hedging or derivative transactions involving Bank of America common stock, the losses to Bank of America and/or its Subsidiaries may amount to the full value of any cash paid to you pursuant to this Agreement In addition, the Award is subject to the requirements of (i) Section 954 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (regarding recovery of erroneously awarded compensation) and any implementing rules and regulations thereunder, (ii) similar rules under the laws of any other jurisdiction and (iii) any policies adopted by Bank of America to implement such requirements, all to the extent determined by Bank of America in its discretion to be applicable to you

9 Regardless of any action Bank of America or your employer takes with respect to any or all income tax, payroll tax or other tax-related withholding ("Tax-Related Items"), you acknowledge that the ultimate liability for all Tax-Related Items owed by you is and remains your responsibility and may exceed the amount actually withheld by Bank of America or your employer You further acknowledge that Bank of America and/or your employer (i) make no representations or undertakings regarding the treatment of any Tax-Related Items in connection with any aspect of the grant of Restricted Stock Units, including the grant and vesting of the Restricted Stock Units or payout of the Award, and (ii) do not commit to structure the terms of the grant or any aspect of the Restricted Stock Units to reduce or eliminate your liability for Tax-Related Items Further, if you have become subject to the Tax-Related Items in connection with the Award in more than one jurisdiction, you acknowledge that Bank of America or your employer (or former employer, as applicable) may be required to withhold or account for Tax-Related Items in more than one jurisdiction

In the event Bank of America determines that it and/or your employer must withhold any Tax-Related Items as a result of your participation in the Stock Plan, you agree as a condition of the grant of the Restricted Stock Units to make arrangements satisfactory to Bank of America and/or your employer to enable it to satisfy all withholding requirements, including, but not limited to, withholding any applicable Tax-Related Items from the pay-out of the Restricted Stock Units In addition, you authorize Bank of America and/or your employer to fulfill its withholding obligations by all legal means, including, but not limited to, withholding Tax-Related Items from your wages, salary or other cash compensation your employer pays to you Bank of America may refuse to pay any earned Restricted Stock Units if you fail to comply with any withholding obligation

10 The validity, construction and effect of this Agreement are governed by, and subject to, the laws of the State of Delaware and the laws of the United States, as provided in the Stock Plan For purposes of litigating any dispute that arises directly or indirectly from the relationship of the parties evidenced by this Award or this Agreement, the parties hereby submit to and consent to the exclusive jurisdiction of North Carolina and agree that such litigation shall be conducted solely in the courts of Mecklenburg County, North Carolina or the federal courts for the United States for the Western District of North Carolina, where this grant is made and/or to be performed, and no other courts

11 In the event any provision of this Agreement shall be held illegal or invalid for any reason, the illegality or invalidity shall not affect the remaining parts of the Agreement, and the Agreement shall be construed and enforced as if the illegal or invalid provision had not been included. This Agreement constitutes the final understanding between you and Bank of America regarding the Restricted Stock Units Any prior agreements, commitments or negotiations concerning the Restricted Stock Units are superseded Subject to the terms of the Stock Plan, this Agreement may only be amended by a written instrument signed by both parties

12 If you move to any country other than the one in which you are currently working during the term of your Award, additional terms and conditions may apply to your Award Bank of America reserves the right to impose other requirements on the Award to the extent Bank of America determines it is necessary or advisable in order to comply with local law or facilitate the administration of the Award and to require you to sign any additional agreements or undertakings that may be necessary to accomplish the foregoing

PAYMENT OF PERFORMANCE CONTINGENT RESTRICTED STOCK UNITS

(a) PERFORMANCE-BASED VESTING SCHEDULE AND SETTLEMENT DATES

(i) Performance Vesting Schedule and Settlement Dates Subject to the additional conditions set forth in paragraph (a)(iv) below, the number of Restricted Stock Units that are earned for a Performance Period equals (A) the total number of Restricted Stock Units granted times (B) the percentage earned in accordance with the following table, rounded down to the next whole unit and reduced by the number of Restricted Stock Units earned for any prior Performance Period

Return on Assets for the Performance Period	Percentage of Restricted Stock Units Earned
Less than 50 basis points	0%
50 basis points	33-1/3%
65 basis points	66-2/3%
80 basis points or higher	100%

The percentage earned for performance between 50 basis points and 65 basis points or between 65 basis points and 80 basis points in any Performance Period shall be interpolated on a straight line basis If Return on Assets does not equal at least 50 basis points for any Performance Period, then the Restricted Stock Units shall be canceled as of the completion of the final Performance Period

(ii) Annual Determinations The determination as to whether, and the extent to which, the performance vesting requirements of this paragraph (a) have been satisfied for any Performance Period ending during a calendar year shall be made as soon as practicable after the end of the calendar year, and such results must be certified in writing by the Committee before settlement

(iii) Settlement Dates The "Settlement Date" for any portion of the Award that satisfies the performance vesting requirements under this paragraph (a) during a calendar year shall be March 1 of the immediately following calendar year, provided, however, that the earliest Settlement Date for any portion of the Award shall be March 1, 2015 On the applicable Settlement Date, to the extent earned, the Restricted Stock Units payable as of such Settlement Date shall be settled by issuing one (1) share of Bank of America common stock for each Restricted Stock Unit that is payable Settlement shall occur as soon as administratively practicable after the applicable Settlement Date, generally within 30 days

(iv) Additional Conditions For any portion of the Award payable as of a Settlement Date, you must remain employed with Bank of America and its Subsidiaries through such Settlement Date except as otherwise provided in paragraphs (b) and (c) below In addition, payment as of each Settlement Date is subject to your complying with the covenants set forth in paragraph (d) below and the additional performance condition set forth in paragraph (e) below

(b) IMPACT OF TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT ON RESTRICTED STOCK UNITS If your employment with Bank of America and its Subsidiaries terminates prior to a Settlement Date, then (A) any Restricted Stock Units otherwise payable as of such Settlement Date plus (B) any other Restricted Stock Units that have not yet satisfied the performance vesting requirements of paragraph (a) above as of such Settlement Date (collectively, the "Unearned Restricted Stock Units") (together with any related dividend equivalents) shall become earned and payable or be canceled depending on the reason for termination as follows

(i) Death Any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall become immediately earned and payable as of the date of your termination of employment if your termination is due to death Payment will be made as soon as administratively practicable, generally within 30 days after notification of termination from the payroll system

(ii) Disability If your employment is terminated by Bank of America or its Subsidiaries due to Disability, then your Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall continue to become earned and payable in accordance with paragraph (a) above (without regard to whether you are employed by Bank of America and its Subsidiaries as of each applicable Settlement Date), subject to your complying with the covenants set forth in paragraph (d) below and to the additional performance condition set forth in paragraph (e) below

(iii) Termination by Bank of America With Cause If your employment is terminated by Bank of America or its Subsidiaries with Cause, then any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall be immediately canceled as of the date of your termination of employment

(iv) Change in Control Notwithstanding anything in this Agreement to the contrary, if (A) a Change in Control occurs and (B) on or after the Change in Control and on or before the second anniversary of the Change in Control either (1) your employment is terminated by Bank of America or its Subsidiaries without Cause or (2) you terminate your employment with Bank of America or its Subsidiaries for Good Reason, then any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall become immediately earned as of the date of such termination and shall be payable as of the immediately following Settlement Date, without regard to the covenants set forth in paragraph (d) below or the additional performance condition set forth in paragraph (e) below

(v) All Other Terminations In case of All Other Terminations, unless you have attained the Rule of 60 as described below, any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall be immediately canceled as of the date of your termination of employment [For Mr Montag Notwithstanding the foregoing or any other provision herein to the contrary, in accordance with the terms of your offer letter dated May 1, 2008, if your employment is terminated by Bank of America without "Cause" or you terminate your employment for "Good Reason" (as such terms are defined in your offer letter), then your

Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall continue to become earned and payable in accordance with paragraph (a) above (without regard to whether you are employed by Bank of America and its Subsidiaries as of each applicable Settlement Date), subject to your complying with the covenants set forth in paragraph (d) below and to the additional performance condition set forth in paragraph (e) below]

(c) RULE OF 60 If your employment terminates for any reason other than death, Disability, Cause or in connection with a Change in Control as described in paragraph (b)(iv) above after you have attained the Rule of 60, then any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall continue to become earned and payable in accordance with paragraph (a) above (without regard to whether you are employed by Bank of America and its Subsidiaries as of each applicable Settlement Date) subject to the performance condition in paragraph (e) below, provided that (i) to the extent permissible under applicable law, you do not engage in Competition during such period, (ii) you comply with the covenants described in paragraph (d) below and (iii) prior to each applicable Settlement Date, you provide Bank of America with a written certification that you have not engaged in Competition to the extent the Competition restriction in (i) above is applicable To be effective, such certification must be provided on such form, at such time and pursuant to such procedures as Bank of America shall establish from time to time If Bank of America determines in its reasonable business judgment that you have failed to satisfy any of the foregoing requirements, then any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) shall be immediately canceled as of the date of such determination In addition, from time to time following your termination of employment after having attained the Rule of 60, Bank of America may require you to further certify that you are not engaging in Competition, and if you fail to fully cooperate with any such requirement Bank of America may determine that you are engaging in Competition

(i) Non-Solicitation You agree that during any period in which Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) remain payable, (A) you will not directly or indirectly solicit or recruit for employment or encourage to leave employment with Bank of America or its Subsidiaries, on your own behalf or on behalf of any other person or entity other than Bank of America or its Subsidiaries, any person who is an employee of Bank of America and its Subsidiaries and (B) to the extent permissible under applicable law, you will not, directly or indirectly, on your own behalf or on behalf of any other person or entity other than Bank of America or its Subsidiaries, solicit any client or customer of Bank of America and its Subsidiaries which you actively solicited or with whom you worked or otherwise had material contact in the course of your employment with Bank of America and its Subsidiaries

(ii) Detrimental Conduct You agree that during any period in which Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) remain payable, you will not engage in Detrimental Conduct

(iii) Hedging or Derivative Transactions You agree that during any period in which Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) remain payable, you will not engage in any hedging or derivative transactions involving Bank of America common stock in violation of the Bank of America Corporation Code of Ethics that would undermine the long-term performance incentive created by the Restricted Stock Units

(iv) Remedies Payment of Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) on any Settlement Date is specifically conditioned on the requirement that at all times prior to the Settlement Date, you do not engage in solicitation, Detrimental Conduct or hedging or derivative transactions, as described in paragraphs (d)(i), (ii) and (iii), during such period If Bank of America determines in its reasonable business judgment that you have failed to satisfy such requirements, then any Unearned Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) as of the date of such determination shall be canceled as of such date of determination

(e) PERFORMANCE CONDITION In order to encourage sustainable, long-term performance, payment of Restricted Stock Units (and any related dividend equivalents) on any Settlement Date is specifically conditioned on Bank of America or its lines of business remaining profitable during the calendar year preceding the applicable Settlement Date If a loss is determined to have occurred

(i) with respect to Bank of America, if you are the Chief Executive Officer, Chief Financial Officer, any Chief Executive Officer direct report who does not lead a line of business who is part of a key control function (such as audit, compliance, human resources, legal, risk, etc), or

(ii) with respect to Bank of America or the applicable line of business, if you lead a line of business, then your accountability for such loss will be determined, taking into account such factors as (i) the magnitude of the loss (including positive or negative variance from plan), (ii) your degree of involvement (including such factors as your current or former leadership role with respect to Bank of America or line of business, and the degree to which you were involved in decisions that are determined to have contributed to the loss), (iii) your performance and (iv) such other factors as deemed appropriate The Committee, together with key control functions, will review losses and your accountability The Committee will then make a final determination to either take no action or to cancel all or a portion of the Restricted Stock Units otherwise payable as of the applicable Settlement Date. All such determinations will be final and binding

(f) DEFINITIONS For purposes hereof, the following terms shall have the following meanings

BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION AND DESIGNATED SUBSIDIARIES
SUPPLEMENTAL EXECUTIVE RETIREMENT PLAN FOR SENIOR MANAGEMENT EMPLOYEES

ARTICLE I
NAME AND PURPOSE

Section 1 1 Name The Plan shall be known as the "Bank of America Corporation and Designated Subsidiaries Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan for Senior Management Employees " Prior to January 1, 1992 the Plan was known as the "NCNB Corporation and Designated Subsidiaries Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan for Senior Management Employees "

Section 1 2 Purpose The purpose of the Plan is to provide certain Employees of the Participating Employers who are designated as Participants in this Plan with certain benefits in accordance with the provisions of the Plan

ARTICLE II
CONSTRUCTION, DEFINITIONS AND APPLICABLE LAW

Section 2 1 Construction and Definitions

(a) Construction Article, section and paragraph headings have been inserted for convenience of reference only in the Plan and are to be ignored in any construction of the provisions hereof If any provision of the Plan shall for any reason be invalid or unenforceable, the remaining provisions shall nevertheless be valid, enforceable and fully effective

(b) Definitions Whenever used in the Plan, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the following terms shall have the following meanings

(1) Assumed Retirement Benefit means, with respect to a Participant as of any date, the sum of annual benefits, if any, which would have been payable to such Participant as of such date under the Retirement Plan and the ERISA Supplemental Plan assuming for such purpose

(A) in the case of a married Participant, that the Participant had elected to receive such benefits in the form of a "modified joint and survivor annuity"

with the survivor annuity for such Participant's spouse being equal to sixty-six and two-thirds percent (66-2/3%) of the benefit payable during the joint lives of the Participant and such spouse, and

(B) in the case of an unmarried Participant, that the Participant had elected to receive such benefits in the form of a "ten-year certain and life annuity."

The foregoing assumptions are made solely for the purpose of determining the benefits, if any, payable under this Plan, and such assumptions shall be applied regardless of the actual method of payment used to provide such Participant's benefits under the Retirement Plan or the ERISA Supplemental Plan

(2) Base Salary means, with respect to a Participant, the "base salary" payable to such Participant from time to time as remuneration for hours of employment by a Participating Employer determined without regard to (i) any deferrals pursuant to the Deferred Compensation Plan, (ii) any salary reduction pursuant to the Group Benefits Plan, and (iii) any salary reduction pursuant to the Thrift Plan

(3) Beneficiary means the person(s) or entity(ies) designated by a Participant or the provisions of the Plan to receive such benefits as may become payable to such person(s) or entity(ies) in accordance with the provisions of the Plan

(4) Bonus(es) means, with respect to a Participant, any bonus(es) payable to such Participant pursuant to

(A) the Corporate Management Incentive Plan, and

(B) any other similar incentive compensation plan of the Participating Employers approved for purposes of this Plan by the Compensation Committee determined without regard to any deferrals pursuant to the Deferred Compensation Plan

(5) Child or Children means, with respect to a Participant, each child born to or "adopted" by such Participant A person shall be considered "adopted" if adopted for life and either (i) the final order of adoption has been entered or (ii) the adoption proceeding has been instituted and the adopted person is in the custody and possession of the adoptive parent(s) and final decree is entered within a period not to exceed three (3) years after the date of the institution of said adoption proceeding

(6) Claim means a claim for benefits under the Plan

(7) Claimant means a person making a Claim

(8) Compensation means, with respect to a Participant, the Base Salary and Bonus(es), if any, payable to such Participant from time to time by a Participating Employer Compensation shall not include

(A) awards, overtime pay, shift premium, or other incentive compensation or extra or special remuneration of any kind which is not a Bonus,

(B) any other sums paid by the Participating Employers on account of any health, welfare or group insurance benefits (exclusive of sick pay), including "Basic Employer Contributions" under the Group Benefits Plan, or on account of reimbursement of relocation expenses, regardless of whether such sums are taxable income to the Participant, or

(C) any compensation pursuant to any other employee benefit plan, including without limitation any sums selected to be received in cash pursuant to any such plan

Amounts of Base Salary or Bonus(es) which are deferred pursuant to the Deferred Compensation Plan or the subject of salary reduction pursuant to the Group Benefits Plan or the Thrift Plan shall be treated as Compensation for purposes of this Plan for the calendar year in which such amount would have been otherwise paid to a Participant by a Participating Employer but for such deferral or salary reduction For any period in which the Corporate Management Incentive Plan is in effect after the Effective Date, Bonus(es) under the Corporate Management Incentive Plan shall be treated as Compensation for purposes of this Plan for the calendar year in which such amount is earned by a Participant, regardless of when such amount is actually paid to such Participant

(9) Compensation Committee means the Compensation Committee of the Board of Directors of Bank of America Corporation

(10) Creditable Service means, with respect to a Participant as of any date, the sum of (A) and (B) where

(A) is such Participant's months of "Creditable Service" as of such date determined in accordance with the provisions of the Retirement Plan, and

(B) is such additional number of months, if any, determined in the sole and exclusive discretion of the Compensation Committee at the time such Participant commences participation in the Plan

(11) Deferred Compensation Plan means any non-qualified deferred compensation plan maintained by the Corporation for the benefit of a select group of management or highly compensated employees

(12) Delayed Retirement means, with respect to a Participant, such Participant's separation from Service after the Plan Year in which such Participant attains the Normal Retirement Age

(13) Delayed Retirement Benefit means, with respect to a Participant, an annual amount equal to (A) minus (B) where

(46) Change of Control means, and shall be deemed to have occurred upon, any of the following events

(A) The acquisition by any person, individual, entity or "group" (within the meaning of Section 13(d)(3) or 14(d)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (the "Exchange Act")) (collectively, a "Person") of Beneficial Ownership (within the meaning of Rule 13d-3 promulgated under the Exchange Act) of twenty-five percent (25%) or more of either

(i) The then-outstanding shares of common stock of the Corporation (the "Outstanding Shares"), or

(ii) The combined voting power of the then-outstanding voting securities of the Corporation entitled to vote generally in the election of directors of the Corporation (the "Outstanding Voting Securities").

provided, however, that the following acquisitions shall not constitute a Change of Control for purposes of this subparagraph (a) (A) any acquisition directly from the Corporation, (B) any acquisition by the Corporation or any of its subsidiaries, (C) any acquisition by any employee benefit plan (or related trust) sponsored or maintained by the Corporation or any of its subsidiaries, or (D) any acquisition by any corporation pursuant to a transaction which complies with clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) of subparagraph (C) below, or

(B) Individuals who, as of September 30, 1998, constitute the Board of Directors of the Corporation (the "Incumbent Board") cease for any reason to constitute at least a majority of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, provided, however, that any individual who becomes a director subsequent to September 30, 1998 and whose election, or whose nomination for election by the Corporation's shareholders, to the Board of Directors of the Corporation was either (i) approved by a vote of at least a majority of the directors then comprising the Incumbent Board or (ii) recommended by a nominating committee comprised entirely of directors who are then Incumbent Board members shall be considered as though such individual were a member of the Incumbent Board, but excluding, for this purpose, any such individual whose initial assumption of office occurs as a result of either an actual or threatened election contest (as such terms are used in Rule 14a-11 of Regulation 14A promulgated under the Exchange Act), other actual or threatened solicitation of proxies or consents or an actual or threatened tender offer, or

(C) Approval by the Corporation's shareholders of a reorganization, merger, or consolidation or sale or other disposition of all or substantially all of the assets of the Corporation (a "Business Combination"), in each case, unless following such Business Combination, (i) all or substantially all of the Persons who were the Beneficial Owners (within the meaning of Rule 13d-3 promulgated under the Exchange Act), respectively, of the Outstanding Shares and Outstanding Voting Securities immediately prior to such Business Combination own, directly or indirectly, more than fifty percent (50%) of, respectively, the then outstanding shares of common stock and the combined voting power of the then outstanding voting securities entitled to vote generally in the election of directors, as the case may be, of the corporation resulting from the Business Combination (including, without limitation, a corporation which as a result of such transaction owns the Corporation or all or substantially all of the Corporation's assets either directly or through one or more subsidiaries) in substantially the same proportions as their ownership, immediately prior to such Business Combination, of the Outstanding Shares and Outstanding Voting Securities, as the case may be (provided, however, that for purposes of this clause (i), any shares of common stock or voting securities of such resulting corporation received by such Beneficial Owners in such Business Combination other than as the result of such Beneficial Owners' ownership of Outstanding Shares or Outstanding Voting Securities immediately prior to such Business Combination shall not be considered to be owned by such Beneficial Owners for the purposes of calculating their percentage of ownership of the outstanding common stock and voting power of the resulting corporation), (ii) no Person (excluding any corporation resulting from such Business Combination or any employee benefit plan (or related trust) of the Corporation or such corporation resulting from the Business Combination) beneficially owns, directly or indirectly, twenty-five percent (25%) or more of, respectively, the then outstanding shares of common stock of the corporation resulting from the Business Combination or the combined voting power of the then outstanding voting securities of such corporation unless such Person owned twenty-five percent (25%) or more of, respectively, the Outstanding Shares or Outstanding Voting Securities immediately prior to the Business Combination and (iii) at least a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation resulting from such Business Combination were members of the Incumbent Board at the time of the execution of the initial agreement, or the action of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, providing for such Business Combination, or

(D) Approval by the Corporation's shareholders of a complete liquidation or dissolution of the Corporation

Notwithstanding the foregoing, a Change of Control shall not be deemed to have occurred for purposes of this Plan as a result of the transactions contemplated by that certain Agreement and Plan of Reorganization between the Corporation and BankAmerica Corporation dated April 10, 1998

(47) Commuted Payment Amount means the sum of (A) and (B) where

(A) is an amount equal to the actuarial equivalent single sum value of certain benefits payable under the Plan to the subject Participant, Beneficiary, Spouse or Eligible Spouse calculated as of the date of a Change of Control or other determination date, as applicable, using the actuarial assumptions and procedures set forth on Exhibit B which is attached hereto and hereby made a part hereof, provided, however, solely for the purposes of determining such amount, it shall be assumed that a Participant not currently receiving benefits under the Plan as of the date of such Change of Control or other determination date, as applicable, had separated from Service on such date, and

(B) is an amount equal to the balance, if any, to a subject Participant's credit in the reserve account referred to in Section 4 8 of the Plan accrued through the date of a Change of Control or other determination date, as applicable

(48) Corporation means Bank of America Corporation, a Delaware corporation

after such Participant's death shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of such Joint and Sixty-Six and Two-Thirds Percent (66-2/3%) Annuity or Ten-Year Certain and Life Annuity, as applicable, pursuant to which such Participant was receiving or entitled to receive benefits at the time of such Participant's death

(b) Death of a Disabled Participant Except as provided in Section 4 6(d), in the event (i) a Participant becomes Disabled prior to the attainment of the Normal Retirement Age and prior to being eligible for Early Retirement, (ii) such Participant dies prior to the Normal Retirement Age without recovering from such Disability, and (iii) such Participant is survived by an Eligible Spouse or one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, the Eligible Spouse of such Participant, or such Participant's Beneficiary, as applicable, shall be entitled to the death benefit provided for in Section 4 6(c)(1) Except as provided in Section 4 6(d), in the event (i) a Participant becomes Disabled prior to the attainment of the Normal Retirement Age, but after being eligible for Early Retirement, (ii) such Participant does not elect pursuant to Section 4 5(f) to receive such Participant's Early Retirement Benefit, (iii) such Participant dies prior to the Normal Retirement Age without recovering from such Disability, and (iv) such Participant is survived by an Eligible Spouse or one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, the Eligible Spouse of such Participant, or such Participant's Beneficiary, as applicable, shall be entitled to the death benefit provided for in Section 4 6(c)(2)

(c) Death While in Service In the event a Participant dies while in Service, the death benefits, if any, payable following such Participant's death, shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of this Section 4 6(c)

(1) Death Prior to Eligibility for Early Retirement Except as provided in Section 4 6(d), in the event a Participant dies while in Service [or, to the extent provided in Section 4 6(b), while Disabled] and prior to such Participant becoming eligible for Early Retirement, the following provisions shall apply

(A) In the event the deceased Participant is survived by an Eligible Spouse, such Eligible Spouse shall become entitled to such Participant's Family Death Benefit in a monthly amount equal to one-twelfth (1/12) of the annual amount of such Family Death Benefit Such monthly benefit shall commence on the last day of the month following the month in which the Participant dies and continue through the last day of the month in which the Family Death Benefit Termination Date occurs In the event such Eligible Spouse dies prior to the Family Death Benefit Termination Date, such monthly benefit shall be paid to the estate of such deceased Eligible Spouse through the last day of the month in which the Family Death Benefit Termination Date occurs

(B) In the event the deceased Participant is not survived by an Eligible Spouse but the deceased Participant is survived by one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, the Beneficiary of the deceased Participant shall become entitled to such Participant's Family Death Benefit in a monthly amount equal to one-twelfth (1/12) of the annual amount of such Family Death Benefit Such monthly benefit shall commence on the last day of the month following the month in which the Participant dies and continue through the last day of the month in which the Family Death Benefit Termination Date occurs

(C) In the event the deceased Participant is survived neither by an Eligible Spouse nor by one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, no death benefit shall be payable under Section 4 6(c)

The benefits under this Section 4 6(c)(1) shall be subject to the provisions of Section 4 7(a)

(2) Death After Eligibility for Early Retirement Except as provided in Section 4 6(d), in the event a Participant dies while in Service [or, to the extent provided in Section 4 6(b), while Disabled] and after becoming eligible for Early Retirement, the following provisions shall apply

(A) In the event the deceased Participant is survived by an Eligible Spouse, such Eligible Spouse shall receive a monthly payment for the life of such Eligible Spouse commencing on the first day of the month following the month in which such Participant dies in an amount equal to the greater of

(i) one-twelfth (1/12) of the annual amount of the Family Death Benefit, or

(ii) sixty-six and two-thirds percent (66-2/3%) of the deceased Participant's Target Retirement Benefit, reduced in accordance with the provisions of Section 2 1(b)(17) as though the Participant had retired on the date of the Participant's death, minus the sum of (A) the monthly life annuity that is the actuarial equivalent of the benefits payable to such Eligible Spouse from the Retirement Plan and the ERISA Supplemental Plan and (B) sixty-six and two-thirds percent (66-2/3%) of the deceased Participant's Social Security Benefit

In the event that the Eligible Spouse dies prior to the time the last Child of the deceased Participant attains age twenty-one (21), then in addition to the foregoing benefit, the Family Death Benefit shall be paid after the death of the Eligible Spouse until the Family Death Benefit Termination Date in the manner set forth in Section 4 6(c)(1)(A)

(B) In the event the deceased Participant is not survived by an Eligible Spouse, but the deceased Participant is survived by one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, the Beneficiary of the deceased Participant shall become entitled to such Participant's Family Death Benefit in accordance with the provisions of Section 4 6(c)(1)(B)

(C) In the event the deceased Participant is survived neither by an Eligible Spouse nor by one (1) or more Children under age twenty-one (21) at the time of the Participant's death, no death benefits shall be payable under this Section 4 6(c)

The benefits under this Section 4 6(c)(2) shall be subject to the provisions of Section 4 7(a)

(d) Suicide Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 4 6(b) and Section 4 6(c), in the event a Participant dies as a result of suicide within twenty-five (25) calendar months of the calendar month as of which such Participant was designated as a Participant under Section 3 2, no death benefits shall be payable pursuant to Section 4 6(c) of the Plan

(e) Article VI Controlling The provisions of this Section 4 6 shall be subject to the provisions of Article VI

Section 4 7 Adjustment in Benefits

(a) Reduction in Benefits Based on Spouse's Age In the event (i) a married Participant's spouse is more than ten (10) years younger than such Participant at the time such Participant becomes entitled to commence receiving such Participant's Normal Retirement Benefit provided for in Section 4 2, Early Retirement Benefit provided for in Section 4 3 or Delayed Retirement Benefit provided for in Section 4 4, as applicable, or (ii) an Eligible Spouse entitled to receive a Family Death Benefit provided for in Section 4 6(c) is more than ten (10) years younger than the deceased Participant at the time of such deceased Participant's death, the benefit which such Participant is otherwise entitled to receive (and the survivor annuity of such Participant's spouse), or the benefit to which such Eligible Spouse is entitled, as applicable, shall be reduced to an amount determined by multiplying such benefit by the percentage amount determined from the table attached hereto as Exhibit A based on the age difference between such Participant and such Participant's spouse

(b) Recalculation of Benefits A Participant's Assumed Retirement Benefit, Retirement Plan Death Benefit and Long Term Disability Plan Benefit can vary from time to time under the terms of the Retirement Plan, ERISA Supplemental Plan and Long Term Disability Plan or because of possible future amendments to such Plans at the election of the Participating Employers or as may be required by applicable law As of each date on which any benefit payable to a Participant (or his spouse or Beneficiary) under the Retirement Plan, ERISA Supplemental Plan or Long Term Disability Plan changes for any reason, there shall be a recalculation of the benefits, if any, payable under this Plan (based on the assumptions contained herein) to such Participant (or his spouse or Beneficiary) using the benefits then payable under the Retirement Plan, ERISA Supplemental Plan and Long Term Disability Plan as a result of such changes Such increased or decreased benefits payable under this Plan shall become effective at the same time as the change in benefits under the Retirement Plan, the ERISA Supplemental Plan and the Long Term Disability Plan Notwithstanding the provisions of this Section 4 7(b), once a Participant's Social Security Benefit is determined for purposes of determining benefits payable under this Plan, such benefits shall not be subject to recalculation after benefits commence under the terms of this Plan due to increases or decreases in benefits payable from time to time under the Federal Social Security Act

Section 4 8 Special Benefit The Participating Employers sponsor the Deferred Compensation Plan for the benefit of their key employees In the event an Employee of the Participating Employers who has been designated as eligible to participate in the Deferred Compensation Plan elects to participate in the Deferred Compensation Plan by deferring Compensation pursuant to the terms of the Deferred Compensation Plan, any Compensation which is deferred pursuant to the Deferred Compensation Plan is ineligible to be taken into consideration as "compensation" under the terms of the Thrift Plan for purposes of determining the maximum amount of a Participant's salary reduction contributions under the terms of the Thrift Plan Under the terms of the Thrift Plan, salary reduction contributions up to six percent (6%) of "compensation" as defined in the Thrift Plan are eligible for a fifty percent (50%) "matching contribution" by the Participating Employers, that is, a "matching contribution" of three percent (3%) of such Participant's "compensation " To the extent (i) a Participant in this Plan also participates in the Deferred Compensation Plan and the Thrift Plan and (ii) such Participant is contributing at least six percent (6%) of "compensation" as a salary reduction contribution to the Thrift Plan, then any "matching contribution" by the Participating Employers which such Participant would have received under the terms of the Thrift Plan (after applying the terms of the Thrift Plan related to limitations on salary reduction and matching contributions under Sections 402(g) and 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) had such Participant contributed six percent (6%) of the "Compensation" deferred pursuant to the Deferred Compensation Plan to the Thrift Plan shall be credited to a reserve account on the books and records of the Participating Employers as of the last day of the calendar year in which such "matching contribution" would have been made by the Participating Employers under the Thrift Plan The amount credited to such account each year shall bear interest from the first day of such calendar year at the rate of thirteen percent (13%) compounded annually Upon a Participant's separation from Service for any reason or upon a Participant becoming Disabled, the amount of such reserve account (including any addition for the year in which separation from Service or Disability occurs) shall be paid to such Participant (or in the event of such Participant's death, to such Participant's Beneficiary) in such manner as the Plan Committee shall determine in its sole and exclusive discretion over a period of five (5) years following such Participant's separation from Service or such Participant becoming Disabled Interest shall accrue with respect to the unpaid balance of such reserve account during such payment period

through the last day of the month preceding the month in which the unpaid balance is paid in full In addition to the foregoing, a Participant who separates from Service after attaining age sixty (60) and completing three hundred (300) months of Creditable Service shall receive a supplemental monthly benefit equal to such Participant's monthly Social Security Benefit until such Participant attains age sixty-two (62)

Section 4 9 Beneficiary or Beneficiaries

(a) Designation or Change of Beneficiary by a Participant Each Participant may from time to time designate the person(s) or entity (ies) to whom the death benefits provided for in Section 4 6(c)(1)(B). Section 4 6(c)(2)(B) and Section 4 8 are to be paid A Participant may from time to time change such Participant's said designation of Beneficiary and upon any such change, any previously designated Beneficiary's right to receive any benefits under the Plan shall terminate In order to be effective, any designation or change of designation of a Beneficiary must be made on a form furnished by the Plan Committee and signed by the Participant and received by the Plan Committee while the Participant is alive If a Beneficiary of a deceased Participant shall survive the deceased Participant but die prior to the receipt of all benefits payable to said Beneficiary under the Plan, then such benefits as would have been payable to said deceased Beneficiary shall be paid to such Beneficiary's estate at the same time and in the same manner as such benefits would have been payable to said deceased Beneficiary

(b) Beneficiary Designated by the Plan In the event that a Participant shall die without having designated a Beneficiary, or in the event that a Participant shall die having revoked an earlier Beneficiary Designation without having effectively designated another Beneficiary, or in the event that a Participant shall die but the Beneficiary designated by such Participant shall fail to survive such Participant, then and in any such event, the person(s) who shall constitute the Beneficiary of such deceased Participant shall be determined as follows

(i) In the event said deceased Participant is survived by a Child, Children or by issue of a deceased Child or Children, such surviving Children and surviving issue of such deceased Children shall share as Beneficiaries on a per stirpes basis, the issue of a deceased Child of the deceased Participant to take per stirpes the same share their parent would have taken if living

(ii) In the event said deceased Participant is not survived by any person described in subparagraph (i) then said deceased Participant's estate shall be such deceased Participant's Beneficiary

Section 4 10 Benefits Payable After Change of Control and Special Single Sum Benefit In the event of a Change of Control,

(i) benefit accruals (except as provided below) and payments under the Plan, respectively, shall cease for each Participant or, if a Participant is deceased, such deceased Participant's Beneficiary, spouse or Eligible Spouse, as the case may be, who is then receiving, or is entitled to receive, benefits under the Plan at such date,

(ii) the Commuted Payment Amount on the date of such Change of Control shall be determined in accordance with the provisions set forth in Exhibit B hereto with respect to each such party,

(iii) such Commuted Payment Amount (plus interest on such amount at that GATT Rate (as defined in Exhibit B hereto) compounded annually from the date of the Change of Control to the date of payment) shall be paid in a single sum cash payment to such party within the sixty (60) day period immediately following either (A) the date the Participant separates from Service in the event the Participant has not separated from Service at the date of such Change of Control or (B) the date of such Change of Control in the event the Participant has separated from Service at the date of such Change of Control, and

(iv) the Plan shall terminate as of the date all such payments have been made

Further, whether or not a Change of Control has occurred, upon or after Participant's separation from Service, the Compensation Committee, in its sole and exclusive discretion, may pay in a single sum cash payment to that Participant (or if the Participant is deceased, such deceased Participant's Beneficiary, spouse or Eligible Spouse, as the case may be, who is then receiving, or is entitled to receive, benefits under the Plan) on a determination date specified by the Compensation Committee the Commuted Payment Amount that such party would have been entitled to receive had a Change of Control occurred on such determination date, in which event such party's participation in the Plan shall terminate as of such date

Section 4 11 Certain Reduction of Payments

(a) It is the intention of the Participating Employers and the Participants to reduce the amounts payable or distributable to a Participant hereunder if the aggregate Net After Tax

Receipts (as defined below) to the Participant would thereby be increased, as a result of the application of the excise tax provisions of Section 4999 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and valid Treasury regulations thereunder (the "Code") Accordingly, anything in this Plan to the contrary notwithstanding, in the event that the certified public accountants regularly employed by Bank of America Corporation immediately prior to any "change" described below (the "Accounting Firm") shall determine that receipt of all Payments (as defined below) would subject the Participant to tax under Section 4999 of the Code, it shall determine whether some amount of Payments would meet the definition of a "Reduced Amount" (as defined below) If the Accounting Firm determines that there is a Reduced Amount, the aggregate Payments shall be reduced to such Reduced Amount in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph (c) below

(b) For purposes of this Section 4 11 (i) a "Payment" shall mean any payment or distribution in the nature of compensation to or for the benefit of a Participant who is a "disqualified individual" within the meaning of Section 280G(c) of the Code and which is contingent on a "change" described in Section 280G(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Code with respect to the Corporation, whether paid or payable pursuant to this Plan or otherwise, (ii) "Plan Payment" shall mean a Payment paid or payable pursuant to this Plan (disregarding this Section 4.11), (iii) "Net After Tax Receipt" shall mean the Present Value of a Payment net of all taxes imposed on the Participant with respect thereto under Sections 1 and 4999 of the Code, determined by applying the highest marginal rate under Section 1 of the Code which applied to the Participant's federal taxable income for the immediately preceding taxable year, (iv) "Present Value" shall mean such value determined in accordance with Section 280G(d)(4) of the Code, and (v) "Reduced Amount" shall mean the smallest aggregate amount of Payments which (a) is less than the sum of all Payments and (b) results in aggregate Net After Tax Receipts which are equal to or greater than the Net After Tax Receipts which would result if all Payments were paid to or for the benefit of the Participant

(c) If the Accounting Firm determines that aggregate Payments should be reduced to the Reduced Amount, the Compensation Committee shall promptly give the Participant notice to that effect and a copy of the detailed calculation thereof, and the Participant may then elect, in the Participant's sole discretion, which and how much of the Payments, including without limitation Plan Payments, shall be eliminated or reduced (as long as after such election the present value of the aggregate Payments is equal to the Reduced Amount), and shall advise the

Compensation Committee in writing of such election within ten (10) days of the Participant's receipt of notice If no such election is made by the Participant within such ten (10) day period, the Compensation Committee may elect which of the Payments, including without limitation Plan Payments, shall be eliminated or reduced (as long as after such election the Present Value of the aggregate Payments is equal to the Reduced Amount) and shall notify the Participant promptly of such election All determinations made by the Accounting Firm under this Section 4 11 shall be binding upon the Participating Employers and the Participant and shall be made within sixty (60) days immediately following that event constituting the "change" referred to above As promptly as practicable following such determination, the Participating Employers shall pay to or distribute for the benefit of the Participant such Payments as are then due to the Participant under this Plan

(d) At the time of the initial determination by the Accounting Firm hereunder, it is possible that amounts will have been paid or distributed by the Participating Employers to or for the benefit of the Participant pursuant to this Plan which should not have been so paid or distributed ("Overpayment") or that additional amounts which will have not been paid or distributed by the Participating Employers to or for the benefit of the Participant pursuant to this Plan could have been so paid or distributed ("Underpayment"), in each case, consistent with the calculation of the Reduced Amount hereunder In the event that the Accounting Firm, based either upon the assertion of a deficiency by the Internal Revenue Service against a Participating Employer or the Participant which the Accounting Firm believes has a high probability of success or controlling precedent or other substantial authority, determines that an Overpayment has been made, any such Overpayment paid or distributed by the Participating Employers to or for the benefit of the Participant shall be treated for all purposes as a loan ab initio to the Participant which the Participant shall repay to the Participating Employer together with interest at the applicable federal rate provided for in Section 7872(f)(2) of the Code, provided, however, that no such loan shall be deemed to have been made and no amount shall be payable by the Participant to the Participating Employer if and to the extent such deemed loan and payment would not either reduce the amount on which the Participant is subject to tax under Section 1 and Section 4999 of the Code or generate a refund of such taxes In the event that the Accounting Firm, based upon controlling precedent or other substantial authority, determines that an Underpayment has occurred, any such Underpayment shall be promptly paid by the Participating

Employer to or for the benefit of the Participant together with interest at the applicable federal rate provided for in Section 7872(f)(2) of the Code

Section 4 12 Special Election of Single Lump Sum or Installment Payments

(a) Alternative Methods of Payment Notwithstanding any provisions of the Plan to the contrary, a Participant may elect from time to time pursuant to this Section 4 12 to have the single sum value (the "Lump Sum Benefit Amount") of the benefits payable under Section 4 2, 4 3 or 4 4 upon the Participant's Retirement or the benefits payable under Section 4 6 upon the Participant's death while in Service [or, to the extent provided in Section 4 6(b), while Disabled] paid in accordance with one of the following methods of payment, in lieu of the method otherwise applicable under the provisions of this Article IV

(i) single lump sum payment,

(ii) five (5) annual installments, or

(iii) ten (10) annual installments

Unless deferred pursuant to the provisions of Section 4 12(c), the payment(s) to be made to a Participant pursuant to the Participant's alternative method of payment election under this Section shall commence immediately upon the Participant's Retirement or death while in Service

(b) Determination of Lump Sum Benefit Amount and Amount of Installment Payments The Lump Sum Benefit Amount shall be equal to (i) in the event of a Participant's Retirement, the Commuted Payment Amount determined for the Participant as of the date of the Participant's Retirement or (ii) in the event of a Participant's death while in Service [or, to the extent provided in Section 4 6(b), while Disabled], the actuarially equivalent single sum value of the benefits (if any) provided for in Section 4 6(c) determined as of the date of the Participant's death using assumptions consistent with those set forth in Exhibit B to the Plan The amount of each annual installment payment payable under Section 4 12(a) shall be the amount necessary to amortize the Participant's Lump Sum Benefit Amount in equal annual installments over the selected period using the GATT Rate (as defined in Exhibit B hereto) in effect for the calendar year of the Participant's Retirement or death

(c) Deferral of Lump Sum Payment Date

(i) Elective Deferral Any Participant who elects payment of the Participant's benefit in a single lump sum may also elect to defer receipt of such payment until March 31 of the year following the Participant's Retirement or death (as the case may be)

(ii) Deferral Period Interest The amount of any single lump sum payment that is deferred under this Section 4 12(c) shall be the Participant's Lump Sum Benefit Amount determined under Section 4 12(b) plus interest at the GATT Rate (as defined in Exhibit B hereto) in effect for the calendar year of the Participant's Retirement or death compounded annually to the date of payment

(d) Timing of Elections and Effective Date An alternative method of payment election under Section 4 12(a) and any deferral election under Section 4 12(c)(i) may be made at any time and from time to time after the date the Participant attains age fifty-four (54) Any such election shall be made on such form and pursuant to such procedures as are adopted by the Plan Committee for such purpose and shall become effective upon the first anniversary of the date such election is made Any change in such an election shall not become effective until the first anniversary of the date the new election is made

Section 4 13 Coordination with Texas SERP In the event a Participant is to receive a benefit under this Plan and a benefit under the NationsBank of Texas, N A Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan (the "Texas SERP"), the Participant's benefits under this Plan shall be reduced dollar for dollar by the benefits payable under the Texas SERP For purposes of determining this dollar for dollar reduction, the Texas SERP benefit shall be converted to the normal form of payment under this Plan

Section 4 14 Employees of AMRESCO

(a) General Pursuant to a Stock Sale Agreement between NationsBank Corporation ("NationsBank") and AMRESCO Acquisition Corporation ("AAC") dated November 20, 1992, as the same may be amended (the "Stock Sale Agreement"), NationsBank has agreed to sell to AAC all of the stock of Asset Management Resolution Company ("AMRC") and AMRESCO Holdings, Inc ("AHI") (AMRC, AHI and the subsidiary corporations of AMRC and AHI set forth in the Stock Sale Agreement being collectively referred to herein as "AMRESCO")

(b) Payment of Benefits The accrued benefit under the Plan of an employee of AMRESCO who is employed by AMRESCO on the "closing date" as defined in the Stock Sale Agreement (the "Closing Date") and who has become a Participant in the Plan as of the Closing

Date (an "Affected Participant") shall not be forfeited from and after the Closing Date, and no further benefits shall accrue under the Plan with respect to any Affected Participant on account of such Affected Participant's service with, or compensation from, AMRESCO from and after the Closing Date An Affected Participant's accrued benefit under the Plan shall be payable to such Affected Participant in a single cash payment by NationsBank to such Affected Participant as of the Closing Date The amount of such single cash payment shall be the Commuted Payment Amount for such Affected Participant determined as of the Closing Date, adjusted in accordance with the terms of the Stock Sale Agreement

(c) Provisions Controlling Notwithstanding any provisions of the Plan to the contrary, the provisions of this Section 4 14 shall control with respect to the Affected Participants

ARTICLE V
PLAN COMMITTEE

Section 5 1 Appointment, Term of Office and Vacancy The Plan Committee shall consist of one or more individuals appointed by the Management Compensation Committee who shall serve at the pleasure of the Management Compensation Committee The Management Compensation Committee shall have the absolute right to remove any member of the Plan Committee at any time, with or without cause, and any member of the Plan Committee shall have the right to resign at any time If a vacancy in the Plan Committee should occur, from death, resignation, removal or otherwise, a successor shall be appointed by the Management Compensation Committee

Section 5 2 Organization of Plan Committee The Management Compensation Committee shall designate one of the members of the Plan Committee to serve as its Chairman, one member as its Vice-Chairman and one member as its Secretary One person may hold more than one office The Plan Committee may appoint such agents, who need not be members of the Plan Committee, as it may deem necessary for the effective performance of its duties, and may delegate to such agent such powers and duties, whether ministerial or discretionary, as the Plan Committee may deem expedient or appropriate The Plan Committee shall act by majority vote and may adopt such bylaws, rules and regulations as it deems desirable for the conduct of its affairs The members of the Plan Committee shall serve as such without compensation

Section 5 3 Powers of the Plan Committee The Plan Committee shall administer the Plan The Plan Committee shall have all the powers to enable it to carry out its duties under the Plan properly Not in limitation of the foregoing, the Plan Committee shall have the power to construe and interpret the Plan and determine all questions that shall arise thereunder It shall decide all questions relating to eligibility to receive benefits under the Plan The Plan Committee shall have such other and further specified duties, powers, authority and discretion as are elsewhere in the Plan either expressly or by necessary implication conferred upon it The decision of the Plan Committee upon all matters within the scope of its authority shall be final and conclusive on all persons, except to the extent otherwise provided by law

Section 5 4 Expenses of Plan Committee The reasonable expenses of the Plan Committee incurred by the Plan Committee in the performance of its duties under the Plan, including without limitation, reasonable counsel fees and expenses of other agents, shall be paid by the Participating Employers

ARTICLE VI
AMENDMENT AND TERMINATION

Section 6 1 Amendment of Plan Subject to the provisions of Section 6 4 of the Plan, the Participating Employers expressly reserve the right, at any time and from time to time, to amend in whole or in part any of the terms and provisions of the Plan for whatever reason(s) the Participating Employers may deem appropriate Prior to a Change of Control, the Plan, including Sections 4 10 and 4 11 hereof, may be amended in the manner specified above Notwithstanding any other provision of the Plan to the contrary, however, from and after a Change of Control, the Participating Employers may not modify or amend the terms and provisions of the Plan, in whole or in part

Section 6 2 Termination of Plan Subject to the provisions of Section 6 4 of the Plan, the Participating Employers expressly reserve the right, at any time and for whatever reason they may deem appropriate, to terminate the Plan

Section 6 3 Effective Date and Procedure for Amendment or Termination Subject to the provisions of Section 6 4 of the Plan, any amendment to the Plan or termination of the Plan may be retroactive to the extent not prohibited by applicable law Any amendment to the Plan or termination of the Plan shall be made by the Participating Employers by resolution of the

Compensation Committee and shall not require the approval or consent of any Participant or Beneficiary in order to be effective

Section 6 4 Effect of Amendment or Termination on Certain Benefits No amendment or termination of the Plan may reduce or eliminate the benefits (if any) payable under the Plan (without regard to such amendment or termination) to

(a) any Participant who commenced receiving benefits under the Plan prior to the amendment or termination date and is alive on the amendment or termination date and the spouse or Beneficiary of such Participant, or

(b) any spouse or Beneficiary who commenced receiving benefits under the Plan prior to the amendment and termination date

In addition, with respect to all other Participants in the Plan on such amendment or termination who have not commenced receiving benefits under the Plan prior to the amendment or termination date, any such amendment or termination shall not result in such Participant receiving benefits under the Plan upon such Participant's separation from Service which are less than the benefits such Participant would have received under the Plan but for such amendment or termination multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which is such Participant's Creditable Service at the time of such amendment or termination and the denominator of which is the Creditable Service such Participant would have accumulated as a Participant if such Participant had continued as a Participant until such Participant had attained age sixty-two (62) Except as hereinabove expressly provided to the contrary in this Section 6 4, the Plan may be amended or terminated so that no benefits or (if such amendment or termination so provides) reduced benefits shall be payable to any Participant, spouse or Beneficiary after the effective date of such amendment or termination

MISCELLANEOUS

Section 7 1 Adoption by a Subsidiary Corporation A Subsidiary Corporation may, with the approval of the Compensation Committee and the Board of Directors of such Subsidiary Corporation, elect to adopt the Plan as of the date mutually agreeable to the Compensation Committee and the Board of Directors of such Subsidiary Corporation Any such adoption of the Plan by a Subsidiary Corporation shall be evidenced by an appropriate instrument of adoption executed by such Subsidiary Corporation

Section 7 2 Authorization and Delegation to the Compensation Committee Each Subsidiary Corporation which is or hereafter becomes a Participating Employer authorizes and empowers the Compensation Committee (i) to amend or terminate the Plan without further action by said Subsidiary Corporation as provided in Article VI and (ii) to perform such other acts and do such other things as the Compensation Committee is expressly directed, authorized or permitted to perform or do as provided herein

Section 7 3 Spendthrift Clause To the extent permitted by law, no benefits payable under the Plan shall be subject to the claim of any creditor of any Participant or to any legal process by any creditor of any Participant and no Participant entitled to benefits hereunder shall have any right whatsoever to alienate, commute, anticipate or assign any benefits under the Plan

Section 7 4 Benefits Payable From General Assets of the Participating Employers All benefits payable hereunder shall be paid from the general assets of the Participating Employers No assets of the Participating Employers shall be segregated or placed in trust pursuant to the Plan in a manner which would put such asset beyond the reach of the general creditors of any of the Participating Employers, and the rights of any Participant (or Beneficiary) to receive any benefits hereunder shall be no greater than the right of any general, unsecured creditor of the Participating Employers Nothing contained in the Plan shall create or be construed as creating a trust of any kind or any other fiduciary relationship between the Participating Employers and a Participant In the event the Participating Employers purchase any insurance policies insuring the life of any Participant hereunder, no Participant shall have any rights whatsoever therein and the Participating Employers shall be the sole owner and beneficiary thereof and shall possess and exercise all incidents of ownership therein

Section 7 5 Allocation of Costs of Benefits Among the Participating Employers The cost of benefits to be provided a Participant (or spouse or Beneficiary, if applicable) pursuant to this Plan shall be paid by the Participating Employer which employs the Participant In the case of a Participant employed by more than one Participating Employer the cost of benefits provided pursuant to the Plan shall be allocated among the Participating Employers in proportion to the Compensation payable by each such Participating Employer during the period such Participant participates in the Plan

Section 7 6 Benefits Limited to the Plan Participation in the Plan shall not give a Participant any right to be retained in the employ of any one or more of the Participating Employers nor, upon dismissal, any right or interest in the Plan except as expressly provided herein

CLAIMS PROCEDURE

Section 8 1 Claims Procedure

(a) General In the event that a Claimant has a Claim under the Plan, such Claim shall be made by the Claimant's filing a notice thereof with the Plan Committee within ninety (90) days after such Claimant first has knowledge of such Claim Each Claimant who has submitted a Claim to the Plan Committee shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to state such Claimant's position and to present evidence and other material relevant to the Claim to the Plan Committee for its consideration in rendering its decision with respect thereto The Plan Committee shall render its decision in writing within sixty (60) days after the Claim is referred to it, and a copy of such written decision shall be furnished to the Claimant

(b) Notice of Decision of Committee Each Claimant whose Claim has been denied by the Plan Committee shall be provided written notice thereof, which notice shall set forth

(i) the specific reason(s) for the denial,

(ii) specific reference to pertinent provision(s) of the Plan upon which such denial is based,

(iii) a description of any additional material or information necessary for the Claimant to perfect such Claim and an explanation of why such material or information is necessary, and

(iv) an explanation of the procedure hereunder for review of such Claim, all in a manner calculated to be understood by such Claimant

(c) Review of Decision of Plan Committee Each such Claimant shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity for a full and fair review of the decision of the Plan Committee denying the Claim Such review shall be by the Compensation Committee Such appeal shall be made amount of the Frozen Plan Benefit shall be actuarially reduced to reflect the early commencement of such benefits

Adjustments for Late Commencement If an Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit is to commence after the Affected Participant's Normal Retirement Date, then the amount of the Frozen Plan Benefit shall be actuarially increased to reflect the delayed commencement of such benefits

(c) Optional Forms of Payment An Affected Participant may elect in accordance with the provisions of this subparagraph (c) one of the following optional forms of payment for the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit

(i) a single lump sum payment,

(ii) five (5) annual installments, or

(iii) ten (10) annual installments

The amount of a single lump sum payment shall be determined as follows depending on whether separation from Service occurs before or after the Affected Participant's Normal Retirement Date

Separation Before Normal Retirement Date If the Affected Participant separates from Service before the Affected Participant's Normal Retirement Date, the amount of the lump sum payment shall be equal to the actuarially equivalent present value of the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit determined as of the date of separation from Service assuming the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit is payable in the form of a deferred annuity commencing at the Participant's Normal Retirement Date

Separation On or After Normal Retirement Date If the Affected Participant separates from Service on or after the Affected Participant's Normal Retirement Date, the amount of the lump sum payment shall be equal to the actuarially equivalent present value of the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit determined as of the date of separation from Service assuming the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit is payable in the form of an immediate annuity

The amount of installment payments shall be based on the lump sum amount of the Frozen Plan Benefit as set forth above amortized as equal annual payments over the applicable payment period using for such purpose the interest rate specified in Section 6 of this Exhibit

The single cash payment or initial installment payment, as applicable, shall be made as soon as administratively practicable after the Affected Participant's date of separation from Service, and each subsequent installment payment (if applicable) shall be made on or around the anniversary of the first payment date

An election for an optional form of payment under this subparagraph shall become effective on the date that is twelve (12) months (or such lesser period as the Corporation's Personnel Group may determine in its discretion consistent with the Corporation's intent that benefits be subject to taxation as and when actually received by the Affected Participant) after the date that the election is made if the Affected Participant remains in Service throughout that period Any such election shall be made on such form, at such time and pursuant to such procedures as determined by the Personnel Group in its sole discretion from time to time An Affected Participant may not have more than two (2) payment elections pending under this subparagraph at any one time If no such election is effective as of the date of the Affected Participant's separation from Service, payment shall be in the normal form of annuity described above

5 Death Benefits

(a) Death After Commencement of Benefits If an Affected Participant dies after having commenced payment of the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit, then payment of any benefits after such death shall be determined in accordance with the method of payment in effect In that regard, if the Affected Participant was receiving installment payments under Section 4(c) of this Exhibit immediately prior to death, the remaining unpaid installments shall continue to be paid to the Affected Participant's Beneficiary, unless the Corporation determines to pay the actuarially equivalent present value of the remaining unpaid installments in a single lump sum payment

(b) Death Before Commencement of Benefits If an Affected Participant dies before having commenced payment of the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit, then the actuarially equivalent present value of the Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit determined as of the date of death shall be payable to the Affected Participant's Beneficiary in a single lump sum payment as soon as administratively practicable after death However, the Affected Participant may elect in accordance with such procedures as the Personnel Group may establish from time to time to have such death benefits payable to the Affected Participant's Beneficiary in five (5) or ten (10) annual installments (with the amount of each installment determined in accordance with the provisions of Section 4 above) or in an actuarially equivalent single life annuity on the life of the Beneficiary

6 Actuarial Equivalency For purposes of this Exhibit, all determinations of actuarial equivalency shall based on the following mortality and interest assumptions

Mortality 1983 GAM Unisex Mortality Table
Interest 5 48% per annum, compounded annually

For purposes of determining (i) the actuarial adjustment for early or late commencement of an Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit as set forth in Section 4(b) of this Exhibit and (ii) the actuarially equivalent present value of an Affected Participant's Frozen Plan Benefit under Section 4(c) or Section 5 of this Exhibit, if the Affected Participant has not attained age fifty (50) as of December 31, 2002, the Affected Participant shall be deemed to have attained age fifty (50) as of the Affected Participant's birthday occurring during 2002
